As the Erdman law was originally passed it provided that the Commissioner of Labor and, as amended, the chief judge of the Commerce Court should be on this board of mediation and conciliation. The House bill, as brought in by the House committee, proposed to amend it by taking the members or certain of the members of the board of mediation and conciliation from the Department of Labor. The railroads and these brotherhoods object to that. They want an independent party or body, I might say, or an independent set of officials to constitute this board of mediation and conciliation. To use the happy language of one of the chiefs of these brotherhoods, which he employed yesterday, they want these men who are on the board of mediation and conciliation to be directly responsible to the President and not subject to the orders of a Cabinet officer. So that provision of the bill was agreed upon.

These are the two main or essential features whereby the Erdman law was changed. The railroad employees will not arbitrate their disputes under the law unless there is legal sanction for it. They have said so, they said so specifically yesterday and again and again they have said so orally and through the public press.

They want the power on the part of the arbitrators to subpœna witnesses. That is one reason they want this law. Then they want the oath administered to witnesses and want the law to provide the terms and stipulations of the arbitration agreement and to fix the agreement so that when the board of mediation suggests arbitration they will have some fundamental idea of what the proposition carries, because the proposition will be suggested by the board of mediation and conciliation that they arbitrate under this bill. Then they will know the general law and agreement under which they will work, and the details of it they can adapt according to the provisions of the law as it points out.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have explained the matter. Nothing else occurs to me at this time. Perhaps I have not been happy in my explanation, and therefore I would be very glad to answer any questions that may be asked, and I yield first to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation at the present time, it is that a number of railroads and their employees have serious trouble, not on account of not having an act under which to arbitrate their differences, but on account of the failure of those roads to pay what those men believe they are justly entitled to in the way of wages. That is the fundamental difference between the contesting parties, as I understand it, and they have had an agreement among themselves and the authorities of this Government whereby this bill is to be passed to-day, in an hour.

Now, what I want to know is this: After this bill is passed and becomes a law, how do we know that there will not be a strike on the part of these people, or how do we know that these railroads will make any concessions whatever other than they have already made, and how is the general public protected against the calamity pointed out by the gentleman in his remarks, under this bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I may say, in answer to what the gentleman has said, that we are taking these men at their word. We have some faith in this poor, weak humanity of ours. We believe that humanity's side and the intelligent side of a railroad president can be reached. We believe that this bill appeals not only to that humanity and to that intelligence, but appeals to a good business sense generally. And we believe further that the railroad employees ought to have somewhere, in some place, somebody to whom they can take their grievances which concern their conditions of employment, which concern their wages, and we have gone beyond that period when anybody should deny a fair hearing to a laboring man in any grievance that he may have.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not take up further of my time. I have only about eight minutes left.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I understand; but the gentleman has not answered my question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] refuses to yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I am not opposed to the gentleman's bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. If the gentleman will ask a question and not make a speech, I will try to answer the question.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will ask you this direct question——

Mr. CLAYTON. Put it to me.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. What binding force is there in this bill upon any party?

Mr. CLAYTON. There is none, and can not be, and God forbid, Mr. Speaker, that Congress should ever enact compulsory arbitration laws. It would be in the teeth of the Constitution; it would be in the teeth of the inherited rights of every free American to have any sort of a law whereby any man could be compelled to render labor against the sovereign will which he carries under his own hat. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That is just the information I wanted, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLAYTON. But honor and business sense——

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will say to the gentleman, being opposed to compulsory arbitration, and not having read the bill, and having found no Member on this side who has read it, I wanted that exact information.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, if the gentleman is satisfied, I will omit the rest of a most excellent peroration. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves six minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. I can not yield, Mr. Speaker. I have promised the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] 10 minutes, and I have only 6. Therefore will the gentleman excuse me under the circumstances?

Mr. QUIN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be notified when I have occupied seven minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I have been very greatly interested in this bill since it was called to our attention. Beginning nearly a month ago, we began to have hearings on this measure. Our first meeting was a joint meeting with the Commerce Committee of the Senate. Representatives of the railways and representatives of organizations of the railway employees have come before the Judiciary Committee and advocated this measure. I take it that there is not a single Member of this House who will not gladly and willingly vote for any measure that will in any way contribute to the industrial peace of this country. The Erdman Act was approved on the 1st day of June, 1898. The evidence before the committee showed that up until 1906 the act was dormant; that there were no arbitrations under the act from 1898 up to 1906, but that since that time the Erdman Act has been frequently used and has been of great benefit in preventing strikes. The evidence shows that 60 strikes have been prevented under this act. In other words, in 60 different controversies, when strikes were imminent on the part of the railway employees, through mediation and conciliation and arbitration the matter was amicably settled. It appears that most of these difficulties have been settled not by arbitration, but by mediation and conciliation. I think that out of these 60 strikes arbitrators were appointed only in about one case out of seven or eight. In other words, the great power of the Erdman Act has been in the wisdom and the skill exercised by the mediators and conciliators. As I understand it, both employees and the railways do not regard the arbitration part of it so important as the mediation and conciliation part of it.

There are three important changes in this bill as compared with the Erdman Act. In the first place, there is a change of the personnel. Under the Erdman Act at the present time the chief justice of the Commerce Court and the Commissioner of Labor Statistics constitute the mediators and conciliators. Under this act a new office, entirely independent of any department or of any Cabinet officer, is created. The President is authorized to appoint a commissioner of mediation and conciliation. The President appoints not more than two men, who shall be Government officers, appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and these three, the commissioner of mediation and conciliation and the other two persons, will constitute the United States board of mediation and conciliation.

Now, the second change is that this act provides for six arbitrators, in case arbitration is used, instead of three as under the Erdman Act. As has been pointed out by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], the bill——

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. If I caught him aright, he said that this bill provides for an arbitration board of six instead of three. This bill provides that the arbitration board may consist of three or may consist of six, as the parties may agree.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I understand. In other words, under the present law the arbitration board can not exceed three, while under this law it may consist of six members.

Then there is a third change, which provides that whenever there is a controversy arising as to what the finding or award is the board of arbitration may be called upon to construe any part thereof the meaning of which may be in dispute.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Oklahoma will be recognized for one minute more.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The importance of this legislation can not be overestimated. To provide industrial peace is the duty of Congress, so far as it is in its power. There are always three parties interested in these great controversies. First I would place in the rank of importance the interests of the men who are employed by the railways and the wage earners generally throughout the United States; second, the interests of the public; and third, the interests of the owners of the railways and the owners of our industrial institutions.

After all, back of all of these controversies comes the question of the proper distribution of the wealth that is earned and created by virtue of the labor of this country. That is the great question back of this matter. There must necessarily in all times be more or less controversy, more or less of contention, more or less of strife between the men who earn the wealth and the men who control the machinery and the resources out of which that wealth is created.

We should enact all laws necessary to give the wage earners every facility to secure justice without resorting to strikes. We should enact statutes that will enable employees to secure redress of all grievances—if they may desire—without being compelled to resort to a strike. This is an emergency measure to prevent an impending strike involving 80,000 men and 54 railways. But it is more than an emergency. It is valuable legislation for the future. And I hope from time to time we may enact laws that will preserve industrial peace, protect the rights of wage earners, and protect the just rights of property.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. MURDOCK rose.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, I desire to ask unanimous consent that leave be given for five days to any gentleman to print his remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks unanimous consent that any gentleman shall have leave to print his remarks on this subject within five legislative days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I think that nearly all men will commend the dispatch and the determination in the conduct of this measure which has characterized President Wilson's course. I favor this attempt to extend the arbitration measure because I believe that it will bring peace in this particular industrial line, at least temporary peace.

But the situation, as I see it, and of which this is indicative, presents a distressing problem that no such compromise will permanently cure. Take this present situation, for example, and consider the case in hand. The railway trainmen were about to strike for higher wages. They are actually face to face with the problem of living. That is the fact of the business. All of us here know from personal observation the trainmen of this country. We all know that they are men of education and of high skill, as a rule, and of discriminating mind by reason of their occupation and training. They are not moved and have not been moved by whim or caprice in this matter. They are not inspired by any latter-day class consciousness against capital. These men are not warring upon the railroad managements of this country. They are not quarreling with their bread and butter for the mere love of controversy. They are not fighting for the maintenance of some theory involving their rights, but they are face to face with the increasing hardship due to the high cost and the modern standards of living.

It is a problem not only with the railway trainmen, but it is a problem also with all the wage earners of the country, and it is increasing in acuteness every day. There has not been a day in the last 20 years, or an hour or a minute, when the control of those who fix the standards and cost of living, when the control of those who determine the cost of the shelter and clothing and food of the people—there has not been a day or an hour or a minute in the last 20 years when that control has not narrowed. And there has not been a day or an hour or a minute in the last 20 years when the consumers in this country, despite all the protestations of the politicians, despite all the laws that are passed, have not been losing ground. It is a serious problem with the trainmen and with all breadwinners in the country.

We are busy here in a very unusual way to-day to pass this meritorious measure, putting it through under what is virtually cloture, and with warrant. We do it because it is exigent and pressing.

But the great fundamentals which are sapping at the vitality of this Nation we do not touch. We are handling only one side of the railroad problem. What about the other side of the problem? What about the waste in speculative financiering? What about the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the railroad situation in New England made within the hour? It is a report which shows that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad has been guilty of wanton waste; that it paid in one instance, in the purchase of the Rhode Island trolleys, $13,000,000 for nothing; that it paid in another instance, in the Westchester road case, $12,000,000 more than the road's value.

Who will pay for the waste? Who will make good this sort of thing in railroad speculation? Why, the people make it good, and with them these railway trainmen who threatened to strike.

I say to the gentlemen that a Member of Congress, with his $7,500 a year, is apt to get rather far away from the real problems of life. These men who threaten to strike are regarded by many as well paid. The trainmen are superior in skill and in intellect. They do not regard their pay as adequate. And when the matter of their bread and butter came up before them—and this ought to challenge the thought of every man within the sound of my voice—the vote for the strike was almost unanimous.

I say to you as fellow legislators that I believe that the day of paltering and of postponement is passing in this country. I believe the day of compromise is almost gone. I believe that this body and the executive branch of this Government have got to get down to business and reach into the heart of this thing and correct the fundamental wrongs and find the real remedy, and when that is done there will be precious little use for this act. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves 5 minutes of his time. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] has 17 minutes. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] desire to use his 6 minutes?

Mr. CLAYTON. I will yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and reserve 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that four or five years ago I served on one of the arbitrations held under the Erdman Act, and one of the most important ones held under it, I think I have had some practical experience with the way that act has operated in the past, and I believe that there are at least three or four very important changes for the better in the bill now pending before the House.

In the first place the personnel of the board of mediation is improved. I do not mean that exactly in a personal sense, either. It is improved for two reasons—first, because the board of mediation is made independent of any and all bureaus and departments; and, second, because it consists of three members instead of two, as under the Erdman law. Sometimes when the two came to select the umpire, when they could not agree the two might be deadlocked, and that has been threatened at times; but when you have three, as under the proposed bill, that is an impossibility.

In the next place the provisions for conducting the arbitration itself are improved in the respect of how long after the third man is selected before the arbitration shall begin, and how long after the arbitration begins before it shall end. That is made more flexible, and is to be fixed according to the needs of each case, in the submission.

In the next place, there is more flexibility in this law than in the Erdman Act on the question as to how long the award shall be binding on the parties. Under the Erdman Act no matter what the controversy was the law provided that the award should continue in force for 12 months, no more and no less. In this bill it is proposed that the award shall continue in force just such time as the board deem proper and right, either a greater or a less time. It is more flexible in that regard, and therefore I think can be made to fit the necessities of each particular case better.

In the next place, in the twelfth subdivision of the Senate bill that we are about to pass, the board has the power to construe any provision of the award when that provision is the subject matter of controversy after the award is made. To my certain knowledge in the case in which I served there was a good deal of controversy over the construction of one of the provisions of the award, and there was no way in which either the laboring men or the railroad companies involved could have that provision construed, without litigation.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I think not. I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am sorry I have not the time. In the case to which I referred neither the employees nor the railroads could get a certain provision of the award construed, unless they went to law about it, because the law did not provide that any or all of the members of the board could give their testimony as to what was meant by it. In this respect the pending bill provides a great practical improvement, because the board itself is allowed to construe the award if its meaning should become the subject matter of subsequent controversy. From the experience I have had with the Erdman law I believe it has been a practical working measure all along. I believe that with the improvements contained in this legislation it will be an even better instrument for securing much-desired results.

And in this connection I want to say that the President of the United States and every gentleman who participated in that momentous conference yesterday are, in my opinion, entitled to receive as their just due the thanks of the American people for the great work that was done for the public in securing the approval of the opposing parties of the provisions of this bill and an agreement to arbitrate the pending differences under it, and thus avoiding the great losses, inconveniences, and hardships of the mighty strike that threatened to tie up so many of our great railroad systems. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, recognizing, as we all do, that this is an emergency matter, and one that must be acted upon without delay, I have reluctantly consented myself to the passage of this bill as it passed the Senate, with the two amendments offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] in behalf of the committee. While the Erdman Act has been a law for some 15 years, no successful effort has been made heretofore to bring it up to the present conditions and needs that have been pointed out from time to time by Judge Knapp and Dr. Neill, who have been the ones who have had to do, principally, with the settlement of these various disputes. It is said that some 60 or more controversies between the railroads and their employees have been adjusted since the law was enacted, and yet, Mr. Speaker, there are many other similar organizations that have had disputes where the men have gone out on strikes to the great detriment and loss of property and money, not only to the employers and the employees themselves, but to the third party, the public in general. I sincerely hope that this agitation that has come up at this time as to the necessity for amending or repealing the present Erdman Act and enacting this bill which is now before us will cause the House to see the necessity of making important changes in this law in the months of this Congress that are to come. There is one important class of people which naturally belongs in a matter of adjudication such as this proposes, and that is the people who are engaged in the transmission of messages by telegraph, telephone, or cable, either by wire or by wireless. Those employees and employers have been designated common carriers under the act to regulate commerce which was passed in June, 1910.

If they are common carriers, then it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, we should include them in the provisions of this law, and that all persons actually engaged in the transmission of messages by telegraph, telephone, or cable should come within the provisions of the law. This would do a great deal of good, because there are strikes from time to time by employees of telephone companies and cable companies and telegraph companies. There are such now. To-day in my own State there is a strike of employees of a telephone company, which not only does business in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, but which extends into other States, particularly the State of Illinois. The result is that business is tied up to a certain extent, and the public is suffering. Many people are out of employment, and it is only a question of getting the employee and the employer together that this controversy may be settled. It was my desire and intention to ask that this bill be amended to include these people, but I see the futility of it. I saw that it was most important that we should at this time pass this bill, because there are hundreds of thousands of people affected by the present bill under consideration, and it is like allowing a child to play with fire to do anything that will prevent the enactment of this bill into law at once.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. The gentleman from Oklahoma has 12 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama 2 minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentlemen will use their time now.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is an extreme exigency that causes the House under unanimous consent to consider a bill of this importance under what is virtually a rule that forbids any amendment whatsoever. However, we are all acquainted with the threatened strike conditions affecting certain branches of some of the railways of this country—those located to the east of the Mississippi—where a great conservative force of railway men are in dispute with the railway companies as to conditions of employment and particularly as to wages. This bill is the direct result of the failure of, or rather dissatisfaction on the part of the employees with the voluntary agreement of arbitration which attempted to settle the differences between the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and certain eastern railway companies, that arbitration board comprising one representative of the engineers, one representative of the railroad companies, and, I believe, three representatives from the public generally. While there was an agreement among the arbitrators, it did not meet with the full approval of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. In the year since then strikes with other branches of the employees of the railroads have been imminent, the railroads being averse to submitting the matters in dispute to a limited board of three under the Erdman Act with only one impartial arbitrator, and the employees being opposed to submitting the questions in dispute to a larger board that did not have the sanction of law.

I regret exceedingly that opportunity for amendment is not provided, because I would like to have seen the public represented on this board of arbitration. In this debate we have heard much emphasis laid upon the fact that the public is deeply interested in these strikes, and they are vitally, and yet no provision is made for a representative of the public on these boards of arbitration. Though we are making a great advance by the creation of a separate bureau of mediation and conciliation, the head of which is to receive a salary of $7,500 a year, yet in the settlement of these great affairs, in which the public are so vitally concerned, that representative, if mediation fails, has no power except to select one or two of the board of arbitrators in case the parties to the dispute can not agree upon the full board of three or six. It has been criticized that a board of six might not come to an agreement, but how much better had we provided for a board of seven and had created ex officio this chief of the bureau of mediation and arbitration to represent the public and not to allow the representatives of only the immediate parties concerned to decide the issue.

This is a step in the right direction, but much yet has to be provided for by legislation. This bill, as with the Erdman Act, limits the settlement of disputes to virtually those connected with the railway carriers of this country, but the time is coming and coming fast when the public will demand that the disputes between the industrial laborers of the country connected with the production of a prime necessity of life, such as coal, and their employers shall be adjudicated similarly to that provided in this bill by a board of arbitration determined upon by the parties in dispute. Nay, more. Who can sanction such a condition as resulted from the settlement of the anthracite coal difficulties, where the representatives of the laborers on the arbitration board entered into an agreement with the representatives of the coal operators whereby they were granted their increase of pay and then the operators turned about and levied a higher price than was necessary to compensate them for the higher wages paid? It exacted that increase from the public which had no voice in the settlement, but was obliged to pay the increased wage and considerably more to the mine owners. It is such conditions that make the public cry out in protest, and the coming remedy is for the public to be represented in the settlement of wage disputes, especially where the product has a monopoly characteristic and is limited in quantity. The principle embodied in this bill should be extended to other classes of a public or quasi public character, and the public should be represented in the arbitral deliberations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the measure under consideration is one of encouragement, I am sure, to everyone who believes that the function of a government is to promote the general welfare. It is a measure which seems to me, at least, to prove that the old philosophy of political economy no longer serves the purpose of this day of 1913. The old writers on the subject of wages and economic conditions said that if we trusted all to the free play of natural forces, if we allowed free play of natural law to work out, wages would be just, and that the cost of living would be met by wages in automatic fashion. They also said if the dangerous occupations were allowed to have the benefit of the free play of natural forces they would be more highly paid than the occupations which were not so dangerous.

I want to say that those theories have absolutely failed, and we are showing that truth in the consideration of this measure to-day. We are showing that the free play of natural forces and laws of nature will not bring justice. We are showing that the most dangerous occupations of this country are not more highly paid than less dangerous ones. Even the railroad trainmen, following one of the most dangerous occupations in this country, can not trust to natural forces but must struggle against great odds in the task of securing a livelihood for themselves and families.

This Government recognizes to some extent at least that it can not permit the free play of the rival forces of labor and capital to work out a solution, but must take some steps, however slow and halting, toward the idea that the public welfare is paramount in such struggles and that the end of government is the promotion of the common good.

The fact of the matter is that the theory that if natural conditions prevail all our problems will solve themselves automatically is false in its essence. As a theory it is a thing of beauty, but when we come to actual conditions it is as much outgrown as the stagecoach and the tallow dip.

In this measure we are providing a method of arbitration which may be used when railroad trainmen and the employing companies are facing each other as opponents. It takes no account of the conditions which have brought about such a situation, but it does recognize that this Government should do something to prevent a disastrous struggle which means tremendous loss and waste and injury to the public.

Because it recognizes that principle, no matter how gingerly, I favor it and believe it to be justifiable and worthy. I want to say, however, with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], that this measure in no way touches the heart of the problem involved.

The gentlemen who talk of this measure marking a new era in industrial conditions desire to prevent the waste and loss of a great railroad strike. But why not seek to prevent the waste and loss inherent in the present conditions of industry and transportation? Why not go to the root of the problem of waste in this Nation? Why not treat the disease instead of doctoring symptoms?

I have been receiving circulars daily from the managers' committee of the railroads involved in this controversy and I presume every Member of Congress has been favored in similar manner. I have read them carefully and I have noted that while great stress is laid upon the amount of wages paid, no comparison is made with the relative cost of living or the relative amount of dividends paid by the railroads.

The United States Bureau of Labor issued a report on retail prices March 18 of this year. That report shows that the cost of 15 of the principal articles of food has advanced 55 per cent in the past 20 years, and that prices of the other necessaries of life have advanced in still greater degree.

During that period the wages of railroad employees have increased 39 per cent, so that there has been a relative decrease of wages although a nominal increase. In the face of such a situation, and during the same period, the amount of dividends on railroad stocks has increased over 400 per cent, or from more than $87,000,000 in 1890 to over $460,000,000 in 1911.

Mr. Speaker, there is one overshadowing problem in America to-day. Other problems are important chiefly as they bear upon it. It is the burden of the increasing cost of living upon the people of this country. One of its chief factors is the toll levied by railroads upon practically every article of common use. It affects every man, woman, and child in the Nation, and even the trainmen who man the trains which transport these articles must carry the burden.

The cost of transportation is a direct and excessive addition to the prices of the necessaries of life, but still more important is the waste of humanity in our present system of transportation. It is a waste seldom considered, but it is in reality the greatest drain upon the resources of this Nation. It is the loss caused by accidents and sickness and unemployment, which is not considered in the question of wages.

An appalling proportion of railroad trainmen meet death and accident while in the pursuit of their daily toil. Sickness comes to them as to others, and, if the Bureau of Labor is correct in its conclusions, 1 out of every 5 employees is idle for a period of from 1 to 12 months every year.

But in spite of that employment must be undertaken as though men had banished accident and sickness and unemployment from the earth. Little wonder is it that industrial strife is omnipresent and that cries of hatred and shouts of revolt are swelling into a great chorus of discontent.

There is no use in blinding ourselves to the truth and talking of mere surface measures as though they marked a new era in industry. However effective this measure may be in preventing the present threatened conflict, the causes of conflict remain The cancer is still there and no application of court-plaster will avail in its treatment.

The great problem involved is not one which concerns solely the employers and employees. It is of vital importance to all the people of this Nation, and the people as a whole will pay all the bills.

To-day the railroads are paying dividends on $7,000,000,000 worth of fictitious and watered stock. To pay such dividends they are levying a tax upon every article that the American people use. In doing so they are widening the gap between the average man's income and the amount required to provide the necessaries of life for himself and family.

The railroads exist for the service of the public. They are common carriers upon the common highways of the Nation. I maintain that the Nation has the right to deal with them in any way which will promote the common welfare.

I take encouragement from the unanimity of feeling regarding this arbitration measure. I believe it is a step in the direction of the attitude that this Government of ours exists for the people and that its only just function is to promote the general welfare. With that attitude established, we will stop at no surface measures which do not touch the heart of the problems involved. The question of watered stock will be faced fearlessly and the tolls levied because of such fraud will be abolished. Not only that, but if the public welfare demands that the railroads be taken out of the hands of private companies and operated by the Government, that step will be taken without hesitation. The only question which deserves consideration in such a connection is, Will such action benefit or injure the people of this Nation?

I believe that the time will come when that question will be answered and the common good demand that the railroads, which exist for all the people, shall be owned and operated by the Government of the people. But to-day the immediate duty resting upon this body is that of turning governmental action into its true course for the common good. Then only may we flatter ourselves that we have helped to bring about a new era in industrial conditions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the Erdman Act has been a very useful statute. It has been exceedingly helpful in preserving industrial peace and in bringing about satisfactory settlements between railroad companies and their employees. I am pleased that we are about to amend that act in a number of helpful ways. My only regret is that the emergency is such that it is not possible under present conditions to further amend the measure. There are some provisions in the act before us that, to say the least, are superfluous, and that might well be stricken from it, but not particularly important one way or the other, perhaps. But, on the other hand, it would be well, had we the time to consider the matter, to extend the provisions of the act to at least practically all of the employees of railway corporations.

However, the bill as it stands, and as it is likely to be amended, is a great improvement over the present useful statute. We all hope that its passage will prevent a great railway strike and the turmoil and disorder and great loss which would certainly ensue from such a strike.

The public is vastly interested in matters of this sort, and I join with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] in an expression of regret that these boards of arbitration have not upon them at least one member representing the public at large, for in the final analysis the public at large must pay all of the increase of wages which may result from arbitration.

The railroad companies are now contending that they are unable to increase the salaries of their employees unless they increase the rates of transportation. And yet it is reported in recent Government reports that at least one great railway corporation in the country has recently increased very largely its fixed and permanent obligations without receiving any adequate return for that increase of obligations. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] asks what we are going to do about that. My hope is that the time is not far distant when no public-service corporation of any sort or kind shall be allowed to add to its fixed obligations, which the people must eventually pay, until it shall prove to a competent board representing the public that that increase of obligation represents value received. [Applause.] The people, who must eventually pay for these added obligations, have the right to say that the stocks and bonds of public-service corporations, which are a tax upon the public at large, shall not be increased one dollar unless that increase shall represent actual value tending to increase and improve the facilities of the corporation for the services of the public. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] has four minutes remaining.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I first want to congratulate the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] upon the patience and generosity which he has displayed in connection with these bills, both his and the one that is called the Newlands bill, the Senate bill.

Mr. Speaker, the history of this legislation is rather interesting. Several gentlemen to-day have clamored—and when I say "clamored" I do not mean to use the term opprobriously—for the right to offer amendments to take in other railroad labor. The first bill that was passed on this subject providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration was the act of October 1, 1883, which included all railway labor. It never was utilized. No arbitrations were ever held under it. But after the railroad strike of 1894 at Chicago and elsewhere in the West there was an effort made to prepare a law which might possibly receive the respect both of the railroad owners and the railway employees. That was the Erdman Act. A number of people interested in labor were then opposed to including any labor except those people who were actually included. The brotherhoods which were covered in the actual train service desired to have the Erdman law passed. The others were opposed to it, and the restriction was made as to the classes of employees who should be covered by it.

The Erdman Act was passed in 1898, 10 years after the original mediation, conciliation, and arbitration act was passed, the original act not having been used. The Erdman Act was not used for eight years. Nobody had the confidence to enter into any agreement or provide for any arbitration under its terms for many years, and they never acquired confidence in the law until they had acquired confidence in Dr. Neill, who was the Commissioner of Labor, and in Judge Knapp, who was on the Interstate Commerce Commission. Those were the two men who were called the "mediators" and who had the power of selecting the odd arbitrator in case they had arbitration and the two who were appointed on the respective sides did not agree upon a third arbitrator.

Owing to the confidence reposed in those two men, the Erdman Act came into active operation after 1906, both by mediation and by arbitration. But when the Erdman Act was passed it was expected to apply only to single railroads. Now through the amalgamation of interests between the railroads and their employees it covers controversies involving a great number of railroads and a great number of employees.

Both sides desire that the number of arbitrators may be increased from three, as provided in the Erdman Act, to six, as provided in this bill, and they do not want an odd arbitrator. An odd arbitrator means that one man in the end determines, and that is what both sides want to avoid. An even number of arbitrators forces the two men representing the employees and the two men representing the railroads to deal with each other, and try to reach an agreement through themselves rather than spend all of their time trying to influence an odd arbitrator.

Now, with the history of this legislation in mind, the employees desired to cover additional employees of the railroads. I think no one will object to amending the law hereafter so as to do that. With this bill passed into a law and recognized as it has been, with the Department of Labor bill, providing that the Secretary of Labor shall be a mediator and appoint conciliators, with various propositions which have been pending here, and with the Industrial Commission, created recently for the purpose of devising methods of preventing industrial disputes, I hope we have entered upon an era where men will have such confidence in themselves and in each other as that in the main we shall be able in the future to prevent strikes and lockouts and the troubles which come with them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] has two minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITZHENRY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITZHENRY].

Mr. FITZHENRY. Mr. Speaker, the newspapers for some days have been discussing the emergency which the country faces due to the threatened strike by the conductors and trainmen of the railroads in what is known as the eastern division of the United States. It may be well now to refer briefly to the situation.

In a general way, for the disposition of the controversies between the railroads and their employees, the country is divided into three sections: (1) The territory north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers and east of Chicago and St. Louis, which is known as the eastern division; (2) the territory south of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers and east of the Mississippi, known as the southern division; and (3) the territory west of Chicago and St. Louis, known as the western division.

A little more than a year ago the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers made a demand for an increase of wages for its members from all of the railroads in what is known as the eastern division, or those railroads north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers. The parties did not avail themselves of the benefits of the Erdman Act, but a contract of arbitration was entered into between that brotherhood and the railroads to submit the controversy as to wages which then existed to a board of arbitration created by the contract. This board was composed of seven members. Some weeks were consumed in the taking of testimony, and then several months were consumed by the board in reaching an award. The contract was for one year and the year had almost expired before the award was handed down by the board of arbitration. This award resulted in a decided increase in the wages of locomotive engineers.

Following this award the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen sought a similar increase in the wages of its members from the same railroads. The railroads declined to grant the increase and the controversy was submitted to arbitration, which resulted in a similar increase in behalf of the firemen and enginemen.

Following the increases in wages of the engineers, firemen, and enginemen, a demand was made upon these same railroads for a similar increase in wages by the conductors and trainmen, through their respective organizations—the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and Order of Railway Conductors. This demand of the conductors and trainmen was refused by the railroads on the ground that in 1910 they had granted the men in the train service an increase in wages which totaled the sum of $30,000,000 annually.

Upon the refusal of the railroads to grant the demands of the conductors and trainmen, the organizations representing them submitted a proposition to the railroads of the eastern division to arbitrate their differences under the Erdman Act of June 1, 1898, as amended. The railroads refused to arbitrate under this act, for the reason that it amounts to submitting the controversy to one man.

The Erdman Act provides for a board of arbitration, consisting of three persons, one to be selected by each party to the controversy and these two to select the third within a short time. In the absence of such selection by the two so appointed, then the representatives of the Government are empowered to make the selection. Upon the assumption that the arbitrators appointed by the respective parties would be biased toward the side which presented them, the determination of the issues would devolve entirely upon the third member of the board.

This great power, it was contended by the railroads and not controverted by the representatives of the employees, was entirely too great to be placed in the hands of one person. When the railroads refused the proposition of the employees to arbitrate under the Erdman Act the respective labor organizations submitted the question of a strike to a referendum vote of the respective members.

It has been stated in the press that the issue to be determined by the referendum vote was whether or not to strike because of the refusal of the railroads of the eastern division to grant the conductors and trainmen an increase of $17,000,000 annually in addition to the increase of $30,000,000 granted by these railroads to the conductors and trainmen of these same organizations in 1910. It is but fair to the employees to state in this connection that such was not the case, the issue being whether or not to strike because of the refusal of the railroad companies to arbitrate under the Federal law—the Erdman Act of June 1, 1898.

The vote has been taken and the counting of the ballots has just concluded. The result shows that 94 per cent of the membership of the two railroad labor organizations have voted to strike.

There are 45 railroads directly affected by this controversy, on the one hand, and approximately 30,000 conductors and 70,000 trainmen, on the other, while it is almost startling to estimate the indirect effects upon the happiness, comfort, and prosperity of the American people. If this strike is called by the officers of these two brotherhoods, it will result in the greatest industrial war the Nation has ever experienced, the great A. R. U. strike of 1894 being absolutely insignificant in comparison.

The men are willing to arbitrate under the Erdman Act, but will not arbitrate outside of statutory sanction. The railroads will not arbitrate under the Erdman Act, nor will they arbitrate under a mere civil contract. They say their experience in the arbitration of the engineers' controversy was entirely unsatisfactory to both sides. All of the objections urged by the railroads to the Erdman Act are practically conceded by the great railroad labor organizations representing all of the branches of labor employed by railroad companies. Representatives of these great organizations as well as representatives of the railroad corporations are to be commended for what I believe is an honest effort on their part to save the country from the awful consequences which will follow should a strike order issue within the next few days, pursuant to practically the unanimous demand of the railroad employees.

The measure now under consideration, S. 2517, which was introduced in the Senate and House at the same time, being H. R. 6141, is a measure that meets all of the objections raised by both the representatives of the railroad corporations and employees. It was written at the instance of the railroads and representatives of the employees' organizations, with the assistance of the officers of the Civic Federation of New York, as well as that of Hon. Martin A. Knapp, Chief Justice of the United States Commerce Court, and Dr. Charles P. Neill, formerly Commissioner of Labor.

After the bill was drafted, representatives met in New York and considered every section and every sentence of this bill. Objections were urged by both sides, but in the mutual concessions of the parties directly interested the representatives agreed to the measure in the form in which it was presented to both Houses of Congress.

On June 20 a joint hearing of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and the Committee on the Judiciary of the House was held in the Senate Office Building. Upon that occasion representatives of the railroads and almost all employees of the employees' organizations appeared and assured the members of the two committees that if Congress would pass this measure it would be acceptable to both sides. Mr. A. B. Garretson, the grand chief of the Order of Railway Conductors, was personally present, representing his organization, and stated that he was also authorized to represent Mr. W. G. Lee, the grand master of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, who had been unavoidably detained in San Francisco and was unable to be present at the hearing. He stated that the provisions of the pending measure were entirely satisfactory to both of the organizations and that arbitration would be accepted under it. Representatives of the railroads gave the joint committee the same assurances.

These two organizations constitute one side of the controversy which, unless submitted to arbitration, will soon throw this country into the worst strike the Nation ever knew.

The Senate passed the bill without amendment, while the Committee on the Judiciary of the House reported several amendments to House bill 6141, these amendments being suggested by the Secretary of Labor. Since the Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with amendments to this House, and the several days' delay in its passage, I am informed that the Secretary of Labor has requested the Committee on the Judiciary to recede from its amendments to House bill 6141 and to press for immediate consideration Senate bill 2517, with the two amendments which have just been offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

The material alterations in the present law which will be made by this bill are comparatively few, the important ones being only two in number—that is, one authorizing a board of six arbitrators as well as a board of three, the other authorizing the board to issue subpœnas for persons and papers and to swear witnesses. The other changes which are material, but not so controlling, are: It creates the board of mediation and conciliation, composed of a commissioner, who shall be appointed by the President, and also officers of the Government who have been appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not to exceed two in number, permitting the President to name a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Commerce Court, if there be one, or any other officer of the Government who has been appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The board of conciliation and mediation will be absolutely divorced from political influence and will not be required to report to any Cabinet officer, being directly under the President. In this respect its status will be similar to that of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Under the Erdman Act the Commissioner of Labor and the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, originally, and afterwards the chief justice of the Commerce Court, were authorized to mediate.

That law was passed in 1898. It was never used until about eight years after it had been upon the statute books, and the reason for this was the lurking suspicion of both sides to great labor controversies that the officers charged with mediation and conciliation might possibly be controlled or biased to some extent by political influence.

As those representing the railroad corporations and the labor organizations learned to know the two gentlemen who occupied the respective offices named in the Erdman Act, respect and confidence grew into esteem when the parties submitted to the work of the Government officers in the settlement of great controversies. From 1906 down to the present time there have been at least 60 controversies, some of stupendous importance, others of less consequence, disposed of under the provisions of the Erdman Act. It was found efficient when controversies were confined to one railroad and its employees, but when these great controversies began to embrace a number of great systems of trunk lines it became apparent that the country had outgrown the usefulness of the Erdman Act, with its present limitations, and it must be apparent to every Member of this House that additional legislation is not only desirable now, but absolutely imperative.

The act fixes the salary of the commissioner at $7,500 per annum and provides that his term of office shall be for a period of seven years. In addition to the creation of this office the office of assistant commissioner is also created, and the salary of that office fixed at $5,000 per annum. The term of office of the commissioner is made seven years in harmony with the idea to create a board that will be as far removed from political influence as possible and in the hope that that officer may win the confidence and respect of those with whom he comes in contact.

The purpose of creating the office of assistant commissioner is to have an officer in training at all times who will be more or less skilled with the work and who will be known to the persons with whom he is likely to deal so that in the event of a vacancy in the office of commisioner that it can be immediately filled without interruption to the business of the board or the traffic of the country.

When the parties to a controversy are unable to have their disputes disposed of by the board of mediation and conciliation, then they are requested to submit to an agreement to arbitrate. Section 4 of the pending measure provides that the contract of arbitration shall be in writing and what it shall contain, so that the extent of the inquiry and the jurisdiction and power of the members of the board of arbitration are so well defined as to practically make it impossible for a future misunderstanding, and tends to make the adjudication clear and complete. This section is one which experience has found to be absolutely necessary.

In the recent controversy between the railroads of the eastern division and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the members of the board of arbitration exceeded their authority, it was contended by the employees, and decided a great many matters which were not properly before them. This conduct on the part of the arbitrators beclouded the award and left the parties in substantially as unsatisfactory a position as they were before the arbitration commenced.

Mr. Warren B. Stone, the grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, appeared at the joint hearing of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on the Judiciary, and among other things he said:

> On the 29th day of April, 1912, we signed a contract to arbitrate. It was binding for one year from that date—May 1. It expired on May 1 of this year. On the 28th day of November they handed down the first draft of their award. On the 16th day of February they handed down a subdraft of the report, or rather an additional explanatory draft of what the original draft really did mean, and now we are back to them again trying to find out what the last award they handed down really means. And now that the time has expired—on May 1 of this year—only 19 roads of the 54 have put it into operation, and we are still trying to get the rest, and we hope at least that our grandchildren will get the benefit of the award.

Section 4 of the pending measure was written in the light of the circumstances of the controversy between the engineers and the same railroads whose employees are now threatening to strike, and it is so designed as to compel the parties to reach an issue upon which the board of arbitration can readily reach a conclusion and hand down an official award.

The last paragraph of section 6 provides for a reconvening of the board of arbitration for the purpose of interpreting any finding which they may make. It further provides for a subcommittee, which may be appointed by the board of arbitrators, for the purpose of performing this duty, if necessary, which effectually disposes of the possibility of a deadlock upon the committee by reason of the death or inability of a member of the board of arbitration to be present at a session to be convened after the original finding.

Section 7 requires the board of arbitration to confine its deliberations to the matters in issue which have been specifically submitted to it or to matters directly bearing thereon.

All testimony shall be given under oath, and the members of the board, when appointed according to the provisions of the proposed law, are given the power to administer oaths and affirmations.

It is also provided in the same section that all of the evidence shall be preserved, and it, together with the finding of the board, duly certified by the members of the board, shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States. After it is so filed it is provided by section 7 that judgment shall be entered by the court thereon at the expiration of 10 days from the date of its finding, unless within that time either party shall file exceptions thereto for matters of law apparent on the record. In such case the award shall go into practical operation, and judgment shall be entered accordingly when the exceptions have been finally disposed of, either by the district court or on appeal therefrom.

On questions of law an appeal may be had from the district court to the circuit court of appeals, whose decision shall be absolutely final, and the circuit court of appeals is given authority to set aside the award, in whole or in part, as to matters of law, giving the parties, however, authority to agree upon the judgment to be entered disposing of the subject matter of the controversy.

It further grants to employees the right to be heard in court through their representatives with reference to all questions affecting the terms and conditions of their employment in cases where railroads are in the hands of receivers appointed by a Federal court, and to prohibit a reduction of wages being made by receivers without the authority of the court, after 20 days' notice to the employees.

In writing the pending measure its authors have kept consistently in mind that any process of arbitration and obedience to the award must be voluntary to be effective.

When H. R. 6141 was before the House Committee on the Judiciary, at the suggestion of the Secretary of Labor the committee adopted an amendment to the effect that—

> Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require an employee to render personal service without his consent, and no injunction or other legal process shall be issued which shall compel performance by an employee against his will of a contract for personal labor or service.

This clause does not appear in the bill as originally presented, but is tendered as an amendment by the Committee on the Judiciary and will be of virtue for several reasons. First, it will avoid the possibility of the act being held unconstitutional as contravening the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution, and, second, it will prevent any Federal court from attempting to enforce the terms of any award by its process, thus destroying the voluntary features of this bill which are so essential to effectual arbitration.

Some writers have called this bill a bill for the prevention of strikes, and I believe it comes as near being a bill for that purpose as it is possible to write. It is certainly a measure tending to prevent strikes, and when considered in the light of the experience of the American people under the Erdman Act, with its very circumscribed powers, and that at least 60 strikes of various degrees of consequence have been avoided, it is but reasonable to hope that the passage of this act by the Congress of the United States will have a tendency to very largely do away with the possibility of industrial wars.

There are 45 railroad companies and 100,000 of their employees directly interested in the controversy which now threatens the peace and prosperity of the American people. Of as great importance as the present hour is to both the railroads and these men, the present situation is fraught with infinitely more seriousness to the great agricultural and manufacturing interests of this country.

The railroads involved in the controversy which creates the present emergency represent about 50,000 miles of track and over 40 per cent of the total freight tonnage and passenger traffic of the United States. In the territory directly affected over 38,000,000 people are served by these railroads, and it is shocking even to contemplate the damage that would be sustained by the cessation of traffic at this time. With the wheels of transportation stilled upon 50,000 miles of railroad track in the most densely populated portion of the United States the millions of dollars which would be lost to the railroads and their employees would be infinitesimal as compared to the loss which would be sustained by the farmer and manufacturer of this country. I feel that we would, indeed, be derelict in the performance of our public duty if we were insensible to the exigencies of the present emergency. Our duty is very plain.

AN AUTHORIZED STATEMENT TO THE PUBLIC FROM THE RAILROADS.

Baltimore & Ohio; Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern; Bessemer & Lake Erie; Boston & Albany; Boston & Maine; Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh; Buffalo & Susquehanna; Central New England; Central Railroad of New Jersey; Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville; Chicago, Indiana & Southern; Chicago, Terre Haute & Southeastern; Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton; Cincinnati Northern; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis; Delaware & Hudson; Delaware, Lackawanna & Western; Detroit, Toledo & Ironton; Erie; Grand Rapids & Indiana; Hocking Valley; Kanawha & Michigan; Lake Erie & Western; Lake Shore & Michigan Southern; Lehigh & Hudson; Long Island; Maine Central; Michigan Central; New Jersey & New York; New York Central & Hudson River; New York, Chicago & St. Louis; New York, New Haven & Hartford; New York, Ontario & Western; New York, Philadelphia & Norfolk; New York, Susquehanna & Western; Pennsylvania Lines (East); Pennsylvania Lines (West); Philadelphia & Reading; Rutland; Toledo & Ohio Central; Vandalia; Western Maryland; Wheeling & Lake Erie; Zanesville & Western.

The above railroads are represented by the conference committee of managers.

ELISHA LEE, Chairman.

When the conference committee of managers, representing the eastern railroads, meet the conductors and trainmen on Tuesday, July 8, the employees will announce that 90 per cent or more of the men have voted to walk out if their leaders give the word.

The conductors and trainmen have asked for increases in pay of $17,000,000, or 20 per cent per annum, and the railroads have refused to grant any increases, for the reason that the wages now paid these employees are liberal—in many cases they are excessive.

The conductors and trainmen of the eastern railroads received increases of $30,000,000 per annum in 1910, according to President Lee, of the trainmen's brotherhood. As the wages of these employees now approximate some $85,000,000 in a year, their total wages prior to the 1910 increase must have been $55,000,000 or $60,000,000.

It appears, therefore, from President Lee's own estimate, that the trainmen and conductors in 1910 received an annual increase in wages of 50 per cent.

Yet in spite of this they are now asking for $17,000,000, or 20 per cent, per annum additional.

The engineers in 1912 were given an annual increase of $2,000,000, and in May, 1913, the firemen received an advance of $3,750,000 per annum.

If the roads granted the increase now asked by the trainmen and conductors, it would mean that in three years increases in pay to employees in train service would amount to $52,000,000 per annum, which is equivalent to placing on these properties a lien of $1,040,000,000 of 5 per cent securities having preference over first-mortgage bonds.

Wages of railroad labor can only be paid out of the funds received by the railroads for services performed. If these wages absorb a constantly increasing proportion of the receipts from this sole source of revenue, it is obvious that the public must pay the bill in the end.

The question the public has to answer is: How long shall this process of increases be allowed to continue unchecked?

APPENDIX B.

AN AUTHORIZED STATEMENT TO THE PUBLIC FROM THE ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS AND THE BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN.

A circular has been sent out in the name of 44 eastern railways regarding the unreasonable wage demands of conductors and trainmen. The statements contained therein are framed to purposely mislead those who may come into possession of the document, and the facts are that instead of extravagant wage being demanded the wage which is insisted upon by the eastern conductors and trainmen is exactly the wage which has been paid for 2½ years past by every railway company west of Chicago and St. Louis and a few cents higher than paid south of the Ohio, and we contend that it is worth exactly as much to run a train 100 miles east of Chicago and St. Louis as it is to run the said train west or south of Chicago and St. Louis.

Comparison of the earning ability of the eastern railways per mile with the earning capacity of the western railways per mile or with the railways south of the Ohio River per mile will readily determine whether the eastern railways are able to pay the same going rate as is paid by the western and southern roads.

As to the extravagance of the rate of pay, it is admitted by even the most conservative estimators that the increase in the cost of living in the past 20 years has been, at the very lowest, 59 per cent. In the past 20 years railway employees have received an increase of exactly 39 per cent. Therefore the conductor or trainman, living according to precisely the same standard, purchasing precisely the same amount of the same commodities that he consumed 20 years ago, has, after paying the increased price for those commodities, less money at the end of the month than he had in the year 1893. Is it reasonable to suppose that he will rest content with what constitutes a considerable decrease in wage during the period named?

Meanwhile how has the owner of railway stock fared? In the year 1890, according to the reports furnished by the railways to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the total amount paid in dividends on railway stocks amounted to $87,071,613. In the year 1911 the total amount of money paid in dividends, according to the same reports, amounted to $460,195,376, and it must be borne in mind that the returns for 1890 included switching and terminal companies, while in 1911 the returns excluded the returns for switching and terminal companies, these being some of the most remunerative properties in existence. Here you have an increase in the amounts paid in dividends of about 429 per cent, while wages have increased 39 per cent.

Attention is further called to the fact that in the year 1890 only $1,598,131,933 of the then existing railway stock of the country, which equaled 36 per cent of the amount then in existence, paid dividends, while in 1911 $5,730,250,326 of the existing stock, equaling 67 per cent of the stock that year in existence, paid dividends.

Attention is further called to the fact that the average dividend rate in 1890 was 5.45 per cent, while in 1911 the average rate was 8.03 per cent, the difference in results being largely produced by economies which placed far more onerous duties upon every conductor and trainman in the service.

These figures have been in the hands of the managers' committee more than 30 days, although their new but commendable devotion to the public interest and the loudly advertised although lately developed desire for publicity growing out of said devotion has not led them to incorporate them in the many statements issued by them for public information.

We may be able to contribute other data that will show that we, no less than the conference committee of managers, desire to add to the sum of human knowledge.

A. B. GARRETSON,
President Order of Railway Conductors.
W. G. LEE,
President Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, there is very little more that I care to say on this subject. I wish, however, to amplify as briefly as I may, and as I am compelled under the circumstances to do, one idea, and that is, what binding force and effect an arbitration board can have under this proposed law.

The proceedings had under this law, Mr. Speaker, must be voluntary, and the acquiescence in the award of the arbitrators must be voluntary, such as high-minded and honorable men usually display in standing up to the contracts and agreements that they make.

My observation, Mr. Speaker, is that the average man will stand by a voluntary agreement or a promise, or where his honor is involved, with a stricter sense of fidelity, or a more refined sense of honor, than he will in a contract that can be enforced by the mere power of the law. So I say that in this case the history of arbitrations has demonstrated that both parties to the arbitrations have uniformly complied with the awards; and therefore, reasoning from what has occurred heretofore, we can safely predict that there will be a repetition of it in the future, so that when we have improved the law under which the arbitration will be had this high sense of honor will bind and public opinion will help to enforce the agreements of men who voluntarily submit their questions in dispute to arbitration. In the high court of public opinion they are bound to stand by that agreement, and as honorable men both employees and the railroad heads will stand by the award, I have no doubt, in every case where one is had. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read section 3.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to deprive the gentleman of any right of debate, but I make the point now against any amendment to be offered when he has finished what he wishes to say.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. We are operating under a special rule which cuts out all amendments except the two that are to be offered by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I understand that we are operating under a rule which permits of only two amendments which the gentleman holds, those amendments having been agreed upon yesterday in the conference. But I wish to call the attention of the House——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman is out of order. Whenever the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] offers an amendment, one of the two that are permitted, then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma for five minutes, after the gentleman from Alabama has occupied his five minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That will be entirely satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the board of arbitration shall organize and select its own chairman and make all necessary rules for conducting its hearings; but in its award or awards the said board shall confine itself to findings or recommendations as to the questions specifically submitted to it or matters directly bearing thereon. All testimony before said board shall be given under oath or affirmation, and any member of the board of arbitration shall have the power to administer oaths or affirmations. It may employ such assistants as may be necessary in carrying on its work. It shall, whenever practicable, be supplied with suitable quarters in any Federal building located at its place of meeting or at any place where the board may adjourn for its deliberations. The board of arbitration shall furnish a copy of its award to the respective parties to the controversy, and shall transmit the original, together with the papers and proceedings and a transcript of the testimony taken at the hearings, certified under the hands of the arbitrators to the board of mediation and conciliation, to be filed in its office. The clerk of any court of the United States in which awards or other papers or documents have been filed by boards of arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 1, 1898, providing for mediation and arbitration, is hereby authorized to turn over to the board of mediation and conciliation, upon its request, such awards, documents, and papers. The United States Commerce Court, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Bureau of Labor are hereby authorized to turn over to the board of mediation and conciliation, upon its request, any papers and documents heretofore filed with them and bearing upon mediation or arbitration proceedings held under the provisions of said act.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, strike out all the language beginning with the words "the board" in line 4, down to and including the word "act," in line 22 of the same page, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The board of arbitration shall furnish a certified copy of its award to the respective parties to the controversy, and shall transmit the original, together with the papers and proceedings and a transcript of the testimony taken at the hearings, certified under the hands of the arbitrators, to the clerk of the district court of the United States for the district wherein the controversy arose or the arbitration is entered into, to be filed in said clerk's office as provided in paragraph 11 of section 4 of this act. And said board shall also furnish a certified copy of its award, and the papers and proceedings, including the testimony relating thereto, to the board of mediation and conciliation, to be filed in its office.

The United States Commerce Court, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics are hereby authorized to turn over to the board of mediation and conciliation upon its request any papers and documents heretofore filed with them and bearing upon mediation or arbitration proceedings held under the provisions of the act approved June 1, 1898, providing for mediation and arbitration."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, in the very beginning of the consideration of this bill to-day I explained this amendment, but perhaps some of the Members were not present, and I therefore crave indulgence to make another brief explanation.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. GARDNER. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that his amendment as presented says to strike out all from the words "the board," in line 4, down to line 22 on the same page. I suppose the gentleman means line 11 on page 11.

Mr. CLAYTON. No. The gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Alabama meant exactly what he said. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the House print of the bill, but we are reading the print of the bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. GARDNER. I was looking at the bill which was given to me by the Clerk.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes. The gentleman fell into that error by having the House bill instead of the Senate bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in subdivision 11 of section 3 of the bill it is provided that the award and the papers and proceedings, including the testimony relating thereto, certified under the hands of the arbitrators, and which shall have the force and effect of a bill of exceptions, shall be filed in the clerk's office of the district court of the United States for the district wherein the controversy arises or the arbitration is entered into, and shall be final and conclusive upon the parties to the agreement unless set aside for error of law apparent on the record.

Now, on page 10 the language stricken out provides that the board of arbitration shall furnish a copy of its award to the respective parties to the controversy, and shall transmit the original, together with the papers and proceedings and a transcript of the testimony taken at the hearing, certified under the hands of the arbitrators, to the board of mediation and conciliation, to be filed in its office, and so forth.

Now, of course, you can not file these original papers both in the district court and also at the same time with the board of mediation and conciliation. Hence the language is stricken out, and the language provided in the amendment is substituted, so that by the proposed amendment certified copies of these papers may be transmitted to the board of conciliation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice, on page 8, in section 6, it provides that the original agreement to have a board of arbitration is to be filed in the office of the board of mediation and conciliation, whereas under the pending amendment it provides that all original papers of the board of arbitration are to be filed with the clerk of the district court. How is the board of arbitration to file the original articles of agreement with the clerk of the district court if the original has theretofore been filed with the board of mediation and conciliation as provided in the first paragraph of section 6?

Mr. CLAYTON. It provides that certified copies may be filed with the board.

Mr. STAFFORD. Your amendment provides that the original papers shall be filed with the clerk of the district court.

Mr. CLAYTON. And certified copies with the board of mediation and conciliation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here you provide in one paragraph that the original agreement of arbitration is to be filed with the board of mediation, whereas under the phraseology of the amendment you provide that the original papers are to be filed with the clerk of the district court. It appears to me that there is a conflict.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is just what this amendment seeks to remedy, and I think it does. It was the opinion of everybody who had the measure under consideration yesterday that this reconciled that conflict.

Mr. STAFFORD. If that is the case, very well. One provision provides that the original papers be filed with the board of mediation and conciliation and the other provision provided that they be filed with the clerk of the district court.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] desired to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I understand that we are operating under a rule that permits but two amendments, and therefore I desired merely to make some observations with reference to this legislation, in which I have had much experience. We provide in this bill for an arbitration board of three or six, which in my opinion is a mistake. We had experience with that same mistake in my State. We violate the rule of the jury trial, wherein only those are permitted to serve who have no interest, by providing in arbitrations that only those shall serve who have an interest. It occurs to me to be a very serious mistake to provide that a board shall be divided equally between the contending parties, for the reason that selfishness exists universally among men.

As a fundamental proposition we know no interest but public interest. We deal with this question of strikes largely because of the public interest. Neither the laboring man nor the employer can be relied upon to provide or point out a complete remedy. It occurs to me that the language should be amended in this bill by providing, after the word "arbitrator," that the third man, or the two men in the case of six, should not be "employers of labor for any transportation, transmission company, or any common carrier, nor should he be an employee of any such company," so that men representing other occupations should thus become the deciding element in the determination. In Oklahoma we provided in a bill similar to this a board of seven, two of whom should be employees, two employers, and two other citizens, and one, the chairman, the labor commissioner, elected by the people. That was opposed in the beginning by some of our labor leaders under a mistaken notion that existed then and exists now in the preparation of this bill; but now all agree to it, because other citizens are placed on the arbitration board who have neither a direct nor personal interest in the controversy, and they should be the ones to decide, having in view the public interest and the rights between the two contending parties. We should not in legislation attempt to take the side of either of the contending parties, but to do exact justice, and that can not be done when you select a man, one representing one side and one representing the other and letting them select the third man, without such restriction. One of them may be biased in favor of the other side, and a man might be selected who might not be properly an arbitrator between the two. If the language were broad enough to eliminate the danger, it would be fair to the laboring man, because he would not be subjected to the liability of having a majority in interest against him. It will be fair to the great corporations in the same way. I am pleading for fairness, not as a representative of any class. I know no interest but the public interest, and right between man and man is the only policy upon which we should proceed. I realize that amendment can not be offered now, but I am sure that this is the wisest course in determining this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

If exceptions to an award are finally sustained, judgment shall be entered setting aside the award in whole or in part; but in such case the parties may agree upon a judgment to be entered disposing of the subject matter of the controversy, which judgment when entered shall have the same force and effect as judgment entered upon an award.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, insert, after the word "award," in line 26, the following:
"Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require an employee to render personal service without his consent, and no injunction or other legal process shall be issued which shall compel the performance by any employee against his will of a contract for personal labor or service."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, just one word. The reason why this amendment was offered is to restore or keep in the law this provision which is now in the Erdman law. It was omitted by the draftsman from the bill which was introduced in the House, known as the Clayton bill, and from the bill which was introduced in the Senate, known as the Newlands bill. It was omitted from each one of those bills by some sort of inadvertence. It ought to go back into the bill, and it was agreed by all parties most directly interested in this legislation that it should go in, and on yesterday at the conference it was formally agreed that I should offer it to-day as one of the amendments to this pending Senate bill, which I now do, and I ask its adoption.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this provision in its entirety was not in the original Erdman Act. The first clause, "that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require an employee to render personal service without his consent" was not in the original Erdman Act. We are adding that much to the Erdman law. There is another distinction. The rest of the clause was in that part of the Erdman Act which provides for the stipulation into which the parties shall enter, in subdivision 3, while this puts it in the main part of the law. The forepart of this amendment is not in the Erdman Act, as I understand it, although, I think, it is proper and should be adopted.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, my opinion is that it is there in substance. The exact phraseology may not be there, but it ought to be in this bill before we pass it, and it was agreed by all parties most interested that it should go into the text as I have offered it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman would permit, the Erdman Act provides in one place:

Provided, That no employee shall be compelled to render personal service without his consent.

And in another place:

Provided, That no injunction or other legal process shall be issued which shall compel the performance by any laborer against his will of a contract for personal labor or service.

All the gentleman has done is to consolidate the two into one.

Mr. CLAYTON. And, I think, to shorten and improve the phraseology.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 6141) providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees was ordered to lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. MANN (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the regular order. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is the call of committees.

Mr. MANN. Then I will take the liberty of reminding the Chair that a highly privileged matter was pending before the House and is still pending before the House as the unfinished business, and hence is the regular order, namely, a report from the Committee on the Judiciary recommending that the resolution offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] lie on the table.

Mr. CLAYTON. I can not hear the inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The inquiry which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made was, What is the regular order? Is there any unfinished business?

Mr. MANN. The unfinished business, Mr. Speaker, is the report from the Committee on the Judiciary which was under consideration when the House adjourned for lack of a quorum. It was some days ago, but the regular order has not been demanded since.

The SPEAKER. Of course not. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a question: Is not the Palmer bill relative to the judge in the State of Pennsylvania unfinished business, too?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly it is unfinished business, but the other is a privileged report and has precedence.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] wants to call it up——

Mr. MANN. The demand for the regular order calls it up.

The SPEAKER. Nobody has made the demand for the regular order. If the gentleman makes such a demand, then it is the regular order.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker did not hear. I asked for the regular order. I understood that we had an arrangement about it.

Mr. CLAYTON. There is no trouble about it, Mr. Speaker. And I was about to get on my feet when the Committee on the Judiciary was called, and when the gentleman interposed his inquiry, to offer to the House for present consideration at this time the report made on House resolution No. 181, and to move that in accordance with the recommendation in the report of the committee that the resolution do lie on the table, and to couple with this a request for unanimous consent. Of course, we all know that a motion to lie on the table is not debatable. There has never been any disposition, Mr. Speaker, on the part of the committee or its chairman to deny to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] an opportunity to be heard on the subject matter of this resolution; but the committee thought, and the chairman thought, that there ought to be a quorum present when that resolution was voted upon—that is, if the question of no quorum was to be raised. We could not reach an agreement about that, and we could not get a quorum when the matter was up before. But I think we have a quorum present to-day, and I understand, and I would invite the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to this, as to whether I am correct or not, that the question of no quorum vel non will not be raised after this discussion, but after debate is had, then the motion to lie on the table will be put, and there will be no effort to ascertain the presence or the absence of a quorum?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not myself expect to raise a question of no quorum in that form. I expect to ask for a roll call, and if supported by enough Members in the House to obtain a roll call, that, of course, would develop whether there is a quorum here or not.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is tantamount to the same thing, and, Mr. Speaker, I believe we will have a quorum present to-day. If we have not, it will not be my fault nor the fault of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I think in due deference to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], as he has been contemplating a speech on this subject quite as long as it is safe for him to contemplate such a matter [laughter], we ought to accord him the opportunity for expounding his views on this question. And the committee thought that all of these communications of the Attorney General covered by the resolution had been brought in and the request complied with, and yet, Mr. Speaker, the opinion of any committee or the opinion of any one man is, fortunately, not to guide or control all of us. It may be fortunate to the gentleman from California that in this House of free speech he can not agree with the committee or the chairman, and therefore the chairman of the committee and the committee itself wishes this agreement that I have suggested to be made in order to afford to the gentleman from California ample opportunity to deliver himself.

The SPEAKER. I wish the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] was to state his request over again.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, my motion is that the resolution as reported by the committee do lie on the table. How much time would the gentleman wish for debate?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] desires an hour and one other gentleman desires a little time.

Mr. CLAYTON. That three hours be accorded for debate on the resolution, and that one-half of that time be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the Kahn resolution lie on the table.

Mr. CLAYTON. It has been suggested that I modify it by saying two hours—one hour to a side.

The SPEAKER. And in addition to making his motion, he asks unanimous consent that the debate on the resolution to lie on the table run for two hours, one half of it to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from——

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] if he will not make an extension of the time?

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] one-half.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to use his hour, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] wants to use his hour.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is now about 16 minutes to the hour of 3, and two hours would take us to a quarter of 5, the usual adjourning time. Three hours would take us until nearly everybody's dinner time, and some of the Members have suggested to me that probably we could not have a quorum at 6 o'clock.

Mr. MURDOCK. There is probably not a quorum present now, but I will say to the gentleman that this division of an hour on either side is liable to shut me out, and I do not think the gentleman wishes to do that.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should very much regret that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say, with all due deference to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], that I do not see what public good could be accomplished in engaging in debate over the resolution which the committee has unanimously recommended, both Republicans and Democrats, to go to the table.

I understand that the Attorney General laid before the Committee on the Judiciary all of the papers and correspondence in reference to this case, and the committee went over it carefully and agreed unanimously, both Democrats and Republicans, that he had done all that was necessary, and they brought into the House all of the papers affecting this case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have always thought, and I think that everybody here in this House and the country believes, that the district attorney in California in sending his sensational telegram was simply burning a little red fire for his own personal and political advantage.

Mr. MANN. It appears that the gentleman himself desires to make a speech, but does not want anybody else to make one.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will object now if the gentleman from Illinois objects to my being heard.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself makes a speech in which he objects to everybody talking, and then talks himself.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the only Member of the House who has had an opportunity to discuss this matter. It has been discussed by him, and simply because I believe that this effort to discuss it now is only for the purpose of embarrassing the administration, if possible, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects, and the question is on the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MANN. I did not desire to make the point of order, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was undertaking to run that side of the House, and——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I resent that statement.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen are out of order on each side.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have made a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not need to give any reason for a unanimous-consent request, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] made his objection, as he had the right to.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made his point of order, as he had the right to. The Chair will count.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair counts, I would like very much, if it should turn out that there is no quorum present——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It would be unfortunate, if a quorum is shown not to be present, for the Erdman bill to go over, and therefore I desire to ask unanimous consent to vacate the order made this morning to the effect that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent to vacate the order made this morning that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Friday. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we just passed the amendment to the Erdman bill by unanimous consent under a rather restrictive unanimous-consent arrangement. It was desirable that there should be time for that bill to go to the Senate and for the Senate to agree to the amendments, and then for the bill to be enrolled and messaged back, so that it could be signed by the Speaker before the House adjourns, with a quorum present, and the same action had in the Senate.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and myself had agreed that under the circumstances it was desirable for the House to remain in session. We thought that the House might as well have a discussion as long as we insisted on this side of the House on the pending proposition before the House. Unfortunately, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is opposed to having a discussion of the pending proposition, and has objected, as, of course, he had the right to, and threw sand into the machinery—threw a monkey wrench where a monkey wrench was not desired. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. When I reserved the right to object a few moments ago I understood the gentleman from Illinois to make the point that I had no right to make a speech.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman from Illinois is speaking now under a reservation of the right to object. I would like to ask the Speaker what is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is for the Speaker to count to see if there is a quorum present. No. It is the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] for unanimous consent to vacate the order made awhile ago, that when the House adjourns to-day it should adjourn until Friday.

Mr. MANN. Of course, Mr. Speaker, even such a request is not permissible when a point of order is pending.

The SPEAKER. Of course the gentleman from Illinois is absolutely correct in that contention if he insists upon it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. What will be in order if the Speaker counts and finds that a quorum is present?

The SPEAKER. To vote on tabling that amendment.

Mr. MANN. I would like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that I did not object to the gentleman making a speech; none at all. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said that the gentleman himself objected to other people making a speech. I have not objected to the gentleman making a speech. I am always glad to hear him, whether he is for me or against me.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask unanimous consent to make a brief suggestion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks unanimous consent to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. My suggestion is that we let this resolution 181 and the motion in relation thereto and the proposition of debate thereon be the order of business on next Friday, beginning at the hour of 12.

Mr. MANN. I do not see that we will be any better off then than we are now.

Mr. CLAYTON. We will agree——

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdrawn his point of no quorum or not?

Mr. MANN. That depends on whether we can go ahead with this.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair can not put any of these requests unless he does withdraw it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will ask the gentleman to allow me to amplify or modify my suggestion, and see if we can not come to an agreement whereby we can accommodate everybody who wishes to speak on Friday.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires to make a request for unanimous consent, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum temporarily, and the gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this whole matter go over until Friday and be the first thing after the routine business on Friday; and then gentlemen can agree as to how long they are going to debate or agree not to debate.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we will agree now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think you can agree now.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like the agreement made now.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman anything to suggest about the length of debate? Of course, there can be no debate whatever unless there is an agreement to debate.

Mr. CLAYTON. I suggest, then, that we have four hours debate, the time to be equally divided.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his motion temporarily, to lay this resolution upon the table, the resolution will then be subject to debate, and the gentleman from Alabama can at any time move to lay the resolution on the table, at the end of 2 hours or 2 hours and 10 minutes, or whatever time he wishes.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will agree to anything we can do that is at all reasonable, that will bring us to an agreement, and enable my esteemed friend the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to make his speech at the earliest possible moment. I insist upon his right to speak. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this whole matter go over until Friday, and that it shall be the first thing after routine business.

Mr. CLAYTON. And I withdraw my motion to lay on the table at this time; but at the conclusion of the debate—the four hours, or whatever it is—I shall then renew my motion to lay resolution 181 upon the table.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

My BYRNS of Tennessee. Does or does it not require unanimous consent to withdraw the motion to lay the resolution on the table?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; he can withdraw it at any time, in the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It has been before the House and has been the subject of some discussion.

The SPEAKER. It has never been voted upon and never debated. You can not debate a motion to lay on the table.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can withdraw his motion at any time, of course, this being in the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. I signified my desire to withdraw it a while ago, and I do withdraw the motion here and now, to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. This matter goes over as unfinished business until the next meeting of the House under the rule.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. And when it goes over to the next day there is no debate on it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has withdrawn his motion, and so the resolution is subject to debate until he renews his motion.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I will add that I will do what I can to accommodate all the gentlemen who wish to speak on this, and I suggest now that probably we ought to have a debate of four hours on Friday. I would like to reserve for the committee one half of that time, the other half to be distributed between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], and that will be the proposition that I will make. And, further, at the end of that four hours' discussion, which I think will be rather useless, I shall move that the resolution do lie on the table, in accordance with the instructions of the committee.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] now asks unanimous consent that this resolution be postponed until next Friday, with the notice which he has given.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is the understanding.

Mr. MANN. I shall make no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks that the consideration of this resolution go over until next Friday, with the intimation, of course, that he is willing to ask for four hours' debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, you were calling the Judiciary Committee, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has demanded the regular order, and this is the regular order.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PALMER. That matter having been disposed of, is not the Philadelphia judgeship bill the unfinished business which comes up now automatically?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, it is unfinished business when it is reached in its regular order, and can come up now on a call of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. PALMER. There is nothing else on the calendar, so it is reached in its regular order right now.

Mr. MANN. It is not reached in its regular order until it is reached in its order on the call of committees. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business undoubtedly comes ahead of the call of committees.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to its coming up; but, however, it only comes up as unfinished business when it is in order like any other matter that is called up by a committee. It is not a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the Chair understands that it is not privileged.

Mr. MANN. But as the Judiciary Committee is now on call, you can call that, and that will obviate it.

The SPEAKER. That bill is on the Union Calendar, and does not come up under the call of committees until the call of committees has consumed 60 minutes. Then the gentleman from Alabama or the gentleman from Pennsylvania or anybody else could move to go into Committee of the Whole to discuss that bill; but the question is whether it does not come up as the unfinished business. The only thing that shut it out in the first place was this privileged matter.

Mr. GARDNER. If the Chair will allow me, I do not think it comes up as unfinished business. The Chair will remember that before Calendar Wednesday was instituted frequently bills under calls of committee were left as unfinished business, and stood as such until the end of the session. The Chair will remember, for instance, that the bill to prevent the Marine Band from playing outside engagements was left as unfinished business by the adjournment of the House under a call of committees. Until that call of committees is reached again, until that stage is reached under which the bill is in order, then the bill is not unfinished business. In an hour the stage will again be reached under which this bill is unfinished business, to wit, when the call of committees is exhausted, and the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will then be in order to consider any particular bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Alabama whether the previous question has ever been ordered upon this bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that it has not. I feel sure about that.

The SPEAKER. That bill was being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and the particular thing under discussion when the House adjourned was a motion of the gentleman from Alabama to concur in the first Senate amendment. The Chair is inclined to think that the gentleman from Massachusetts is correct. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

LIMIT OF COST OF CERTAIN PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida (when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6383) to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913.

The SPEAKER. On which calendar is that bill?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It can not be considered at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am asking unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly the thing that can not be done under the rule.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But it is exactly the thing that we did the other day.

The SPEAKER. It was improperly done then. When the 60 minutes have been consumed, or when this call of committees has gone around, then the Chair would feel under obligations to recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr CLAYTON] first, if he wanted to be recognized, to make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the Pennsylvania judgeship bill, or he would recognize the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, the Speaker, as I recollect it, a few days ago made the distinction, which was correct, in my judgment, that this was an emergency matter.

The SPEAKER. That is true, but the rule does not provide for emergency matters. The Chair has no earthly objection to recognizing the gentleman and putting his request for unanimous consent, if it were not for the rule, but when the Unanimous-Consent Calendar was established, that took away from the Speaker the power to recognize Members to make requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully call the Chair's attention to the fact that when this bill was called up the other day I submitted to the Speaker a parliamentary inquiry whether or not it was in order to submit the request for unanimous consent which was asked by the gentleman from Florida. The Speaker stated, referring back to the last Congress, that he had distinguished between what he considered emergency matters and other matters, and had recognized Members for unanimous consent, and that he considered this particular bill as being an emergency measure, and therefore decided that it was in order to submit the request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but the gentleman does not state all that the Speaker said. The Chair then said that on one occasion, to save the Government money, he recognized four or five gentlemen to call up little bills that the Chair thought ought to be disposed of. After he had recognized four or five of them the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] rose and propounded a parliamentary inquiry and made several remarks of his own, the inquiry being whether we were going back to the old system, and the Chair has never felt like recognizing anybody for unanimous consent since that time. The rule is positive. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2517) providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and employees.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2517. An act providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The Clerk called the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAYTON rose.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 6383)——

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I was responding to the call of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The call had already gone around.

Mr. CLAYTON. I thought the Clerk had just reached it again, and I rose immediately.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that he would first recognize the gentleman from Alabama. Of course each gentleman has exactly the same right. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional circuit district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider the bill (H. R. 32) in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Was not an order entered at the session where this bill was taken up before?

The SPEAKER. That is the recollection of the Chair. If that is correct, then you do not have to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I was not here, and I do not remember.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PALMER. Would it be in order now to move to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, while the bill is in the House?

Mr. CLAYTON. I did not understand the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois inquired if, when this bill was up before, the order had not been made by unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. That is the recollection of the Chair, which has been confirmed.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to vacate that order, and that the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and a conference asked.

Mr. MANN. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Was not the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] to concur in the Senate amendment No. 1 pending when the House adjourned for lack of a quorum? Is not that the pending question now before the House?

The SPEAKER. It undoubtedly is.

Mr. CLAYTON. Therefore, I asked to vacate it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wyoming rise?

Mr. MONDELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. My recollection is that when this matter was under consideration the last time there was no motion pending, and that when the point of no quorum was raised and a roll call was ordered the Speaker ruled that there was no motion before the House and that therefore the roll call was simply for the purpose of developing a quorum.

The SPEAKER. That depends. The purpose of a roll call depends entirely on the situation at the time. Now, for instance, when they are dividing and some gentleman raises the point of no quorum, why then, when the doors are closed and the roll is called, they answer on the question that is pending "yea" or "nay," but if you have not reached that stage, then when you have the roll call under the circumstances you simply answer "here" or "present," or some equivalent. When the House adjourned on the point of no quorum being raised, or the House sitting as a Committee of the Whole, the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] was pending to concur in Senate amendment No. 1. At least that is the recollection of the Chair. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] moved to disagree.

Of course, the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] was a preferential motion. That is where we were when the House adjourned, and that is where we are now.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] submits a unanimous-consent request that the order to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole be vacated and that the House disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman asks us to agree by unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the other Senate amendment, too.

Mr. CLAYTON. And I will be perfectly frank in saying to the gentleman that there will be a vote on this so-called Cullop-Mann amendment, whatever action the conferees may take.

Mr. MANN. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman and say if the conferees should agree in the conference there is no possibility of a vote on this amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think we can arrange that.

Mr. MANN. It can not be arranged. The conference can not be divided up, even by the consent of every Member of the House, because the conference report goes to both bodies and one House can not divide it up.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have seen a separate vote had on appropriation bills. I can not recall exactly when.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has seen a separate vote, but where the conferees did not agree upon some item, or he has possibly seen the House reject a conference report in toto and then have a separate vote on the item. There is no parliamentary method for dividing up a conference report.

Mr. CLAYTON. My understanding is that no rule of this House is paramount to the unanimous-consent power of the House.

Mr. MANN. But a conference report does not depend upon the rule of one House.

Mr. CLAYTON. But our action in respect thereto in this House depends upon the will of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that if it was attempted the Chair would undoubtedly rule that you could not cut up a conference report. Now, here is the situation which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] has in mind, in all human probability, namely, that the conferees bring in a partial report, to which the House agrees, and which leaves over certain other matters in controversy that have not been agreed to; then some gentleman moves to concur, or to concur with an amendment, or to disagree, and in that way what might ordinarily be supposed to be a conference report is divided up. But a conference report, if the conferees agree, is to be disposed of as an entity or whole.

Mr. CULLOP. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLAYTON. I apprehend, Mr. Speaker, that probably there would not be an agreement. I do not know about that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CULLOP. In order to get a separate vote on the report of the conferees, would it not be in order, if the conferees saw fit, to make a partial report on amendment No. 1, and then let the House act upon that, and then afterwards make another report as to amendment No. 2, and, therefore, get a separate vote under the parliamentary rules on each amendment to this bill? Now, I can see no reason why that can not be done, and I ask the Speaker, as a parliamentary inquiry, if it can not be done?

The SPEAKER. That can be done. Here is the whole situation about conference reports: If the conference report is complete it has to be voted on as an entity. You can not divide it.

If the conference is incomplete or only partial, then the usual procedure is to agree to the partial conference report. That throws the rest of it open to a variety of actions and motions. Somebody can move to concur. Somebody can move to concur with an amendment. Somebody can move to disagree. The motion to concur has preference over a motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. No, Mr. Speaker, it has not. It is just the reverse.

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is the reverse of that. All those motions can be made. But if it is complete, that is the end of it. You have got to vote "yes" or "no" on it.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CULLOP. In order to accommodate the situation that exists now in the House, the conferees could readily provide so that the House could have a separate vote on each one of these amendments

Mr. MANN. You might as well have it now as at any other time.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the Chair is correct as to the indivisibility of a conference report. I was reflecting on the subject while the Chair was delivering his opinion, and I think the Chair is correct. Of course, the House could express its opinion on the report, and the debate and the opinion of the House rejecting a conference report might be predicated upon opposition to only one item in the report. But a disagreement as to one item, of course, is a disagreement to the whole report, because it must stand all together or fall all together. I think the Speaker is right about that.

What I was endeavoring to do, Mr. Speaker, was to get this legislation along. I do not want to deprive any man of his vote or of his record on any question, whether it has substance in it or whether it is a moot question involved in the amendment.

I do not think the so-called Cullop amendment in the bill is worth three hoorays, anyhow [laughter], because the President could utterly ignore it. He has the constitutional right to do that, and therefore it would be a mere brutum fulmen and would not have any other efficacy. Yet, on the other hand, if we adopt it I do not think the Constitution is being trampled under foot or that civil government on this hemisphere is being entirely destroyed; and therefore I wanted to get this legislation along, the point being that we want a judge over in Philadelphia to relieve that poor, perspiring, overworked judge over there who is undertaking to do the work that it requires three men to do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be 30 minutes' debate on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], 15 minutes to be controlled by him and 15 minutes to be controlled by me.

Mr. PALMER. On which motion? Mr. Speaker, there is a request for unanimous consent pending now. The gentleman from Alabama has asked unanimous consent to vacate the order made.

The SPEAKER. The matter pending is the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] for unanimous consent to vacate the order by which this bill was considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Alabama must see that it is not possible for me or many other Members of the House to agree by unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments. That is an expression in favor of the original Cullop amendment, and therefore I am compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the question is on agreeing to the first Senate amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1:
Page 1, line 9, strike out all after the word "therein" down to and including "judge," in line 11.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be 15 minutes' debate on each side of this amendment, to be controlled jointly by the gentleman from Alabama and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that there be 15 minutes' debate on each side of this amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman mean by "on each side"? Does he mean pro and con?

Mr. CLAYTON. And he is to control the time on that side, and I on this side.

Mr. MANN. It would be under the 5-minute rule, anyhow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have already made all the speech I care to make, I believe, except that I want to repeat that there is a poor, dying judge and nobody to discharge the duties of that high office; that one judge in this district wherein is the city of Philadelphia is undertaking to do the work of two judges. From undoubted testimony there is more work there than two men can do. This one remaining judge has worked unceasingly trying to do the work allotted to himself and to his sick colleague. He can not do that work. He is working now; he has worked without vacation; he has worked without rest; and the work is piling up, and our failure to provide for this additional judge in the courts of that district is tantamount to a denial of justice, because justice will be so long delayed and has been so long delayed in many of these cases as to amount to a denial of justice.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman desires to oppose this amendment, the Chair will recognize him for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on the 2d day of July, 1912—a year ago—a great political party met in Baltimore and there promulgated its platform. On that platform and by reason of several curious dispensations of Providence that party was successful at the polls. Among the declarations contained in that platform was the following:

> We commend the Democratic House of Representatives for extending the doctrine of publicity to recommendations, verbal and written, upon which presidential appointments are made.

A commendation of the action of the Democratic House in adopting a provision which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] now proposes to strike from this bill. When the motion was offered to which the platform refers—offered, I believe, by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]—the Democratic side, including, I presume, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], voted for it, and so received the commendation of their party and the plaudits of the people. But election day came and passed. The party was successful; and following time-honored Democratic precedents, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, leader for the time being of his party, now proposes to turn his back upon the declaration of the party made in this House a year ago, which was commended by the party in its platform.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this provision is wise and salutary. I am for the provision, and I am against its being stricken from the bill, and I am amazed at my friend from Alabama that, having led his party in the support of this proposition, he now proposes to turn his back upon it because, forsooth, there is nothing to be gained to-day, the election having passed, in posing before the country as a believer in publicity.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are other elections coming, some quite imminent; and I rise to suggest to my Democratic friends that they at least ought to be consistent from one presidential election to another. At least they should be consistent longer than a single year on a proposition which they espoused with enthusiasm, for which they congratulated themselves in their party platform, and which they now propose to repudiate.

Mr. Speaker, I am against the striking out of the provision.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would like to be heard for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three and one-half minutes left of his original five minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think that in three and one-half minutes I can answer this amazing speech made by the professional amazer of the House. [Laughter.] I desire, in perfect good humor, to say, in the language of Artemus Ward, that the gentleman from Wyoming is an amoosin' cuss; not only an amazing one, but an amoosin' one.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wyoming amazes us as to where he gets his misinformation. On every subject save one the gentleman from Wyoming has more misinformation than any man I have ever seen in Congress. As a correlative of that, on one subject he has more information, and as a corollary to that he speaks oftener on that subject than any man I ever knew upon any subject; to wit, he knows more about birds and bird lore than any man that ever walked on God's footstool, and speaks oftener than anyone else on that subject. [Laughter.] When he talks about the gentleman from Alabama being a leader of his party and turning his back, "the gentleman from Alabama" desires to say that he has never aspired to be a leader of anybody or of any party anywhere, and if he has ever led anybody into error anywhere it has been some time when he has persuaded the gentleman from Wyoming to vote with him on some measure. The gentleman from Wyoming often votes with the gentleman from Alabama, and I am proud of that distinction. I like my good friend from Wyoming. He always talks with great freedom and with remarkable volubility, and sometimes manifests a degree of intelligence that is amazing to me. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, why this diatribe against the gentleman from Alabama? What has he done? He is merely trying to pass a piece of necessary, nonpartisan legislation; and the gentleman from Alabama repeats what he has long since said, that he does not care whether the Mann-Cullop amendment goes into this bill or not. The President could ignore it, if he wanted to, because it is an attempt to make him give publicity to executive secrets, and that has been tried before, and the Executive is always justified in withholding any secrets relating to his office, if incompatible with the public good.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. MONDELL. Assuming that what the gentleman has said is all true, why did the Democratic Party congratulate itself or congratulate the House in its platform for doing just what we have now before us?

Mr. CLAYTON. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. The Democratic Party, either in making platforms or in its action here, does not need his guardianship. We will take care of all that.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. MANN. He can not.

Mr. CLAYTON. What bearing has that upon this particular time? Does not that pertain to the stump?

Mr. MONDELL. Is it your claim that this amendment is unconstitutional? If it is, then your platform congratulated the Democrats of the House on an unconstitutional act.

Mr. CLAYTON. I was not passing on its constitutionality or unconstitutionality. I said you could not compel the President to do it, and under the present administration, if the President should publish everything he has relative to the appointment of judges by him, there would be nothing gained in a public way, because he is going to appoint only the best and most excellent men, for the best of reasons, to judicial office.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] will be voted down, as it should be, and I disagree with the gentleman from Alabama when he says that the passage of this amendment would not be binding upon the President of the United States. It would be binding upon him because it trespasses upon no prerogative of his, and as an American citizen I hope never to see a man in the White House who will trample under foot any law which is made to prescribe his conduct in any public matter.

I would like to have any gentleman upon the floor of this House opposing this amendment point out some good legal reason why the President of the United States could ignore this law if it was passed. What is there in this law that would give him the right to trample it under foot when he came to make an appointment and place a judge upon either the Supreme, the circuit, or the district bench of this country? What President of the United States would hesitate for a single moment to make public the indorsements which moved him in making a judicial appointment in this country? The public has a right to know, the people of this country have a right to know, what are the forces behind every appointment for office, behind every man who seeks to administer the law in this country, and I take it that the present President of the United States would hail with delight the right, crystallized into law, directing him as the Chief Executive of this Nation to make public the indorsements of every candidate who applied to him for appointment to an office. [Applause.]

Is there any candidate who is carrying to the White House indorsements appealing to the President of the United States to appoint him to a public office, to administer the laws of this great Government, who is ashamed to have his indorsements made public? If so, he is unworthy of the appointment and unfit to hold the office.

Is there an appointing power in this country or in any State which would try to shield from the public the indorsements attached to the petition of any candidate who has applied to him for appointment to an office? They say, Why should he do it? What is the benefit of this amendment? It is to protect the court from unjust criticism and it is to protect the appointing power from unjust criticism. If these indorsements are required by law to be made public it will do a great deal toward removing the criticisms which are now made against the courts of this country and made sometimes against the appointing power. That is the purpose of this amendment. It is to shield the appointing power. It is to shield the parties who obtain appointments from unjust criticisms, and it is the thing the public has a right to know—how and through what means some men obtain the appointment to office, who their indorsers are, and from what quarter they came, whether some great interest is moving behind them. That is the purpose of this amendment. It is a good purpose and one that will prove wholesome in the administration of justice.

My fellow Democrats, let me put this proposition to you: This administration is keeping its platform pledges. This is one of the platform pledges. A Democratic House within three months before the Baltimore convention met passed this amendment. Our duty is plain; we should keep the pledge and uphold the faith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOUSTON). The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I want two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time has already been disposed of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nine minutes in support of the motion to concur and five minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

Mr. CULLOP. That is all that I want.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not to be taken out of the time already allowed?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, four months prior to the Baltimore convention this amendment was passed through this House upon two roll calls and was indorsed by the Democratic membership by an overwhelming majority. It was indorsed by the Democratic press of the country. It was indorsed by the Baltimore convention, the Democratic national convention, on the 2d day of last July. It was indorsed in this House when it was up before on a roll call, and it has been indorsed upon four different roll calls in a Democratic House. I ask you, my Democratic brothers, whether within so short a time after the Democratic administration has begun under the most auspicious circumstances, commanding the respect and confidence of the country, living up to the Baltimore platform pledges, whether a Democratic House now will repudiate one of the planks in the platform and vote it down? If you do, your constituency will rebuke you for the act when you return to your homes and ask a reindorsement at the polls. The Democratic Party ought to keep its pledges. It is bound by its promises to the public. To keep this pledge is one of the sacred pledges, and I ask you as Democrats to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Alabama and demonstrate to the people of the country your good faith. [Applause.]

Mr. PALMER rose.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman opposed to the Cullop amendment or in favor of it?

Mr. PALMER. I am in favor of the Clayton motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how much time is remaining to those who are opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Five minutes on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; eight minutes on the other side. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I am keenly interested in this bill to establish an additional judgeship in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and I am strongly hopeful that it soon may become a law. It is an emergency matter of a most urgent character. The court in Philadelphia is in such a condition that if this bill is not soon passed it will be no exaggeration whatever to say that there will be an absolute denial of justice.

I regret more than I can say that this simple little emergency measure should be complicated and its passage endangered by the injection into it of this controversy about the publicity of the indorsement of judges in general. I attach so little importance to this so-called principle that I agree entirely with the gentleman from Alabama. I do not care whether the Cullop-Mann amendment goes into this bill or not. I am extremely anxious to have this judgeship for Pennsylvania, and I shall be satisfied if Pennsylvania gets it, whether publicity must be given to the indorsements or not. As for me, I propose to vote against the Cullop amendment, largely because I consider that it can have no possible effect whatever. I doubt the power of the legislative branch of the Government to control or impose conditions upon the right of the executive branch of the Government in making appointments to Federal positions. The power of appointment is strictly within the rights and prerogatives of the Executive. The President makes these appointments, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Congress, as such, can neither furnish advice nor withhold consent from such appointments, and if it may do this thing of hedging the Executive about with conditions regulating his appointments that is tantamount to a control of the appointments.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. I can not yield in five minutes. If the amendment were ingrafted upon the bill it would be simply——

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman better let me ask a question rather than to have me make a point of no quorum.

Mr. PALMER. Very well, I yield to the gentleman on condition that no point of no quorum be made.

Mr. DONOVAN. I can not control the gentleman from Pennsylvania, let alone myself. Now, did anyone appear before the Judiciary Committee outside of the gentleman who is now addressing the House in favor of this emergency position of which he speaks?

Mr. PALMER. Yes. There was a committee of about 20 gentlemen from Philadelphia, practicing attorneys and judges in that district.

Mr. DONOVAN. You could have answered me yes or no.

Mr. PALMER. I am answering you yes, and I am telling you who it was.

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, the gentleman has misnamed this by calling it "emergency," because the judge is living. Why did he not call the attention of the Judiciary Committee to the case where the judge is dead, and there is no one to act, which would be more of an emergency case?

Mr. PALMER. It would not require any action on the part of Congress if the judge was dead.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman is a Member of Congress and is doing his duty to the people of this country and ought to have those positions filled.

Mr. PALMER. I do not think that statement requires any answer. Evidently the gentleman from Connecticut is indorsing somebody for judge somewhere who has not yet been appointed. I wish him luck, and I hope the prospective judge whom he is indorsing will finally reach his place upon the bench and quickly reach it.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. Would not it be an answer to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] to say that there is an emergency here in that the existing judge is utterly incapacitated and unable to perform the duties of the office?

Mr. PALMER. Yes. I have said that so many times that even the gentleman from Connecticut is fully aware of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. That the time be extended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. It will not be necessary to extend the time.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman says it will not be necessary to extend the time.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman is on the other side.

Mr. MANN. That the time be extended two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was included in the statement of the Chair, namely, that the time be extended two minutes more.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say a word about the mention of this proposition in the Democratic platform. I am as strong a stickler as there is in this House or as there is in the country for the faithful redemption of party pledges. I believe that whenever a political party makes promises to the people as to legislation which it will enact if intrusted with power, it behooves the members of that party in legislative place to see that those pledges are carried out. But I do not construe the declaration of the Baltimore convention in reference to this matter as anything like a pledge of action on the part of the party, anything like a promise which calls for redemption by the party as a party. The Baltimore platform commended the principle of publicity of indorsements for public place and congratulated the House of Representatives upon the passage of a law——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. I really have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. PALMER. I have only a minute. I just wanted to add this: That the effect of that platform declaration was that it withheld commendation from those gentlemen in Congress who had failed upon the one occasion when the matter was up to vote that way. There was no condemnation of them. There was no promise of legislation in the future. There was no pledge which would make it necessary for the party as a party to put this kind of legislation upon the statute books. A platform of a party may commend many things without binding individual members of the party to support those propositions. The matter is quite different when it comes to the statement of fundamental, vital principles of a great party, coupled with pledges to put those principles into statutory form in the shape of legislation. Therefore this so-called platform declaration or pledge gives me no concern, and I think that no Member should feel seriously about the matter when it is called into question with reference to a single bill of this kind.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK Mr. Speaker, we have here the old game of teeter-totter. This year for a proposition and next year against it! We have here also a rather remarkable change in the mood of the House on one occasion from its mood on another occasion. I saw the House debate this matter once with the greatest gravity. What a far cry it is from that condition of gravity in the House to the spirit of levity we have seen here to-day.

Now, what was the origin of the Cullop amendment, which, by the way, I want to say the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has earnestly and sincerely and assiduously pressed from the time he first introduced it? His amendment was originally offered to a bill in this House relating to a judicial district in northern Illinois. At that time the whole country was engaged in a profound scrutiny of the judiciary. There was pending the impeachment proceeding against Judge Archbald. There was discussion from one end of the country to the other about the judiciary, its integrity, and what could be done with it to correct it in certain particulars. This House gave the most serious attention when the gentleman from Indiana offered his amendment, and particularly was attention given to it on the Democratic side by reason of the fact that William Jennings Bryan in the Commoner had made a notable utterance in favor of the idea, one that was quoted extensively editorially throughout the country and on the floor of the House. It did not appear ridiculous then. It was a matter of greatest moment, and when the vote was taken it stood—I have it here in my hand—151 in favor of the Cullop amendment and some 80 against it—almost two to one. Those of us who were not of the legal profession voted for the Cullop amendment because we believed it was a small step in the right direction. It certainly could not do any harm. But we were backed up in our judgment as to the merit of this proposition by many of the leading lawyers of this House.

Among the men who supported it was the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], now the head of the Committee on the Judiciary. The record shows that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] also supported the proposition. We found plenty of support in that day from the lawyers in this body.

Now, a year passes. Meanwhile the Democratic Party has included an indorsement of this proposition in its platform. Another judiciary bill comes up, one relating to a district in Pennsylvania, and who offers the Cullop amendment this time? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. And he frankly says he does not believe in it. He is putting it up here in order to embarrass the Democrats.

Now, I am one who, regardless of any partisan feeling in this matter, believes in the Cullop amendment. I believe that no harm will come to this country if the President shall make public the indorsements of the man he appoints to a place on the Federal bench. It is a life place. It is a place of supreme power. The President and the Senate alone have the choice.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MURDOCK. There is a widespread belief, I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], that certain influences have had at times in the past more than their due weight in recommendations. Now, I will ask the gentleman from Texas what good reason is there for not making public those indorsements?

Mr. DIES. I was asking the gentleman if he would allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will say that there is no good reason why these indorsements should not be made public.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MANN. How much, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes. That is all there is left.

Mr. MANN. I thought there was more than that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], as I recall, had two minutes which were not to be taken out of the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be notified after I have spoken two minutes and a half. Another gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to be heard.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can blame my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] for saying that the Democratic platform does not mean anything [laughter on the Republican side], and was not intended to. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] says that the House was in a spirit of levity. I do not know whether that is the truth or not, whether the House was acting in a spirit of levity or otherwise. I thought the House was quite serious on this subject.

I would like to suggest to my friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] that if he thinks a man has to look solemn and glum in order to be serious, the gentleman from Kansas can seldom qualify, because with that smiling countenance of his the people would think he was acting in the spirit of levity all the time. [Laughter.] The House is serious on this proposition. The Democrats are wondering how they are going to get out of the hole. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] moves to concur in the Senate amendment. He does not expect the motion to prevail. Gentlemen on the other side will all go home and each one will say, "We had another vote, and I voted to sustain the Democratic platform and make public all these indorsements." Then the bill goes to conference, and the conferees come back and this amendment is agreed to, cutting out this language, and the next amendment disagreed to, providing for an additional judge in Virginia. Then each of the gentlemen will say, "Oh, I had to vote on both propositions at once. I was not willing to add a new Federal judge, so that I had to stifle my conscience about the platform and vote to cut out this amendment." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], who introduced the amendment, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], who favors it, go in for an amendment to instruct the conferees as soon as they are appointed, so that this can not be done. But will they do it? That is the only way really to test the sense of the House.

I am satisfied that the conferees will not agree to this amendment, because I have too much faith in their good judgment to believe that they will endeavor to perpetrate such a crime upon the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for two and one-half minutes.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that some day the Democratic Party will be as fair to the people as many of its representatives are now undertaking to be fair to themselves in this House. The Democratic platform at Baltimore set up the pretense of demanding publicity in the matter of indorsements of presidential appointees. It was an unwarranted reflection upon a Republican administration, which is now coming home to plague a Democratic administration. Crying "Publicity, publicity, publicity," in the platform at Baltimore, Democrats in the House are now seeking to avoid publicity in the matter of indorsements in relation to judicial appointees to be named by a Democratic President. It is evidence of a desire upon the part of Representatives to get away from the "bunk" that has been practiced upon the people in this and other respects after its effects in the campaign no longer apply.

In the Democratic caucus, despite the publicity platform at Baltimore, a tariff bill was prepared and passed. It was a party measure considered in secret without a single hearing to those whose interests were directly concerned. In this instance publicity did not pertain.

Again this morning, as for several days past, we had an attempted concealment by the majority of a display of facts and particulars in the Diggs-Caminetti case. Unmindful of the Baltimore publicity plank, there was an intense desire on the part of the other side of the House not to have laid conspicuously before the country the revolting particulars in this sensational white-slave traffic case.

Now we are to be hindered in the appointment of a judge because of differences in the ranks of the majority as to the propriety of publishing the indorsements to a Democratic President of candidates for a judgeship. Will the people ever be made to understand the difference between this sort of party pledge and party performance?

Now, it makes no difference to me whether the Cullop amendment, demanding publicity, or the so-called Mann amendment, which holds the Democratic Party up to its platform pledge, remains in the bill or not; the bill ought to pass. It is meritorious and should be treated by us in a deliberate manner, according to the necessities of the situation and without regard to politics. Personally I oppose the Cullop or Mann amendment. It was attached to the bill to test the sincerity of the Democratic Party, but it is unnecessary and is merely in consequence of a pretense to do something for the people for political effect.

I do not believe it was intended that we, as legislators, should embarrass every act of the Executive or should assume, because of public criticism, that the Executive or any other administrative officer is to be continually suspected of a desire to break the law. In this instance we are called upon to exercise our deliberate judgment with respect to the filling of a position upon the bench which is virtually vacant because of the utter incapacity of a judge. I do not believe in opposing this appointment, nor do I think, as Republicans, we should embarrass the Executive because his appointee may be a Democrat. Under existing circumstances, the people having elected a Democratic administration, it is fair that a Democrat should be appointed. We need this judge in the eastern district of Pennsylvania because of the exigency of business. It is not a time to cavil or to raise the point of no quorum. The passage of this bill is demanded in the interest of justice and the orderly transaction of business.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the current amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] should again bring forward this amendment. This proposition is, in effect, identical with the original Cullop amendment introduced in the Sixty-second Congress. At that time I discussed upon the floor of the House the constitutionality and merits of this amendment. I have not the present amendment before me, but the original was in these words:

> Hereafter, before the President shall appoint any district, circuit, or supreme judge, he shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of any applicant.

Mr. Speaker, the powers of our Government are divided into three branches by the Constitution, the legislative, the judicial, and the executive. The power to appoint Federal judges is conferred upon the Executive, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, by the express terms of section 2 of Article II of the Constitution in these words, referring to the power of the President:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such interior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Mr. Speaker, it is always difficult to find precedent for the establishment of a position which is so clear as never to have been challenged from an authoritative source. However, if the House will indulge me, I think I can make it perfectly clear that the Cullop amendment is as repugnant to the Constitution as theft is to the Ten Commandments.

The appointive power, so far as concerns a consideration of this proposition, is exclusively vested in the President. True, the Constitution provides that the appointive power, as relates to inferior officers, may be vested in the courts of law or heads of departments. The Congress has not seen proper to so vest the appointment of these inferior officers, and if it should enact a provision transfering the appointive power to courts of law or the heads of departments such appointive power would be as exclusive in them as it is now in the President.

That this appointive power is exclusive and not subject to limitations other than prescribed by the Constitution itself has been the opinion of all our Presidents, as far as they have given expression to their views, and no other branch of the Government has ever successfully challenged or seriously controverted the correctness of that view.

The power conferred by the Constitution upon the President to appoint Federal judges is embraced in the same article and section with the provision that the President shall appoint foreign ministers. The power to appoint in the case of the minister is, of course, as exclusive as in the case of the judge. The first attempt of the House of Representatives to encroach upon the powers of the President conferred by the terms of this provision of the Constitution occurred on the 24th of March, 1796, during President Washington's second term of office. On that day the House passed a resolution requesting the President to lay before the House a copy of the instructions to the minister of the United States who negotiated the treaty with the King of Great Britain, together with such correspondence and documents as might not be improperly disclosed. President Washington declined to comply with the resolution because, as he said:

> It is perfectly clear to my understanding that the assent of the House of Representatives is not necessary to the validity of a treaty.

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution gives the President the power to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint these officers. In 1834 President Andrew Jackson nominated certain directors of the Bank of the United States, and these nominations were rejected by the Senate. In a message to the Senate upon the subject President Jackson said:

> I disclaim all pretension of right on the part of the President officially to inquire into or call in question the reasons of the Senate for rejecting any nomination whatsoever. As the President is not responsible to them for the reasons which induce him to make a nomination, so they are not responsible to him for the reasons which induce them to reject it. In these respects each is independent of the other and both responsible to their respective constituents.

Mr. Speaker, if the Senate, clothed with the power to advise with the President in regard to appointments, and to reject them, has not the power to call in question the reasons which actuated the President, how can it be for a moment contended that the House possesses any such power?

In another case of disagreement arising between President Jackson and the Senate the President said in a message to that body:

> The executive is a coordinate and independent branch of the Government equally with the Senate, and I have yet to learn under what constitutional authority that branch of the Legislature has a right to require of me an account of any communication, either verbally or in writing, made to the heads of departments acting as a Cabinet council. As well might I be required to detail to the Senate the free and private conversations I have held with those officers on any subject relating to their duties and my own.

If this is a different case, it must be conceded to be a much stronger one than the Cullop amendment, for Cabinet officers are not constitutionally provided for as such, but are created by acts of Congress under the Constitution.

President Tyler so clearly defines the powers of the several branches of Government in respect of the subject matter of the Cullop amendment that I shall insert the whole of his message to Congress upon the question:

> WASHINGTON, D. C., March 23, 1842.
> To the House of Representatives of the United States:
> A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 16th instant, in the following words, viz, "Resolved, That the President of the United States and the heads of the several departments be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives the names of such of the Members, if any, of the Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Congresses who have been applicants for office, and for what offices, distinguishing between those who have applied in person and those whose applications were made by friends, whether in person or by writing," has been transmitted to me for my consideration.

If it were consistent with the rights and duties of the executive department, it would afford me great pleasure to furnish in this, as in all cases in which proper information is demanded, a ready compliance with the wishes of the House of Representatives. But since, in my view, general consideration of policy and propriety, as well as a proper defense of the rights and safeguards of the executive department, require of me, as the Chief Magistrate, to refuse compliance with the terms of this resolution, it is incumbent on me to urge for the consideration of the House of Representatives my reasons for declining to give the desired information.

All appointments to office made by a President become, from the date of their nomination to the Senate, official acts, which are matter of record and are at the proper time made known to the House of Representatives and to the country. But applications for office or letters respecting appointments or conversations held with individuals on such subjects are not official proceedings and can not by any means be made to partake of the character of official proceedings unless, after the nomination of such person so writing or conversing, the President shall think proper to lay such correspondence or such conversations before the Senate. Applications for office are in their very nature confidential, and if the reasons assigned for such applications or the names of the applicants were communicated, not only would such implied confidence be wantonly violated, but, in addition, it is quite obvious that a mass of vague, incoherent, and personal matter would be made public at a vast consumption of time, money, and trouble, without accomplishing or tending in any manner to accomplish, as it appears to me, any useful object connected with a sound and constitutional administration of the Government in any of its branches.

But there is a consideration of a still more effective and lofty character which is, with me, entirely decisive of the correctness of the view that I have taken of the question. While I shall ever evince the greatest readiness to communicate to the House of Representatives all proper information which the House shall deem necessary to a due discharge of its constitutional obligations and functions, yet it becomes me, in defense of the Constitution and laws of the United States, to protect the executive department from all encroachment on its powers, rights, and duties. In my judgment, a compliance with the resolution which has been transmitted to me would be a surrender of duties and powers which the Constitution has conferred exclusively on the Executive, and therefore such compliance can not be made by me nor by the heads of departments by my direction. The appointing power, so far as it is bestowed on the President by the Constitution, is conferred without reserve or qualification. The reason for the appointment and the responsibility of the appointment rest with him alone. I can not perceive anywhere in the Constitution of the United States any right conferred on the House of Representatives to hear the reasons which an applicant may urge for an appointment to office under the executive department or any duty resting upon the House of Representatives by which it may become responsible for any such appointment.

Any assumption or misapprehension on the part of the House of Representatives of its duties and powers in respect to appointments by which it encroaches on the rights and duties of the executive department is to the extent to which it reaches dangerous, impolitic, and unconstitutional.

For these reasons, so perfectly convincing to my mind, I beg leave respectfully to repeat, in conclusion, that I can not comply with the request contained in the above resolution.

JOHN TYLER.

Mr. Speaker, an attempt was made by the Senate during the first term of President Cleveland to encroach upon the constitutional powers of the Executive in very much the same fashion as proposed by the Cullop amendment. That attempted usurpation was combated by every Democrat who sat in that body. Among the Democratic Senators who then combated this doctrine, I may mention Coke and Maxey, of Texas; Pugh, of Alabama; Vest, of Missouri; and Jackson, of Tennessee, who later became an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Time forbids me to quote from all of the speeches and reports of these learned expounders of the Constitution, but at the risk of tiring the House I shall read from the speech of Senator Coke, of Texas.

Senator Coke said:

Think for a moment, Mr. President, of the condition in which the President would be placed under the operation of the rule laid down by the Senator from Vermont. The President has vested in him all the executive power of the Government—that power which enforces the laws and appoints and removes officers. Who would write to the President recommending the removal of a dishonest officer; who would write him of suspicions that an officer was faithless; who would write him warning him against a bad man seeking an appointment; who would advise him of anything going wrong, if all these letters were to be open to the public and liable at any time upon the suggestion of partisan malice to be published to the world? The President would be isolated; his sources of information would be cut off, and his efficiency as an executive officer greatly impaired. In all our courts certain confidential communications are protected on grounds of public policy, and where is a higher public policy than that which protects the President in withholding his private and personal papers from the public gaze when through that means the entire executive department of a great government receives increased vigor and efficiency?

In refusing courteously but firmly to deliver upon demand of the Senate papers referring to the suspension of officers, a matter resting solely within the discretion of the President, with which the Senate has no concern and over which it has no jurisdiction, and in refusing to deliver copies of private, unofficial, and personal papers, while tendering to the Senate promptly all public and official papers and documents in the departments, the President has walked in the path trodden by all his predecessors. George Washington, the first President, established the first precedent in a similar case, and the record has been read in this debate to establish it.

Andrew Jackson more than once maintained the prerogatives of the presidential office by refusing to comply with demands of the same character, and John Tyler and President Grant, and even Mr. Hayes, all in notable instances, the records of all which have been read in this debate by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Kenna], have done just what Mr. Cleveland has done so well in this case. Mr. Cleveland has illustrious company and an unbroken line of precedents to support him. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee, with all his ability and research, and although challenged by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pugh] to produce an instance in which a demand like this upon President Cleveland has been acceded to by a President of the United States, has failed to find one. He has not shown a single one. All such demands have from the beginning of this Government, the time of Washington, been repelled as invasions of the executive domain without a single exception. Whenever the question has been made it has been decided as Mr. Cleveland has determined it.

Mr. Speaker, in all the discussions of the Cullop amendment, either upon the floor of the House or in the press, there has never been offered in support of its constitutionality a single precedent, decision, or suggestion from an authoritative source. In view of the fact that the author and supporters of this amendment have been repeatedly challenged for some authority in support of its soundness, I feel justified in concluding that they have failed to produce such authority because of the fact that none such exists.

I shall therefore feel justified, in the absence of some respectable precedent or authority in support of this amendment, in continuing to entertain the opinion that it was brought forward in the first instance and is resurrected now in obedience to that ignorant and impatient clamor against the Constitution of the United States which manifests itself with most violence in those quarters where that instrument is least understood.

I have not attempted a discussion of the merits of the Cullop amendment, if it has any. It has been my purpose to show that it is an attempted violation of the law—the organic law, the highest law of the land. As a Member of Congress, I have taken an oath to support this Constitution, which the Cullop amendment proposes to violate. Therefore if the Cullop amendment was otherwise a wholesome measure, I would not violate my oath of office by voting for it. But, Mr. Speaker, it is not only unlawful, it is unwholesome as well. When the makers of the Constitution divided the powers of government into three coordinate branches their purpose was to head off despotism and safeguard the rights and liberties of the people. The love of power, of prerogative, is among mankind universal. That is not only true of our time and our people but of all time and all peoples.

Samuel Johnson, the great philosopher, has very truly observed that few men desire to take human life, but that a very great number covet the power.

I know of no better way to make clear the wisdom of checking and balancing power than to quote the words of James Madison:

But the great security against a gradual concentration of the several powers in the same department consists in giving to those who administer each department the necessary constitutional means and personal motives to resist encroachments of the others. The provision for defense must in this, as in all other cases, be made commensurate to the danger of the attack. Ambition must be made to counteract ambition. The interest of the man must be connected with the constitutional rights of the place. It may be a reflection on human nature that such devices should be necessary to control the abuses of government. But what is government itself but the greatest of all reflections on human nature? If men were angels, no government would be necessary. If angels were to govern men, neither external nor internal controls on government would be necessary. In framing a government, which is to be administered by men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: You must first enable the government to control the governed; and in the next place oblige it to control itself.

The wisdom of dividing the powers of government among several bodies of magistracy has long been recognized as an indispensable check upon despotism. Montesquieu, that great economist from whom the founders so largely drew wise inspiration, made these sage observations upon this question:

When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person or in the same body of magistrates there can be no liberty, because apprehension may arise lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws to execute them in a tyrannical manner.

Again, there is no liberty if the judiciary power be not separated from the executive and legislative. Were it joined with the legislative the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control, for the judge would then be the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power the judge might behave with violence and oppression.

There would be an end of everything were the same man or the same body, whether of the nobles or the people, to exercise those three powers—that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals.

Most kingdoms in Europe enjoy a moderate government, because the prince who is invested with the two first powers leaves the third to his subjects. In Turkey, where these three powers are united in the Sultan's person, the subjects groan under the most dreadful oppression. In the Republics of Italy, where these three powers are united, there is less liberty than in our monarchies.

Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, was in vigorous accord with this view, as may be seen from the following from his pen:

An elective despotism was not the Government we fought for, but one which should not only be founded on free principles, but in which the powers of government should be so divided and balanced among the several bodies of magistracy as that no one could transcend their legal limits without being effectually checked and restrained by the others. For this reason that convention which passed the ordinance of government laid its foundation on this basis, that the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments should be separate and distinct, so that no person should exercise the powers of more than one of them at the same time.

To the same effect was the declaration of Mr. Madison that—

The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many, and whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective, may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny.

Abraham Lincoln fully agreed with the founders, as may be seen from this declaration from his first inaugural address:

A majority held in restraint by constitutional checks and limitations, and always changing easily with deliberate changes of popular opinions and sentiments, is the only true sovereign of a free people.

Mr. Speaker, the wisdom of the constitutional division of powers between the branches of government is so apparent, and has been so long undisputed, that I could fill a volume from the writings of our great statesmen and patriots. But lest I tire the patience of those who do me the honor to follow this discourse, I shall content myself with but another such quotation, and that from President James K. Polk, in these words:

Congress, and each House of Congress, hold under the Constitution a check upon the President, and he, by the power of the qualified veto, a check upon Congress. When the President recommends measures to Congress he avows in the most solemn form his opinions, gives his voice in their favor, and pledges himself in advance to approve them if passed by Congress. If he acts without due consideration, or has been influenced by improper or corrupt motives, or if from any other cause Congress, or either House of Congress, shall differ with him in opinion, they exercise their veto upon his recommendations and reject them; and there is no appeal from their decision but to the people at the ballot box. These are proper checks upon the Executive, wisely interposed by the Constitution. None will be found to object to them or to wish them removed. It is equally important that the constitutional checks of the Executive upon the legislative branch should be preserved.

What, then, Mr. Speaker, is the excuse for this attempted violation of the Constitution which we have each taken an oath to support? The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], who is the author of this amendment, should be qualified to explain its purpose. He said:

Let me put this question. There is unrest in the public mind to-day. Forget not the force and effect it is exercising throughout the Republic. It is better to satisfy public demand than to disregard it.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe for an instant that intelligent public opinion anywhere in the United States demands the passage of this amendment. If any such demand exists among the people anywhere, it is because they have been misled as to the illegality of this proposition and misinformed as to the necessity urged for its passage. It is inconceivable to my mind that any citizen should demand of a Representative the doing of a thing which he is forbidden to do by his oath of office. Nor do I perceive how public opinion, should it ever become so blind and violent, could expect honest government and wholesome reform at the hands of Members of Congress who could be terrorized into a violation of their oaths to support the Constitution.

This resolution carries with it the false and sinister suggestion to the American people that all is not well at the White House in the matter of appointing Federal judges.

Coming from the people's most direct representatives at the National Capital, such an imputation, if allowed to go unchallenged, is calculated to shake public confidence in the Presidency. This sinister and illegal assault by suggestion was first made while William H. Taft was President. Ex-President Taft needs no eulogy at my hands. The historian will write him down as an able and patriotic statesman. He was probably more careful in the selection of Federal judges than any one of his illustrious predecessors; and, in my judgment, did as much, if not more, to improve the personnel of the judiciary than any President before him.

This resolution makes its second advent during the first term of President Woodrow Wilson, in whose patriotism and integrity the American people, without regard to politics, have implicit confidence. What, then, is the excuse for it unless it be an attempt to create prejudice among illiterate constituencies?

Mr. Speaker, the great officers of this Government are imbued with honesty and patriotism, and so they have been since the foundation of the Government.

That abuses have crept into the state I will not deny. And what government, past or present, has been free of abuses? Our Government has grown rapidly; our natural resources have surpassed in richness anything the world ever knew; and the result has been quick development, the colossal and dangerous concentration of wealth, carrying in its train many evils and abuses which it becomes the duty of wise and patriotic legislators to correct. But the foundation of the structure is sound and stable. The Constitution, generally broad enough for all wise reform, carries in its provisions a means of amendment if found insufficient.

If there has grown up a distrust of our system and its workings, it has been due not to defects in the Constitution but to the tardy use of the powers of the Constitution in effecting reform.

Mr. Speaker, if public opinion demands that the President be no longer trusted to exercise his constitutional duties in appointing to office without limitations by Congress, then let us take steps to amend the Constitution, not violate it.

To my mind this is a large and a serious question. I am not concerned with the effect it would have on the present occupant of the Presidency should it pass. Like Washington, Madison, and Jackson, President Wilson would rebuke our impertinence and go right along discharging his constitutional duties in disregard of the Cullop infraction. But the mischief lies in the attempt of this proposition to feed and fatten the ignorance and passions of certain elements in our country who look upon our flag as an emblem of oppression, upon Congress as the tool of lobbyists, and who regard the Presidency and the Supreme Court as being in sympathy, if not in collusion, with criminal wealth. If I believed that either branch of this Government was corrupt I would despair for the cause of free government. But I know, Mr. Speaker, as does the author of this amendment, that venality in high place does not exist in either branch to such an extent as to have any effect upon legislation.

But venality is not the only foe of free government. The people must have confidence in their agents, and those agents most possess the courage to deal candidly with the people.

To those gentlemen who seek to establish themselves as friends of the people by constantly inveighing against imaginary abuses I would commend the words of the great Chinese sage, Confucius:

The requisites of government are that there be sufficiency of food, sufficiency of military equipment, and the confidence of the people in their ruler. If it can not be helped, and one of these must be dispensed with, let it be military equipment. If one of the remaining must be dispensed with, part with food. From of old death has been the lot of all men; but if the people have no faith in their rulers, there is no standing for the state.

God forbid that the men who guide this Republic should ever be touched with the leprous hand of venality or that the people should ever be brought to lose confidence in faithful public officials by the vaporings of shifty demagogues.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I propose to vote for this so-called Cullop amendment. In fact, as it passed the House in this bill I believe it was partly worded by me. I am not proposing to compare records as to demagogy with anybody. I propose to vote for this amendment because I believe that in this age and time we, as the representatives of the people, are more and more in favor of giving to the people the full knowledge of all the motives that govern our actions. At one time I had some doubt as to whether we had the right to demand of the President publicity of the indorsements for his appointments, but I believe that under the oath of the President to support the Constitution of the United States, and under his obligation to support all laws in pursuance of the Constitution, if we pass a law requiring that he give publicity to the indorsements of those whom he appoints to the judiciary, under that law he will obey his oath and make public such indorsements. And I believe the time has come when the public has the right to know and ought to know what motives, influences, and powers are back of every appointment. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has said, it does no harm to the President to give out such indorsements. No man appointed to office should be ashamed of his indorsements or wish to have them kept secret, and if he does wish them kept secret or is ashamed of them we ought that much the more to know them. For my part I believe in the law. I believed in it when we first passed it in this House, and believe in it now. I believe it is right in principle as well as in party policy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] to concur in the Senate amendment striking out the so-called Cullop amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MURDOCK, Mr. CLAYTON, and Mr. MANN demanded a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a division.

Mr. CLAYTON. I demanded it too, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, the gentleman from Alabama, and the gentleman from Kansas all demanded it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 88.

Accordingly the motion to concur was rejected.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that that motion being lost, it is equivalent to a vote that the House disagree to the Senate amendment. Is that the result?

The SPEAKER. That vote is equivalent to disagreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conferees appointed on the part of the House be instructed to adhere to the amendment of the House.

Mr. MANN. This is not the time to make that motion.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand that the proper time to make that motion is between the time of voting to send the bill to conference and the appointment of the conferees.

The SPEAKER. But there has been no motion for the appointment of conferees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the proper time for the gentleman's motion is after the House has agreed to the conference and before the conferees are appointed.

Mr. CULLOP. I understand that this vote is equivalent to ordering a conference.

The SPEAKER. No conference has been provided for, and nobody can guess that it ever will be.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that a conference be asked, and that the conferees be instructed——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is premature in making that motion. There is another amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. There is another amendment upon which I desire the action of the House.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MANN. I was only going to help out the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the House disagree to the second amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to disagree to the second amendment of the Senate.

Mr. CLAYTON. That relates to the additional judgeship in West Virginia.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have that amendment reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional circuit judge for the fourth circuit, who shall receive the same salary as other circuit judges now receive, and shall reside within the said fourth circuit: Provided, That the office of circuit judge to which Robert W. Archbald was originally appointed is hereby abolished and no successor shall be appointed to fill said office."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to disagree to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 122, nays 9.

So the Senate amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now move that a conference be asked for on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and the conferees be appointed upon the part of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I think that I am not premature in rising to make my motion at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees——

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, one moment—a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If the gentleman desires to be recognized to instruct the conferees, should he not be recognized at this time?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly; Mr. Speaker, it will be too late to instruct conferees after they are appointed.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If the conferees are announced, would not the point of order lie against the motion of the gentleman from Indiana?

The SPEAKER. That is correct. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to recognition at this time.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conferees be instructed to adhere to the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair announces the result of his count I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas. I would suggest to the gentleman that he could make the point of no quorum after we have had a vote upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, and it would be just as effective then as if it were made now.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, that is correct. "I thank thee, Roderick, for the word." I only want to be sure of my point of no quorum against this political excrement. I withdraw the point of order for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his point of order of no quorum, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the conferees on the part of the House be instructed to adhere to the action of the House in disagreeing to the Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is not the motion of the gentleman from Indiana debatable? I desire to be heard upon it for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, it is unusual, it is extraordinary, it occurs to me, in the first instance, especially after the House has voted its wishes in reference to Senate amendments, to instruct its conferees. There certainly ought to be, and there usually is in the ordinary and usual—I will not say decent—course of parliamentary intercourse between the two bodies, opportunity for at least one free conference. The Senate would be justified, Mr. Speaker, I think, in refusing to have a conference in the first instance if the House should send its conferees over bound hand and foot. We have had some such occurrences in my experience in the House. I do not recall the bill, but I remember one instance where under similar circumstances the Senate declined to meet the House conferees until they had had an opportunity for a full and free conference upon the bill. It is presumed after this vote has been taken upon this amendment that the conferees will carry out the will of the House as expressed by its vote, and we ought not in the first instance, Mr. Speaker, both out of regard for the gentlemen, our own Members who will represent us, and out of regard also for the usual courtesy of full and free conference between the two Houses, to instruct our conferees at this time. It is unusual to do so. It is true that this amendment is an unusual amendment. It is true that there are many of us who do not agree with this unusual and extraordinary amendment. In my opinion, if it was adopted by both the House and Senate the President would be justified in not paying any attention to it and in disregarding it entirely. I shall not discuss that question at this time. I simply rose to call the attention of the House to what is proposed by this unusual effort to instruct the conferees.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. DIES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if all the authorities, beginning with the organic law down to the present time, do not declare in unequivocal terms, wherever touched upon, that an amendment in the terms of the Cullop amendment is violative of the terms of the Constitution?

Mr DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor, and I have no desire to be interrupted by a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. Speaker, I did not discuss that question, because, in my opinion, we have passed beyond that stage of it. Upon a roll call on two separate occasions I voted against this amendment, and I am prepared upon all occasions to vote against the amendment or one of like character. I agree with the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I was endeavoring, if I could, to answer the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. I agree with him thoroughly that any effort of this sort is an encroachment by the legislative branch on the powers of the Executive. That is the main reason, and the chief reason, why I have always voted against it. I did not, as I say, undertake to discuss that matter, because I wanted the House, before it voted on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], to instruct the conferees——

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If this amendment had been proposed by the Senate instead of the House, would it have been an encroachment on the executive department?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think so. I do not think it makes any difference by which branch it is proposed.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does not the gentleman know that the Senate calls every day for papers to be sent over there by the Executive?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I know. I know that President Cleveland, in 1886 or 1887, declined to furnish to the Senate this very kind of information, and that question when submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, composed of such men as Edmunds, Hoar, Vest, George, and Pugh, investigated it thoroughly, and that a majority of the committee of the Senate reported that the Senate had not any power to compel the President to furnish this information.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed——

Mr. MANN. Is not the gentleman entitled to an hour, inasmuch as he has taken the floor?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman was entitled to an hour.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it not the understanding that the amendments were to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MANN. The report of the conferees is never considered in the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole can not ask for a conference.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that. It was to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that the House had gotten through with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DIES rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. DIES. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], having been recognized for an hour and not having used his time, yielded 10 minutes to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] reserved his time, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is not the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] entitled to the time?

The SPEAKER. He undoubtedly is if he would reserve his right. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is recognized.

Mr. CLAYTON. He is now?

The SPEAKER. He is now.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I am happy. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I have never been able to understand upon what authority either the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] or the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asserts that no President has ever recognized this demand. The gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Georgia overlooked the Constitution in this case. The President of the United States could not appoint this judge unless he was given authority to do so by a statute here. This Congress can authorize the Attorney General of the United States by a statute to appoint this judge, and the President would have nothing to do with it under the Constitution. We construe the Constitution as it is written and not as somebody would have it written. [Applause.]

This is a statutory office, and Congress has the power to say under a clause of the Constitution how this judge shall be appointed and what officer shall appoint him. Congress has the power to say that yonder court which sits midway between this House and the Senate of the United States shall be authorized to name every Federal judge of every inferior court in this country without the action of the House or of the Senate of the United States. Congress has the right to say that the head of any department in this Government can appoint this or every other judge except the judges of the Supreme Court, with or without confirmation by the Senate. That is the Constitution of our country, and able constitutional lawyers had as well begin to read it as it is written and as it has been construed.

Mr. Cleveland, when President, recognized this right, and I challenge gentlemen upon this floor to show a single instance in the 135 years of the history of the American Republic where a single President has ever challenged this right or denied this power. [Applause.] Oh, they mistake the constitutional provision for removal and treat it as the one for appointment of officials. These two provisions are entirely dissimilar.

The Constitution of our country clothes the President with the exclusive power of removal, and the courts and the Chief Executives have always guarded that power, but no court or President ever challenged the right of Congress to do what Congress is doing here to-day on this question. When the civil tenure of office act was passed, Andrew Johnson or no other man in the Senate or House ever challenged it upon the ground of the principle incorporated in this amendment. But it was challenged on the proposition concerning the removal from office, and very properly so.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULLOP. In a minute. Andrew Johnson escaped impeachment because the civil tenure of office act attempted to take from the President the exclusive right of removal from office, and therefore was depriving him of this constitutional guaranty. Read the debates. Why, you can take the cases in which Presidents have acted from the beginning of the Government down, and I defy any gentleman to point to a single instance in which the Presidents have refused to make publicity of this question when it was asked of them in a proper way.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Not now. Let me refer to the Cleveland case in Alabama. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] wants to be right, I know, but sometimes in an overenthusiastic spirit he gets wrong, and he got wrong in this case. Listen, gentlemen, and I will give you the facts about that case. In that Alabama case they demanded of President Cleveland to furnish the proof and his reasons for the removal of a district attorney, and he refused, and that is how you gentlemen have gotten wrong on this question. You never got the facts right. He refused to give them the papers that led to the removal of that district attorney, because he said, and the Senate said, and every court has said, that that power was exclusively lodged in him, and it was not the subject of senatorial or judiciary inquiry. But when they came to ask him for the recommendations, the indorsements upon which he appointed the successor of the district attorney in Alabama, patriotic, able, and brave as he was, he turned over to them cheerfully all of the indorsements and every paper bearing on the questions upon which he had made the appointment. [Applause.]

Those are the facts in the Alabama case, and that is the course that President Cleveland pursued. Yea, Grover Cleveland was too good a lawyer to question the Constitution upon this question. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. I was somewhat surprised at the gentleman's proposition, that the President of the United States might be divested of the power to appoint this judge. It struck me as novel. I want to ask the gentleman what his construction is of this language of section 2 of Article II of the Constitution, referring to the President:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint, ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for.

I wanted to ask the gentleman under what clause of the Constitution the appointment of a Federal judge is provided for other than what I have read?

Mr. CULLOP. Listen. The gentlemen who combat my contention do not read all of that provision of the Constitution. I will read the remainder of it:

> But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

[Applause.]

I am talking to you about the real Constitution—all of the Constitution on this proposition. I am talking to you about the Constitution of my country. I am not talking about the Constitution that reactionaries would have to be the Constitution. They seem to only be bound by a part of it. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. You gentlemen ought to have a caucus over there. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. CULLOP. What is this judge? He is an inferior officer, and that clause of the Constitution gives the right to Congress to put the appointment in the President, in the courts, or in the heads of departments if it sees fit. That is the Constitution of our country, and when you say by statute that the President can appoint this officer, when you say by statute that he shall have the authority to appoint this officer, and this Congress has that power, it likewise has the power to say how he shall appoint him. These propositions are self-evident, and I take it no one will seriously deny it.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I have not the time now. Do you mean to say that the Constitution gives the right to invest a man with power but does not give the right to say how he shall exercise that power? Whenever that comes to be the construction of the Constitution, law writers upon this subject will have to change all that has heretofore been written and said on this question. A new doctrine will be adopted. If the power exists to give a man the right of appointment, the power to define how it shall be exercised may be prescribed. If the power exists to say what will be the qualifications of a judge, the power also exists to define eligibility for the office. One of these propositions follows the other as truly as day and night follow each other.

Now, what was the Andrew Jackson case? I expected some one to refer to that. That case was this: It was a matter about which Congress had nothing to do, for the reason the Constitution lodges in the President the sole power of removal. Congress, however, has something to do about this case, about this judge, because it is one of appointment and not removal. The President was asked to produce a written document of instruction which had been given to the heads of certain subordinate departments of the Government. He declined. Nobody ever questioned his right to decline. But Congress never asked Andrew Jackson to produce the indorsements of any candidate for office but what he responded speedily to the request. Why not? What objection should there be to him or any other President doing so?

Another case that will be cited is the Tyler case. President Tyler refused the request made of him because, as he said, the House of Representatives had not anything to do with the subject matter—had nothing to do with it; there was no law requiring him to produce the information requested; and that was true under the Constitution and under the law of the country.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, yes; in order to pacify the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIES. The gentleman has an hour of our time, and I did not think he would object to a question. I wanted to ask him this: The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] pointed out section 2 of Article II of the Constitution, which gives to the President the exclusive right to appoint judges, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to point to some provision of the Constitution or some decision of the court, and in the confusion I did not catch the citation of that decision or that provision that did sustain his contention.

Mr. CULLOP. Let me read it to the gentleman again, and then he will concede the mistake he has made. Will the gentleman read the whole provision?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. CULLOP. Let me read. I am reading from page 50, just where the gentleman would leave off—just where he would quit reading. Gentlemen on the other side of this question can hardly ever find this provision of the Constitution:

> But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

This covers the question completely and furnishes authority to sustain our proposition, and completely annihilates the position of our opponents.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman allow me to complete my question? The original Cullop amendment embraced the supreme judges of the United States, and they are not included in this provision of the Constitution as to inferior judges. Therefore the gentleman's attempt to dodge this provision of the Constitution does not serve his stead.

Mr. CULLOP. I am not attempting to dodge any provision of the Constitution, but I am standing upon its broad provisions with both feet, while the gentleman is only trying to get in at the back door, and I do not intend to let him do it. [Applause and laughter.] Now for an illustration. We provide by statute who shall be eligible to the Supreme Court. Suppose the President recommended a minor—a man under 21 years of age. He would not be eligible. We say by statute who is eligible to an appointment. The gentleman might as well rise up and say that we have no constitutional authority to say who is eligible to an office. One would be as reasonable as the other.

We say by statutory enactment who is eligible to vote at an election. Yet the constitutions of the States provide for the qualifications of voters. By statute we can disfranchise a man, and he can not vote under that particular clause of the Constitution, although the Constitution in general terms provides who are eligible to vote; yet because he does not comply with the statute he can not vote. The constitution of every State provides that a man must be 21 years old in order to have the right to vote at a general election, but every person of that age may not be eligible to vote. But along comes the legislature of every State in the Union, and according to these great constitutional lawyers, breaks the constitution of the State by saying that a man must reside within the State so long, in the county so long, in the township so long, and in the precinct so long before he shall have the right to vote. Yet the Constitution says that a man over 21 years old shall have the right to vote.

Mr. DIES. Did not the amendment contain these words:

> Hereafter before the President shall appoint any district, circuit, or supreme judge he shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of any candidate.

Mr. CULLOP. Any applicant.

Mr. DIES. Any applicant.

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. DIES. And does not the gentleman recognize that that falls within the express inhibition of the Constitution?

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, no. Not at all.

Mr. DIES. And does not the gentleman admit that he is bound by oath to support the Constitution?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; and I am arguing with you, trying to keep you from breaking it to-day. [Laughter.] Certainly I do not want you to do that, and that is why I am taking this time on this hot afternoon. The power is given Congress to provide the manner in which appointments shall be made.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman speaks of it as a hot afternoon. I have been wondering whether it would not be possible to get an agreement as to the length of debate on both sides on this proposition?

Mr. CULLOP. Let me get through with my line of thought. I am having to combat these big constitutional lawyers on this constitutional question.

Mr. MANN. Could we not get an agreement as to how much time shall be extended on both sides?

Mr. CULLOP. I have an hour. Then, perhaps, somebody else will want the floor.

Mr. MANN. Why not agree on 15 minutes for debate, the gentleman to have the 15 minutes?

Mr. CULLOP. I thought I had more time than that. How much time have I left?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has more than that; but why not agree to that?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has used 20 minutes.

Mr. CULLOP. After a little bit I will yield for a suggestion as to the time to be agreed upon. Now, upon this question there is no constitutional objection. We have as much right to say the manner in which a President shall appoint a judge of the Supreme Court as we have the right to say the circuit in which he shall preside. No one denies the power of Congress to create and define circuits and to regulate the questions of jurisdiction. It is no invasion of any constitutional provision for Congress to do so.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CULLOP. I am very sorry the gentleman from Illinois has seen fit to disturb me. I do not often consume a great deal of time, and will not use more now than the occasion requires.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. My only reason was that I thought the gentleman wanted to have a quorum here to listen to him. I was very much entertained by his argument.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Why, if we are going to spend the evening here we might as well have a quorum. If we can reach an agreement as to the time for debate——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana give attention to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reach an agreement as to how much time shall be extended; but, if nobody knows how long we are going to stay—it is nearly 5 o'clock, and there seems to be no possibility of a vote. I did not know but we could agree on the time. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CULLOP. As I understand, I have 40 minutes of my hour left. I may use all of that, and I may not.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope no part of this comes out of the gentleman's time. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOP. I do not want it to come out of my time.

Mr. CLAYTON. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit me, would he not be willing to agree that this debate shall be concluded in 20 minutes, the gentleman to have all of the 20 minutes?

Mr. CULLOP. I do not know whether I would want all of it. Why not make it 30 minutes?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this proposition shall close at the end of 40 minutes—20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], 10 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and the balance of the time by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that. How much time did the gentleman indicate?

Mr. PALMER. I mean 45 minutes—20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and 10 minutes, we will say, to the chairman of the committee. That will be 45 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of no quorum temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order of no quorum.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ascertain from the gentleman from Illinois whether he expects to renew the point of order after the expiration of the 45 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I learned long ago that it is safe to cross bridges when you reach them. At this time I do not expect to.

Mr. SABATH. I know there was a gentlemen's agreement here about three weeks ago that there would be no business transacted, and the Members in good faith left for their homes; but within three days the gentlemen's agreement was broken and some business transacted, and a great many Members placed in a false position.

Mr. MANN. I will say to my colleague that the gentlemen's agreement was not broken on any occasion. No business was transacted which did not come up by unanimous consent. A point of no quorum was made at one time by myself and at another time by some one else. That, however, was a part of the understanding, that a point of order of no quorum could be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] asks unanimous consent that debate shall extend for 45 minutes—20 minutes of which shall be given to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the committee [Mr. CLAYTON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, this is no new question before Congress. When Andrew Johnson was President of the United States and the Republican Party was in power in both branches of Congress, a law was passed over the veto of the President called the civil tenure of office act. That act required that not only the indorsements for candidates for office should be submitted to Congress but the reasons that impelled the President for making his appointments. He did not object to that portion of the law, but the law went further and provided that he should surrender unto Congress the papers upon which he made removals from office and the reasons which impelled him to make the removals. He controverted that question, because, he said, as the Senate before had said, and the courts of the country had said, that that part of the law was an invasion of the constitutional right of the President. But no Member of Congress, no Senator, nobody appearing for Andrew Johnson in the great impeachment case, denied the power of Congress in the former—the publicity in appointments—but everybody conceded that part of it applying to removals was an invasion of the Executive's constitutional right—that power is solely vested in the President, and has so been conceded from the formation of this Government down to this time. Congress has no power to question the President about the removal from office, because that power is lodged in the President alone. That law led to the impeachment proceedings against Andrew Johnson, and he escaped the impeachment as President of the United States solely upon the ground that that part of the law which required him to furnish the reasons and papers for removal from office was unconstitutional. Nobody questioned the other part in that great trial or at any other time in that long and angry proceeding. The question was then settled on that proposition in accordance with the precedents of all our history.

What man who loves the traditions of his country, who loves its institutions, who believes in its laws and the upholding of its dignity could have an objection to the President furnishing the indorsements upon which he makes an appointment to office? What could be the objection? Is it because he wants to slip a man through and impose upon the President, when the man ought not to have the office, and against whom public opinion would be enraged, or is it because he wants to protect some man in office who ought not to be in office? I would rather stand for this open-door policy that will protect the President from unjust criticism, that will protect the courts from unjust criticism of the manner in which they secure their appointments. Let me put this question. There is unrest in the public mind to-day. Forget not the force and effect it is exercising throughout the Republic. It is better to satisfy public demand than to disregard it. By adopting this provision we trample upon no constitutional provision, we violate no sacred tradition of the law and customs of this Republic. Then yield to public demand and give to the people that which will be a great protection to two branches of this Government, the executive and the judicial. Oh, what would you think of a judge sitting upon the bench who was ashamed to have his indorsements made public? What would you think of an appointing power in this country, the greatest and freest Republic on earth, that was ashamed to make public the indorsements through which he gave some man a public office to administer the laws of this Republic? Let it be open. Turn on the searchlight. You will turn aside criticism and you will inspire confidence, and you will win esteem in the mind of the public for both the appointing power and the appointee.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana reserves 14 minutes.

Mr. HARDY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WINGO rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WINGO. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Is it in order to move to adjourn at this point?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold for five minutes. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. It is always in order to move to adjourn whenever you have the floor, but you can not take a man off the floor when he wants to make a speech.

Mr. WINGO. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman withhold that point for five minutes, until I get this off my stomach. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas make the point of no quorum?

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not indulge in any heroics. We have listened to some beautiful tributes to the Constitution, of which I think I am fully as fond and to which I am as much devoted as the gentleman who has just addressed the House. But there has not been on that side of the question one single syllable of authority presented to show that the proposition involved in the Cullop amendment is unconstitutional.

I grant that neither this House nor the Senate, without warrant of law, has the right to call upon the President to do anything that he is not required by the Constitution or some law under it to do. The Senate therefore had no right and has no right now to call upon the President for the indorsements under which he has heretofore made an appointment, because there is no law authorizing such a demand; but President Cleveland, recognizing the equity and the good sense and courtesy in the request for the indorsements on which he had made certain appointments, yielded to that request and gave them to the Senate.

The Senate had and has no right to demand of the President that he give his reasons for the removal of an officer, because the Constitution clothes him with the power of removal, and no law authorizes the Senate to demand his reason, and it is doubtful if sound policy would justify such a law. But if we place a law upon the statute books directing or commanding the President of the United States to communicate the indorsements under which he makes an appointment, then he, like every other officer under the Government of the United States, has taken an oath to obey the Constitution, which carries with it an oath to obey all laws made in pursuance of the Constitution. Let us leave out heroics. For my part all this talk about excrescences and putrescences and superior and inferior men—it matters not to me. I have learned that the man who so frequently denounces somebody else as a demagogue—oh, well, it is not worth while to discuss motives. That is not the question. Here is a proposition for a plain law demanding that the indorsements upon which appointments are made shall be made public.

Some gentleman said to me that what he wanted to know about was the indorsements of those who were refused appointment. I do not care who indorsed those who were not appointed. We have nothing to do with that; but when a servant of the people is appointed to high position, there ought to be nothing concealed as to the reasons why he was appointed. I believe there is nothing concealed in the bosom of this President or of past Presidents of the United States; but as was said by the gentleman from Indiana, let everything be done in the daylight.

Oh, it may be charged that it was demagogy to adopt a resolution that hearings before our committees should be held in public; but if that is the case every one of us is a demagogue, for we all voted in favor of the hearings before committees being public. We are all now in favor of having the noonday sun shine upon our own actions and upon all the actions that affect the general welfare of the public.

I do not care who it is, I do not believe there is a single appointee of the President of the United States who ought to ask that his indorsers be kept secret. Some very sensitive or very brave man may think it offends his dignity to require that his political acts be all in the full light, but I don't believe our President has any such feeling. Mark you, this House has no right to-day to demand of the President that he communicate any indorsement for any office, because there is no law providing for such a demand, and it might be presumed that such a demand in some special case only, and not in pursuance of some general policy, was based on some suspicion.

The only good reason that can be urged against the Cullop amendment in this bill is that it is a single appointment, but when it is considered that the amendment is only an application of a general principle which we have heretofore avowed and declared, that reason fails.

Mr. Speaker, I think also that it would, or might, appear insulting if one coordinate branch of the Government should demand of another coordinate branch of the Government that it communicate its reasons for doing a thing done under oath. But if a law is placed upon the statute books requiring certain data upon which action is taken by any officer or servant of the people to be made public, there is no insult. If we, as a House, were to demand of the President certain information that he did not think was properly required, he might well refuse to give it; but I read in the Constitution that an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution must be taken by every Senator and Representative and by every executive and judicial officer of the United States and of the various States. When that oath is taken with a plain law upon the statute books, is not he who takes it bound in good conscience to abide by the law? We could not arrest the President and bring him before any court. Perhaps we might impeach him. The equality of the two branches of Government, legislative and executive, has nothing whatever to do with requiring that the Executive obey his oath to support the Constitution. And it might be a ground of impeachment. But for one it seems to me that it is a simple question as to whether or not we favor as a public policy, as we favored before, publicity for the indorsements of those who are appointed to serve the people. For one I really want the status of all our officials to be so open, so clear, so free from any sinister imputation that all the world may see and find no fault.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, how many minutes have I?

The SPEAKER. Fourteen.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas reminds me a great deal of the old town meeting that I once heard of. Seven old fellows——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. I wish the gentleman from Indiana would designate which gentleman from Texas he refers to. There are several of them.

Mr. CULLOP. I mean the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES. Seven old fellows who could not bear any innovation upon their ideas got together and had a town meeting. The first resolution that they unanimously passed was that no one but the saints should inherit the Kingdom of Heaven, and they then immediately followed it with another resolution that "we seven are all the saints, and therefore we alone shall inherit the Kingdom of Heaven."

I am going to make this statement: The gentleman did, in February, 1912, make an attack on this amendment and cited authorities to sustain his contention, but I will guarantee that the gentleman never read a single one of them, for there is not a single one of them, as a close examination of them will show, that touches this proposition. He referred to one decided case, but that case, when he will read it, he will find was decided upon the question of the power of removal vested in the President and not of appointment, and the President of the United States gets his authority to remove from a different provision of the Constitution altogether. That case arose over a removal and not over the power of appointment. If the gentleman had ever read that case, he never would have cited it here on this proposition, because it has no bearing on it whatever; and what is true of that case is true of every other precedent that he cites. I read every one of them from the first to the last.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not mean to do me an injustice.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CULLOP. For a question.

Mr. DIES. President Washington's message to the House told them they could not do just what the gentleman wants to do now, and that is based upon the identical provision of the Constitution, and not upon some other one.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, the gentleman is as wide of the mark as a barn door. It had not any reference to this question. His message was based on a different proposition altogether, and is not similar in any respect. The trouble with the gentleman and those who follow him is that they are not able to distinguish between the two different provisions of the Constitution bearing upon different subjects altogether; one is the power of removal and the other is the power for appointing, and the best evidence of that is that when they come to debate this question they get mad. One of the first things I learned when I began the practice of the law was that if you had the other fellow cornered and he could not escape he was as sure as could be to get mad and go to abusing the other side. The gentleman seems to think that everybody who does not believe with him on this proposition is a demagogue. On what meat does our friend from Texas feed that makes him so much better than anybody else?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I protest against such a quotation from Shakespeare.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, the gentleman has had his time to effervesce. Of course, when he finds that he is absolutely wrong on this question he can not acquiesce. Do you know what is the trouble with those opposing this on the Democratic side? I will tell you the upshot of the matter. This was a proposition advocated by William J. Bryan, the greatest Democrat this country has ever known.

Mr. SLOAN. Where is he now?

Mr. CULLOP. He is Secretary of State now, and he is discharging his duties very well and satisfactorily to the country, and he will continue to do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He honors and adorns that high office, and not only his party, but the country, rejoices that he occupies that high station, and nothing has done more to create the great confidence reposed in the administration of Woodrow Wilson than the selection of William J. Bryan as Secretary of State. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He is the idol of more people in this country to-day than any man that ever lived in it. They believe in his honesty of purpose, his ability, his wisdom, and his nobility of manhood.

He advocated this proposition and certain gentlemen in the House could not be for any proposition he was then advocating, but it is different now. Such an opposition now is not popular. That is what is the matter with them. I remember about hearing of a witness who swore in the case once on trial that a horse was 17 feet high instead of 17 hands high. When they pointed out to him the error he said, "Well, if I said it at first I will stick to it if it kills me." That is the way with the opposition of some to this amendment. They can not get away from the thing that started their opposition. It is very difficult for some people to concede they are wrong even when convinced of the fact. They have no constitutional law, no decisions of any court by which they can draw inferences sufficient to lodge a plausible objection to it. There is not one of them that dares read the authorities cited; if he does he contradicts his position and his defense falls to the ground. Whenever he does he reads himself out of his position.

Why, talk about this decision to which the gentleman refers, and he would have the House believe it decides his point. That question was decided upon the power of removal, under a different clause of the Constitution, and it held that the President had the exclusive right to remove from office; but it decides nothing on the question of appointments.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Is not that an additional ground, with the President taking the oath to obey the Constitution and the laws, and it is a still stronger case, if this be made the law rather than a demand by one branch of Congress?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, most assuredly. I take it that any man elected President of these United States would be too big and too broad to ever question that, and whenever he submitted it to a court or his Attorney General he would be informed that it was his duty to do it. Gentlemen here talk as if the President is empowered by the Constitution to appoint all the officers in this country. Who appoints the fourth-class postmasters? The Postmaster General, and they are not confirmed by the Senate or any other body. Receivers of national banks are public officials, and who appoints them? Not the President, but the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and they are not confirmed by anybody; and yet gentlemen say that this first clause of the Constitution gives the entire power of appointment to the President and to nobody else. We have a right to say by statutory enactment here that the Attorney General shall appoint this judge, and he does not have to be confirmed by anybody. We have a right to say here by a statute that the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint this judge, and his appointment shall be confirmed by the House of Representatives, if we want to so enact. The Constitution does not prevent it, but provides we may do so; and yet the gentleman from Texas, one of the seven saints, says that nobody but the President can do this. Congress may provide all judges of inferior courts shall be appointed by the Supreme Court. It has authority to enact such a law and take the appointments out of the hands of the President. These appointments may be made as Congress shall direct. The gentleman from Texas has never studied this provision of the Constitution or any of the cases bearing upon it, or he would not make the statement that he does. He got in wrong in February, 1912, because William J. Bryan was advocating this measure in his paper and on the stump throughout the country, and he has never been able to get right since. I believed it was a good law then when there was a Republican President, and I believe it is just as good now when there is a Democratic President. The doctrine is sound; the principle is wholesome; and there is no constitutional obstacle to prevent its enactment or the enforcement of it after it is enacted.

There is no reason why it should be objectionable. Who is going to be harmed by it? Not a single individual. But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] pleads that the President of the United States must not be embarrassed. I assure him this provision will not embarrass the present Chief Executive. It will not hamper him. He is too big and great and patriotic. A man who would be so constituted would not be big enough to be President of the United States, and no such man as that ever will be President of this great Republic. If a judge is to be appointed in some State, what harm is it going to do for the people of that circuit to have notice before the appointment is made as to who is indorsing the candidate? They have a right to know. They have a right to understand what are the moving forces behind the man who is chosen to administer the laws for them. If this had been the law for the last 20 years the Federal courts of this country would not have been the subject of many of the criticisms that have been poured out against them. Too often the influence of the Federal bench is impaired because of the secrecy attending the manner in which the selection was made. The people believe, whether rightly or not, that sometimes some things are done not in the best interests of the entire public; that forces are exercised in the selection of judges hostile to the best interests of the administration of justice. This should be rectified. If it was open, and the searchlight of publicity turned on, it would have saved the Federal judiciary in many instances from criticism, from the impairment of the influences which it should exert, and the influence which it is unable to exert in many instances all over the country. It would save the appointing power, the President of the United States, in many, many cases from the unjust criticism that is heaped upon him regarding the appointment of judges which the public believe to have been appointed at the special behest of special interests in this country. Does any man believe that Mr. Archbald would have been appointed a judge of the Commerce Court if just such a statute as this had been in effect at the time that his appointment was made? The announcement may have taken the country, the people of his locality, by surprise, but if this method had been properly pursued, they could not have been taken by surprise, but could have prevented his appointment. They would have had an opportunity to come and enter their protest and prevented the appointment, and have saved the judiciary of this country a great disgrace.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] is entitled to 10 minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as Woodrow Wilson is President of the United States and he will appoint judges only on the recommendation of such patriots as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] and myself, I take it, I yield 3 minutes of my 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], and reserve the rest of my time.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time in order to bring the attention of the House back to a matter which apparently has been forgotten around here lately, the Philadelphia district judgeship bill. I thought that the bar of Philadelphia, when it appeared before the Judiciary Committee, I thought that the members of the Judiciary Committee, when they appeared before the House, had convinced everybody that this judge was absolutely necessary for the administration of justice in that district. I believe there is hardly a Member in the House to-day but that agrees with me that we ought to have this judge in Pennsylvania. Yet, if you vote for this proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], you kill this Philadelphia judgeship bill just as dead as if every man in the House were against it. To what purpose? Not to get legislation upon this question, which seems so dear to your hearts, but simply to take once more a poll of the House upon the proposition. We have had a vote upon the Cullop amendment here this afternoon. Every man has gone on record upon it. If you now follow that up by instructions to the conferees before they go to conference, the Senate will be entirely justified in saying, "We can not confer with you; there is nothing to confer about." Therefore that would be the end of the Philadelphia judgeship bill, and it would be the end of this proposition of publicity of indorsement of judicial applicants. Therefore you can get absolutely nothing beyond what you have already secured—a poll of the House upon the question—by passing this motion to instruct the conferees. On the contrary, if you let it go to conference, it may be that you will be able to persuade the conference and the Senate of the wisdom of the proposal of a large proportion of the House. You stand a chance of putting in the legislation of the country this proposition for which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] so strongly pleads.

Therefore I plead with you, in the name of 3,000,000 people in Pennsylvania who are suffering for the want of this judge, to let this bill go to conference, where the judge can be provided for and justice be given to those people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to discuss or raise an issue upon the merits of the amendment. The sole purpose I had in view was to call the attention of the House to the proposition then pending before it—to instruct the conferees—for the reason that I knew just what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated, that if that motion prevailed there would be no conference upon this bill.

I knew that, and I knew how important it was to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the people whom he represents that there should be an opportunity given to the Senate to pass the bill and give the people the relief that the bill proposes to give them.

Another word, Mr. Speaker. I do not care what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] thinks about the motives of those who voted against what is known as the Cullop amendment, nor am I at all concerned what his views are as to the position some of us occupy upon the constitutionality of such a provision. That does not concern me at all. But when the gentleman suggests that those of us who have always voted against this proposition—and I happen to be one of them—are influenced mainly or solely because the proposition was advocated by the present Secretary of State, so far as I am concerned he shoots wide of the mark.

I happen to be one of those who have taken their political lives in their hands at times in sustaining and advocating the principles advocated by the present Secretary of State. I opposed the Cullop amendment not because Mr. Bryan advocated it, but for the reason that I do not believe that this House has any right under the Constitution to put any such provision as that upon this bill. I still entertain those views, Mr. Speaker, and I can not be induced to yield those views even at the suggestion, erroneous and undeserved as it is, of the gentleman from Indiana to the effect that I was influenced by such motives as he suggests. [Applause.]

I will repeat, Mr. Speaker, that in the long service I have had in this House I recall but one instance where the House has in the first instance instructed its conferees before they had occasion to confer with the Senate. Such a course of procedure is not in accordance with the ordinary decent rules governing the meeting between representatives of the two Houses; and if this motion shall be adopted there will be no reason to expect that the Senate will confer with us, and they should not do so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has one minute.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the pending proposition is improper and discourteous to the Senate; that is, to say to the Senate that this House shall instruct its conferees before even the first conference is held. It is unusual. It marks a new event, so far as I know, in parliamentary procedure. What the Senate will do if the House votes in accordance with the contention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] I do not know.

As to the Cullop amendment itself, it is of very gravely doubtful constitutionality. But whether it be constitutional or no, it is unwise. It is not in accordance with the Democratic platform, for this reason: The Democratic platform proposes a general law. This is a proposition to make the President give publicity to the indorsement of the particular judge involved in this bill, and no more. It is not a compliance with the Democratic platform, and if it were a compliance with that platform, offered under these circumstances, in this emergency, this denial of public justice to 3,000,000 of people, it is a foolish proposition.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. To ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I understood that the order which was made contemplated a vote upon this proposition without any further debate. That was the unanimous agreement made at the beginning, and I shall have to insist upon it.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that. The gentleman from Alabama has had 45 minutes on that side, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] have five minutes and that I have five minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Two or three gentlemen were talking to me, and it invariably happens that when I am trying to listen to some gentleman on that side, two or three friends talk to me on this side. I can not hear three men at once.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] have five minutes and that I have five minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. If that time is given, I ought to have five minutes myself; but I will not object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] have five minutes and that he have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] intend to request that he have five minutes, too?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it will be necessary, and it has been suggested to me repeatedly on this side to move the previous question at the end of the time. I do not think the previous question is necessary, because the agreement had in the beginning provided that a vote should be taken at the expiration of the allotted time. I understand that with the exception of this added 10 minutes, the original order will be preserved, to wit, that we will vote at the expiration of these 10 minutes. Therefore the previous question is not necessary.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much, owing to the lateness of the hour, to request any time in this debate at all, but I am constrained to ask for five minutes, and would like to have the gentleman, if he will, modify his request so as to permit me to have five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I will agree to give the gentleman from Georgia a part of my five minutes if I get it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama modify his request?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do, in accordance with the request of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The request, then, is that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] each have five minutes in the order in which the Chair states it. Is there objection?

Mr. KORBLY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. KORBLY. I desire unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, that has already been granted to every gentleman, upon my motion, at the beginning of the debate.

Mr. MANN. Not on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first put the request of the gentleman from Alabama. Is there objection to that request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, let the leave to print apply to everybody.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama early to-day got unanimous consent that any gentleman who wished to do so might extend his remarks.

Mr. STAFFORD. But that was limited, was it not, to the bill under consideration?

Mr. SABATH. That was on the other bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. I make the same request in regard to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the same request in regard to this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I could not consent to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the suggestion. I wanted to accommodate everybody who wanted to talk or to print.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Indiana ought to have his request put. Is there objection to his extending his remarks upon this bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be joined in that request.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DIES. I want to join with the gentleman also, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KORBLY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] assumes to read men's minds and fathom their motives. I am reliably informed that he has in private conversation explained my opposition to his amendment on the ground that I oppose anything William J. Bryan advocates. Inasmuch as I am earnestly advocating the guaranty of deposits, a measure favored by Mr. Bryan, this statement need not be further extended, because the falseness of Mr. CULLOP'S declaration is made as clear as his motive in uttering it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that where we have so many very able lawyers here, capable to state the facts, in this particular case to misrepresent it is not according to our principles. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania spoke here as if the position in question was one of importance. It is the minor court in the United States. It is as the petit justice of the peace is to the higher courts in the States—practically of no importance. The holder of the position passes upon laws and acts of your Congress. For instance, it passes upon statute-made crimes, not crimes at common law. That is the business of the court in the main. There is no suffering, except, perchance, in those who are out on bail, in that they are not brought to trial for possibly a week or two or a month or two later. The crimes consist of infractions of the internal-revenue laws in regard to tobacco and whisky and in regard to mail matters—obscene literature. The number of cases that are taken there that require ability, that require knowledge of the law, is not 3 per cent; and yet we are giving to whoever occupies that position practically a quarter of a million of dollars if he lives the natural life of man. Just think of it—$7,000 a year for life. You can see right away that it works no harm, because when those offices are vacant for a year no one knows it except some one who has a friend that he wants to enjoy that particular plum. That is all. We have cases where there is a vacancy for a year, and the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, one of the ablest men of our country, knows of that vacancy for months, and great lawyer that he is, knowing that the country is not suffering on account of the vacancy, he does not give it the slightest interest whatever. That is a picture of a lawmaking body, great lawyers, and what a pitiful picture it is.

One word in regard to the question of publicity. Of course in the gentleman's State of Alabama nothing goes wrong. They can not go wrong where the gentleman resides, but in other States they do have judges that do things that are wrong, and the judges ought to be in prison instead of on the bench, and those judges are recommended by men who ought to be in prison instead of at large. The public pays the salary. The public raises the money, and the least they are entitled to is to know the sponsors of these judges. If the distinguished gentleman from Alabama had in his State a crew of judges whose only duty to perform was to issue injunctions and restraining others in order that the public might be plucked, how long would he acquiesce in such a condition or stand for the crowd that benefited by these orders and injunctions, who were the sponsors of the judges—created them, so to speak. Nobody would stand for that. No doubt the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], when this matter came up before in the other Congress, voted for these resolutions, no matter what requires them now to reverse themselves and to vote against them. If you wish to do your duty to mankind and to your oaths, obey the mandate of your convention at Baltimore, the first article of which is about economy in public expense that labor might be lightly burdened. Does it affect the distinguished gentleman from Alabama? The platform pledge at Baltimore goes in the wastebasket as all other rubbish. Thank you, gentlemen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour I yield back my time to the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire, in view of the range the debate has taken on the motion to instruct the conferees, to submit something that occurs to me as being germane to the motion about to be submitted. The House, by a vote of two to one, declined to concur in the Senate amendment. Thereupon the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] moved to instruct the conferees on the part of the House to insist upon the position of the House. Notwithstanding the sentiment of the House touching the Senate amendment to strike out the Cullop-Mann amendment, we find the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary—and I say so with the greatest respect and with most profound confidence in the chairman of the Judiciary Committee—knowing that he will be one of the conferees on the part of the House, and the other ranking members of the Judiciary Committee in turn conferees on the part of the House—notwithstanding the will of the House has been expressed, we find the chairman of the Judiciary Committee does not content himself with accepting the judgment of the House to act as conferee on the part of the House, but his last language upon the question is the announcement that striking out the provision does not contradict the platform, is unconstitutional, and not only unwise but foolish, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that under the circumstances——

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. In a moment. Under the circumstances it is a proper occasion for the House to instruct its conferees. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman——

Mr. RODDENBERY. I state again, not because the House is wanting in confidence in the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. In a moment.

Mr. CLAYTON. You are misrepresenting the "gentleman from Alabama." The "gentleman from Alabama" demands recognition.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Not out of my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment, nevertheless.

Under the rules of the House the House has the right to instruct its conferees in the first instance, but under the rules of the House that instruction is not imparted to the Senate as a part of the action of the House, and the Senate therefore can take no cognizance of the instruction on the part of the House, because under the rules it is not communicated to it. If it does go outside, as it has in only one case in previous procedure, and decline to meet our conferees, the Senate can, under its rules, ask for a free conference, and the House can then grant a free conference if it desires. In that case the House will have expressed itself by its instruction to the conferees and it will not operate to defeat the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] has expired.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Now I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman has no time to yield. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on the pending matter for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not be offensive——

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly the gentleman can object.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I reserved the right to object. I should like to concur in that request by asking that I may have the privilege of five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] asks unanimous consent, in conjunction with the five minutes the gentleman from Alabama asks for, for five minutes for himself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama have five minutes and the gentleman from Georgia have five minutes in which to reply to the gentleman from Alabama, and the gentleman from Alabama have five minutes in which to conclude.

Mr. CLAYTON. That exactly suits me. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] agree to that?

Mr. CARLIN. I object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CARLIN. All right. I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not wish to be misrepresented in another speech as I have been misrepresented.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] have five minutes in which to address the House, that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] have five minutes in which to address the House, and, then, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] have five minutes more in which to address the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] can not object without rising in his place.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I beg the Chair's pardon. Make it two and one-half minutes and I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] objects.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman withhold the objection for a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I withdraw it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I agree to yield two and one-half minutes of my time to the gentleman from Alabama, and that will give him five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] made his request for unanimous consent first, and I am asking if that should not be put to the House first?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] accepted the modification, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would rather have it as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] have five minutes, that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] have five minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] then have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I can not see why they should have 15 minutes more to discuss what the gentlemen will likely discuss here, and I am going to object to that much time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] objects.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent for just two minutes in which to reply to a misrepresentation made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY]—unintentionally, I suppose, because he has always been my friend.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] may proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to modify the request by asking for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] modifies the request of the gentleman from Illinois by asking for two minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman from Georgia occupy the two minutes now, and then I may ask him the question which he denied me a moment ago?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not know whether I want the two minutes at all or not, but the gentleman from Alabama discussed this matter for several days——

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is mistaken. We have discussed it to-day.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Georgia, it has always been the practice, and always will be, that the man in charge of the bill is entitled to close the debate.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] desires to usurp that privilege, and I am not willing he should do that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] were addressing himself to the measure independently, I should make no question about it; but——

Mr. MANN. But, regardless of what he is addressing himself to, he is entitled to close. Somebody must, of necessity, speak last.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman from Georgia is not a mind reader.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman from Georgia has stated exactly what he would do, and I notify the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman's notice is not necessary——

Mr. RODDENBERY. That you will not proceed unless both you and I have a fair opportunity.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman shall have all he wants, and I guess he will need more then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the precedents and practice for the last 10 years have been that the man in charge has the right to close, and nobody can deprive him of that right.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The question before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], to instruct the conferees, which is contrary to the position of the gentleman in charge of the bill. Now, the question I propound is, Who is entitled to close?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] has the right to move the previous question on this motion whenever he gets ready.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make this request, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] have three minutes; that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] have three minutes to reply; and that after the gentleman from Georgia replies, the gentleman from Alabama shall have two minutes in conclusion.

Mr. RODDENBERY. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall cut the matter short by making a statement in a minute or in a half a minute, and that statement is that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] wholly misapprehends the position of the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Alabama has opinions. He has expressed those opinions. Those opinions may not coincide with the opinion of a majority in this House, but the gentleman from Alabama, when authorized by the House to do a thing, always endeavors to meet the views of the House if he can, and if he can not——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that nobody has the floor. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] have three minutes, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] three minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama two minutes in conclusion. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, has not the bill been passed, and is it not now beyond the control of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the pending measure. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I second the motion.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am content, Mr. Speaker, to rest under the misrepresentation made by my friend from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY]. I want to do public business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] moves the previous question on the pending measure. The previous question is not debatable.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] makes the statement out of order that he "rests content under the misrepresentation of the gentleman from Georgia." I take exception to those remarks, because they are made out of order and under circumstances when I can not reply. My answer to the gentleman——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman has not raised a question of personal privilege.

Mr. RODDENBERY. My answer to the gentleman's reflection is——

Mr. HAY. It has no question of personal privilege whatever.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that no quorum is present, and evidently there is not. The Chair has counted this House half a dozen times this afternoon.

USELESS PAPERS IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, from the Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, to which was referred a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of papers, documents, etc., on the files of the Department of the Treasury which are not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent or historical value, submitted a report (No. 34) thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore made, adjourned until Friday, July 18, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

COTTON STATISTICS (S. DOC. NO. 134).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 26th ultimo, certain information showing how the figures referring to cotton goods in the table on page 39 of the report of the Department of Commerce entitled "Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions" were obtained, and also the correctness of the statement that it takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value to cotton goods as 114 horsepower does in the United Kingdom, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. WEBB, and Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma conferees on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented memorials of William Leon Dawson, of Santa Barbara, Cal.; Ellen A. Freeman, of Westerly, R. I.; Mrs. Viola Gray, of Lodi, Cal.; G. F. Kasch, of Akron, Ohio; and of the Pasadena Audubon Society, of Pasadena, Cal., remonstrating against the adoption of any amendment to the clause in Schedule N of the pending tariff bill prohibiting the importation of the plumage of certain wild birds, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PERKINS presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the permanent improvement of the Diplomatic and Consular Service, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Berkeley, Cal., favoring an appropriation for the construction of a naval station and dry dock on San Francisco Bay, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McLEAN presented a resolution adopted by the Connecticut State Branch, United National Association of Post Office Clerks, remonstrating against the repeal of the present civil-service law, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. LODGE presented the memorial of R. D. Loveland and 81 other citizens of Melrose, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Fruit and Produce Exchange of Boston, Mass., favoring the adoption of 1-cent letter postage, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of Rebecca Pomroy Tent, No. 44, Daughters of Veterans, of Malden, Mass., remonstrating against any change or alterations being made in the United States flag, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TARIFF DUTY ON LEMONS.

Mr. WORKS. I submit a short editorial from the Los Angeles Express bearing on the question of the tariff, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

AN OBJECT LESSON.

[From the Los Angeles Express.]

The East is afforded an object lesson as to the consequences that will befall the consumers of lemons when the tariff bars shall have been removed and the Sicilian importers given a practical monopoly of the market along the Atlantic seaboard.

It is a matter of common knowledge throughout the country that an unprecedented period of low temperature last winter enormously injured the lemon crop of southern California. Consequently this section, that of late years has supplied over half the lemons consumed in the United States, has been unable to meet the demand. Sicilian lemons during the first week of July were selling in New York at $8.50 a box, more than twice the price that was asked for them at the same time last year, when they encountered the competition of the California product. It is predicted that the price may go to $10 a box.

Are the consumers of the East so short-sighted as not to see that the Sicilian importers are able to make these extortionate demands only because last winter's frost shut out California's competition this season? Do they not perceive that the proposed reduction of the duty will prove equally effective and exclude California growers hereafter as certainly as if a series of frosts swept their groves?

It is possible that the Treasury will derive a little larger revenue, but its gain will be achieved at tremendous cost to eastern consumers. Freed from California's competition, the Sicilian importers will make eastern lemon consumers pay every year the same extortionate prices this year witnesses.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment, and I inquire what the paper is which was read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is an editorial from the Los Angeles Express, which the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] asked permission to have read. The Chair heard no objection to the reading of it.

Mr. STONE. I shall object to any future readings of that kind. I do not see why a Los Angeles newspaper or any other newspaper should be advertised through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It may be supposed to do somebody a little local good, but it is hardly the proper course to pursue.

Mr. WORKS. I am unable to hear what the Senator from Missouri is saying.

Mr. STONE. I said I object to the notion of putting into the RECORD editorials of newspapers and advertising the newspapers through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Everybody has heard this kind of talk a good while, and the Senator from California could state it himself, if he concurs in this view, with a good deal more of ability.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senators on the Democratic side have not heard this quite often enough or the tariff bill would not be as it is to-day. This is a perfectly legitimate argument on the tariff question, submitted by an intelligent newspaper, and I see no reason why it should not be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. Oh, it is in the RECORD, but I object to having that sort of thing continued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter which has been read will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 234) to enjoin and abate houses of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution; to declare the same to be nuisances; to enjoin the person or persons who conduct or maintain the same and the owner or agent of any building used for such purpose; and to assess a tax against the person maintaining said nuisance and against the building and owner thereof, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 82) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 654) to accept the cession by the State of Montana of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Glacier National Park, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 83) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 84) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 657) to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 85) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1243) directing the issuance of patent to John Russell, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 86) thereon.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2415) relating to the exclusion of traffic from streets and avenues of the city of Washington during parades, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 87) thereon.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN NEVADA.

Mr. PITTMAN. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2727) to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada, and I submit a report (No. 88) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an additional land district is hereby created for the State of Nevada to embrace the lands contained in the following-named counties, to wit: Churchill, Elko, Eureka, Humboldt, Lander, Lincoln, Nye, and White Pine, described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the common corner between townships 38 and 39 east, range 47 north, Mount Diablo base and meridian, being on the north boundary line of the State of Nevada; thence south on the dividing line between townships 38 and 39 east, to its intersection with the third standard parallel north, said parallel being the dividing line between ranges 15 and 16 north, of Mount Diablo base line; thence east along said third standard parallel north to the intersection of the Ruby Valley guide meridian, being the dividing line between townships 55 and 56 east; thence south along said Ruby Valley guide meridian to its intersection with the first standard parallel north, being the dividing line between ranges 5 and 6 north, of Mount Diablo base line; thence east along said first standard parallel north, between said ranges 5 and 6, to the east boundary line of the State of Nevada; thence north along the east boundary line of the State of Nevada to the north boundary line of the State of Nevada; thence west along the north boundary line of the State of Nevada to the point of beginning. The city of Elko, in the county of Elko, is hereby designated as the site of said land office, and the district shall be known as the Elko land district.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause all plats, maps, records, and papers in the Carson City land office which relate to or form a necessary part of the records of the lands embraced in the district hereby created to be transferred to the Elko land district.

SEC. 3. That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for said land district, and they shall be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may be hereafter provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers of said State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. KERN. There seems to have been an impression prevailing among Members on this side of the Chamber that the adjournment was until 2 o'clock to-day. I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Gallinger	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Gronna	O'Gorman	Sterling
Brady	Hollis	Page	Stone
Brandegee	James	Perkins	Sutherland
Bristow	Johnson, Me.	Pittman	Thomas
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones	Root	Thornton
Chilton	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Tillman
Clapp	Kern	Shafroth	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Sheppard	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Sherman	Warren
Colt	Lodge	Shields	Weeks
Crawford	McLean	Shively	Williams
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

TARIFF DUTY ON LEMONS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. The Senator from Missouri made a statement a few moments ago in relation to the printing in the RECORD of editorials from newspapers. I want to know if I understood him correctly when I thought he said that in future he would object to any editorials being printed in the RECORD?

Mr. STONE. I did not mean to say, if I am so quoted, that I would object. I did mean to say that I thought I would protest; that printing such editorials in the RECORD was merely a bad habit; that if Senators wanted to make arguments on the floor they could do so, and refer other Senators to what the newspapers had said.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am tempted to go a little further than the Senator from Missouri signifies his intention of going. I think that in future I shall object to the printing of newspaper editorials as a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Of course I do this in no spirit of hostility to the newspapers or to the writers of editorials, or, as the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] interpolates, to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I think it would be far from an injury to the RECORD if such editorials were excluded; but my idea about it is this: The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in my opinion, should be an authoritative record of the doings and proceedings in the Congress of the United States, and that part of it which pertains to the Senate, in my view, should report accurately the speeches and votes and proceedings of the Senate of the United States.

Of course, I know that under the rule a Senator, when he is addressing the Senate, may, with the permission of the Senate, read any editorial which seems to him to throw light upon the question that he is discussing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Connecticut mean to say that in making a speech a Senator must get permission of the Senate to read an extract, either from a newspaper or from any other source?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. The consent of the Senate must be had for the Secretary to read such matter, but to say that a Senator himself can be denied the privilege of reading it I think is not quite accurate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I may be mistaken about the rule, Mr. President—I have not looked at it recently—but I was under the impression that such a paper could not be read except by permission of the Senate. I think, however, the Senator from New Hampshire is probably correct about it, that the Secretary can not read such a paper without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right, if objection is made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator himself may read it. If any Senator thinks that an editorial writer has stated his position upon the proposition which he is discussing in a fashion better than he himself can state it, so that he thinks the matter would be more properly presented by making the editorial a part of his remarks, I, of course, should have no objection to his including it in his speech; and I want to say to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] that what I say has no reference whatever to the fact that he has this morning asked to have an editorial printed in the RECORD; but it has reference to the fact that I think it is a growing practice here, which is not a good practice. The principal thing I object to about the printing of editorials in the RECORD as a part of the record of Congress is that there is no end to it. No Senator wants to object to another Senator doing it if other Senators do not object to his doing it; so it becomes a matter rather of discourtesy to object. Therefore I want to give notice that I think, unless upon reflection I shall have cause to change my present intention, I shall object to the printing of editorials as a general thing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There is another reason why I think they should not be so printed. Such editorials are accessible to all the country and can be copied from one newspaper into another. Nobody will be deprived of the argument contained in an editorial if it is excluded from the RECORD.

Another reason why I do not think editorials should be included in the RECORD is that they are always anonymous; nobody knows who writes them; nobody is responsible for them. If any Senator wants to combat an argument raised by an editorial he must stand up here and debate the question with some anonymous person out of his reach and out of his knowledge, and be answered in the newspaper. The newspaper having the last say, and not being subject to the rules of parliamentary debate which prevail in the Senate, has an unfair advantage in such a discussion, even if a Senator wanted to continue the controversy.

So I think the orderly proceedings of the Senate, the dignity of the Senate, and the economical expenditure of the public funds will be promoted by preventing the stuffing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with anything that any Senator wants to put into it. If that practice is continued, it will produce a rivalry between the different sides of the controversy, which, by the introduction of rival or hostile editorials, would extend the RECORD to an amount of printing that would be absolutely disgraceful for us to countenance. Therefore, Mr. President, I think I shall object to any further printing of unsigned editorials.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am very glad that some Senators have awakened to the fact that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is being encumbered by matter that ought never to find its way into its columns. The editorial I offered this morning was a very brief one, containing a statement of fact bearing upon an important piece of legislation which was actually pending in the Senate. I did not offer it because of any argument that was advanced by the editor, but merely as a statement of facts that I think are very important as affecting one of the great industries of my State. The custom of introducing matter of that kind in the RECORD has been followed ever since I have been a Member of the Senate. I have felt many times that it has been abused. If any Senator had objected to this editorial going into the RECORD, I should have gracefully submitted to that objection.

I am going further than that, Mr. President. It has been intimated here by two Senators already that there should have been objection made to the introduction of that editorial into the RECORD. Therefore, I am going to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the editorial may be withdrawn.

It has been stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] that I might have made this same statement myself, but possibly I might not have made it as well as it was made by the editor of the newspaper, who is interested in the industries in my own State, and certainly I do not desire to encumber the RECORD with any matter that ought not to be there. I sympathize with what has been said by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. Therefore, in order to show my own good faith with respect to the matter, I am going to ask leave to withdraw the editorial, so that it may not appear in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I object.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does that require unanimous consent?

Mr. GALLINGER. Objection has been made.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule that it requires unanimous consent, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has objected.

Mr. BORAH. If this matter is to be controlled, it ought to be controlled by the rules of the Senate rather than by the action of some Senator upon a particular occasion by making objection; and until the matter is distinctly settled by the rules of the Senate, I myself should hope that we would not have to depend upon some Senator making objection every time such a case arises.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think, Mr. President, that during my somewhat lengthy service in the Senate I never have asked to have any extracts from a newspaper printed in the RECORD. I think the RECORD will substantiate that statement. It occurs to me, however, that this is "a tempest in a teapot" this morning and that no good will result from it. A very brief editorial has been inserted in the RECORD, which the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] could himself have read, and the fact of its withdrawal will serve no good purpose.

There are times, Mr. President, as I look at the matter, when it is very important to put in the RECORD even the opinions of newspaper editors on great public questions. For that reason, and not having been an offender myself in this respect in the past—and I probably will not be in the future—I feel constrained to object to the request for the withdrawal which the Senator from California has made. He did not violate either the proprieties or the rules of the Senate in presenting and asking for the printing of the article, and there is no reason why he should be forced in any way, by criticism or otherwise, to ask for an unusual disposition of the matter. Therefore I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair is that under the rules of the Senate, if it is desired to have the Secretary read a paper, unless unanimous consent is given, it may be read by a vote of a majority of the Senators. The Senator from California asked unanimous consent to have the editorial read. There was no objection. It was read. The Chair holds that the same rule must apply with reference to the withdrawal of the matter from the RECORD—that it can not be withdrawn without unanimous consent. There is now a well-defined rule in the Senate that the Senate itself may determine whether papers shall or shall not be read into the RECORD.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 2774) for the relief of George B. Hughes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THORNTON:

A bill (S. 2775) to transfer Commander Arthur Bainbridge Hoff from the retired to the active list of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 2776) for the relief of Stilman Stotts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2777) granting an increase of pension to Thomas C. Rutter; and

A bill (S. 2778) granting a pension to Marshall Smithhart; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 2779) to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington or local subdivisions thereof; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 2780) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Hanover, in the State of New Hampshire; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 2781) providing for the recognition of certain persons, for rank only, as commissioned officers in the Civil War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2782) granting an increase of pension to Hamilton M. Steele (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 2783) for the relief of the estate of Edward Allsworth; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 2784) granting an increase of pension to Sidney Williams; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 2785) granting an increase of pension to Willet Van Winkle; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 2786) for the relief of the New England Steamship Co., owner of the American steamer Commonwealth; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2787) granting an increase of pension to Elinor F. Rodenbough (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A bill (S. 2788) for the relief of Templin Morris Potts, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) to discontinue the washing of money; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AMENDMENTS TO TARIFF BILL.

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADLEY submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE TARIFF—GOODS IN BOND.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I submit an amendment to the pending tariff bill, and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Strike out subdivision Q of Section V and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Q. That all goods, wares, and merchandise imported prior to the day when this act shall go into effect, for which no entry has been made, and all goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to the duties now in force upon the entry or the withdrawal thereof."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it is reported that there is now in bonded warehouses something over $100,000,000 worth of imported merchandise, most of which has been imported with a view of being held to await the passage of the pending bill, in order to take advantage of the lower duties that will be afforded by that bill. The duties upon those imported articles under existing law amount, I am informed, to about $35,000,000. Importations are going on all the time, and by the time this bill shall have been passed they will probably amount to more than double the quantity now on hand, with a consequent loss to the Treasury of the United States that nobody can accurately estimate, but which will amount to many million dollars.

In addition to that, there will be a vast accumulation of these goods in the country ready to be dumped upon the country immediately upon the passage of the tariff bill. I think it is worth while for the Senate to consider whether or not this amount of money should be saved to the Treasury, and whether or not the demoralization which, it seems to me, will result from the precipitation of this large quantity of goods upon the country at one time should be prevented. I ask that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President there is evidently some considerable force in what the Senator has said. He suggests a subject which well merits consideration. If the Senator desires his proposed amendment to the tariff bill to lie on the table, of course I have no objection; but I was about to suggest—it may not accord with his view—that it be referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to that being done, Mr. President. I ask that the proposed amendment be referred to the Finance Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SUBSTITUTE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I submit a proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute for House bill 3321, which I ask to have read, printed, and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Strike out the entire bill, including the enacting clause, and insert the following:

Whereas the Democratic Party is in control of the National Government; and

Whereas a tariff bill (H. R. 3321) is under consideration by the United States Senate; and

Whereas any tariff bill affects every citizen of the United States either favorably or adversely; and

Whereas the Democratic Party has repeatedly declared its adherence to the policy of referring national matters to the electorate; and

Whereas in several States now represented, in whole or in part, by Democratic Senators there is strong disapproval of some of the provisions in the pending bill: Therefore be it

Resolved, That further consideration of the bill be postponed until the first Monday of December, 1914, and that meanwhile the bill be submitted to a referendum of the legal voters of the United States at the State and congressional elections to be held during that year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

THE TARIFF—INCOME TAX.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to the pending tariff bill and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, on page 172, line 24, the word "March," and on page 172 all of line 1, and in line 2 the words "both dates inclusive" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the passage of this act."

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I shall ask to have the amendment referred to the Committee on Finance; but I should like to call the attention of the members of the majority of the committee who are here to the precise point of the amendment. I do not see the chairman of the committee here.

Mr. SMOOT. He is absent.

Mr. ROOT. I see that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is present, however.

Mr. STONE. I beg the Senator's pardon. My attention was called away.

Mr. ROOT. I have introduced a brief amendment to the tariff bill, which I shall ask to have referred to the Committee on Finance; but I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the precise point of the amendment. It is an amendment to the provision that the income tax shall be computed on incomes accruing from March 1 to December 31, 1913.

I think that provision will encounter very serious question. The change I propose is to have the income for the first year computed from the passage of the act, rather than from a fixed date—March 1, 1913.

The reason why I think it would be wise to make the change is that all direct taxes must be apportioned unless they come within the amendment relating to an income tax. We can impose a tax upon incomes without apportioning it because of the amendment, but we can not impose any other direct tax without apportionment. When income is received it immediately becomes principal. The income that was received on the 1st day of July of the present year, having been received, became principal, and no law hereafter can tax it without apportionment, any more than we can tax now the income that was received 10 years ago without apportionment. It is principal, and comes under the old provision of the Constitution requiring the apportionment of direct taxes, and not under the amendment which allows the taxing of income without apportionment.

So if the bill becomes a law with the provision in it that has been reported from the committee you will find yourselves endeavoring in one sentence to tax income that comes under the amendment, and to tax past income, income received, reduced to possession, and turned into principal before the passage of the act, and that you can not do without apportionment.

It is to avoid that difficulty, which I am sure is very serious, that I propose the amendment which I now ask to have referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that of course the Committee on Finance will be more than glad to have suggestions of an important character, such as have been made this morning by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], referred to the committee, with the very clear and intelligent explanations of their views, which have been put in the RECORD, in order that they may be considered, and they will be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

DEMOTION OF RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

On motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, it was Ordered, That the papers relative to the demotion of clerks in the Railway Mail Service, which were sent to the Senate in response to Senate resolution No. 460, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and which have been mainly printed in two parts, as Senate Document No. 1130, Sixty-second Congress, third session, be returned to the Postmaster General in accordance with his request of July 15, 1913.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In accordance with the notice which I have heretofore given, I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. Res. 137) was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate shall be amended as follows:

(1) Change the paragraph which now reads "A Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, to consist of five Senators," so as to read "A Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, to consist of five Senators."

(2) Insert after the paragraph which reads "A Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, to consist of five Senators," a new paragraph, to read as follows: "A Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor, to consist of five Senators."

(3) Insert after the paragraph which reads "A Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to consist of five Senators," a new paragraph, to read as follows: "A Committee on Roads, to consist of 17 Senators."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules and printed.

WASHED PAPER MONEY.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present matter which I ask may be printed in the RECORD. Acting upon the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I have consolidated or boiled down my five hundred and seventy-odd letters to 12 or a few more, and I ask that I may be granted permission to print them in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIANA.

FORT WAYNE.

DANGEROUS TO MAKE ANY CHANGES.

HAMILTON NATIONAL BANK,
Fort Wayne, Ind., March 29, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am very glad to receive the pamphlet entitled "Washed Money," and have read it with interest. When it was reported that the last administration proposed to change our currency in the manner described, and intended to reduce the size of the notes, I wondered what could be the reasons for so doing, by what authority, for I had never seen any act of Congress authorizing such changes.

I think our present currency is generally artistic, the engraving, I presume, up to the highest standard, and the manufacture of the paper under the sole control of the Government. The present size of notes are most conveniently handled by bank tellers and all others who distribute large sums.

What reason can there be for making any change, except, as is stated, a saving of a small amount in paper, and this saving would be absorbed for a long time by the cost of new plates. The profit that the Government makes by the destruction of notes in all manner of ways is certainly very much more than the cost of keeping bright new notes in circulation, for the washing business is, as you state, a strange economical proceeding for a great Government like ours. The Bank of England never pays out a note the second time; this proceeding may be extreme, but certainly the Government is rich enough and should have pride enough to keep in circulation fairly clean bills. I hope all the attempts of the last administration to change the style or size of our currency will be countermanded by Mr. McAdoo, and I think all such changes should be authorized by an act of Congress only when experts upon such matters can give good reasons for so doing.

FINE ENGRAVING AND PAPER BAFFLES COUNTERFEITERS.

Counterfeiters have found it impossible to do any work that has not been quickly detected. This is because such care has been exercised by the Government, both in engraving and paper. It is certainly dangerous to make any changes, particularly such as the last administration contemplated.

For many years in my younger days I was a bank teller (before the Civil War, when we had the greatest variety of bank notes and since the Government took charge); I paid considerable attention to the matter of engraving, and I believe the work now done in this line is beyond criticism in both mechanical work and design.

I am very glad that Senator MARTINE is giving this matter his personal attention, and hope he will prevent any changes. I look with confidence to the work of the new administration in all departments, from President Wilson down.

Respectfully, yours, CHARLES MCCULLOCH, President.

HISTORIC PICTURES SHOULD NOT BE ABANDONED.

THE UNION TRUST CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind., March 21, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 8th, inclosing the article on washed money. I do not know much about washed money, but the idea has never appealed to me as a good one. But I am in complete sympathy with the article in reference to the abandonment of historic pictures on bills and the reduction in size. Our money has seemed to me to be almost perfect, and some of the notes have far surpassed anything I have ever seen in artistic design and beauty of finish. The size, too, is just what it should be, and I think if the small bills are introduced they will not give anything like the satisfaction the others have done.

Yours, very truly, JOHN H. HOLLIDAY.

HARRISBURG.

AMOUNTS TO HINDRANCE TO BUSINESS.

HARRISBURG, PA., March 21, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor inclosing Senate document entitled "Washed Money, the Counterfeiter's Delight" (and have read it with a great deal of interest), and asking me to furnish to you my views with respect to same.

The experiment of the United States Government of washing its paper money is probably a monetary saving, as far as the Government is concerned, inasmuch as it defers the issuance of new notes in lieu of the old ones turned in for redemption; but as far as the public is concerned it amounts to a hindrance to business, and it is to be hoped that the Government authorities will reconsider the step it has taken and abandon the project.

WASHED MONEY RELUCTANTLY ACCEPTED.

In the bank with which I am connected, in this city, I am advised by one of its employees that washed money is reluctantly accepted by those to whom it is tendered. Many who are accustomed to handling money—i. e., store clerks, shop dealers, etc.—are somewhat skeptical and dubious about it. The expert, however, does not hesitate, but the public in general does, and the public is depended upon for the circulation of the money.

A VERY INTERESTING AND SUGGESTIVE INCIDENT.

One of the bank's employees stated to the writer the following incident, which shows the inadequacy of the Government's new venture—that of washing money.

"A sum of money amounting to several hundred dollars—all in notes—was handed to the clerk, and in the center of the bundle was a washed note. The clerk hesitated a moment to examine the note. The depositor to whom the money belonged asked the clerk to return the note to him, and gave him another one in return. The clerk being somewhat surprised at the depositor's action asked him the reason, and he stated that one of his clerks had taken the note in payment of a purchase and doubted its genuineness, and he was afraid the bank clerk might mark the note 'counterfeit,' and he hastily withdrew it in order that he might make further investigation in regard to it."

I have no doubt that this incident is one of many that is happening every day, and it should discourage the Government to continue the washing of money for the reason that it is detrimental to the business welfare of the country.

Yours, very truly, C. H. BACKENSTOE.

PROPHESIES RETURN TO HAND-PRINTED BILLS.

THE DIME SAVINGS BANK,
Brooklyn, N. Y., March 31, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Beg to acknowledge receipt of yours recently received, inclosing article from The Plate Printer relative to washed money.

At your request I will briefly state in reference thereto that nearly a quarter of a century's experience in observing and handling of money, etc., leads me to believe that this action will work to a very great disadvantage with the money-handling public. It would appear to me that the small saving accomplished by this method of washing was as nothing compared with the risk involved. Nearly every counterfeit we meet with is the faded and worn kind. It is seldom that a counterfeit has a chance of passing when it is new and crisp. In fact, it would appear that counterfeiters give them the worn and faded appearance purposely before floating them.

SMALLER SIZED BILLS ALSO IN INTEREST OF COUNTERFEITERS.

As to machine printing, I prophesy that within a twelve month after the experiment is begun they will have to go back to hand-printed man's size bills. Here, too, it would seem that the small saving in paper is as nothing compared to the convenience of the present bill. Anyone familiar with the handling of money knows that half the surety in discovering counterfeit money is that indescribable "feel" when the bill is passed through the fingers. With the new bills, as proposed, I feel sure it will be impossible to slide them through the hand in the present manner; it will be necessary, I feel sure, to "thumb" them. In the "thumbing" method of counting there is absolutely no chance for the "feel" referred to above. I have tried pieces of paper cut to the size proposed, and it does not seem to me that it will be possible to handle the proposed bills in the old way.

And further, think of the chance during the years when the new size currency is being gradually worked into the system there will be for the new small bills to be slipped in between the larger bills through error.

MACHINE PRINTING SMUDGY, MISERABLE WORK.

As to machine printing, see what smudgy, miserable work is shown on beer and cigar stamps. Nothing, I believe, has ever been invented to take the place of the pad which nature has placed on the human hand for the wiping off of the plate after the ink has been applied. Thanking you for this chance to express myself, I am,

Yours, very truly,

C. M. LOWES, Treasurer.

WANT FIRST-CLASS CURRENCY.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Waverly, N. Y., February 3, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your circular on washed money received and read with interest. A number of years ago I prepared an article on the subject of the different forms of currency we were issuing, believing that we had too many varieties, which gave the counterfeiters opportunities to ply their trade, and I think the point you raise in regard to washed money is very important.

I think I can give you another argument against this plan; that is, that up to 1908 the national banks had paid in to the Government $180,000,000 in taxes for various purposes, largely upon circulation, and the expenses of the department for the same term, chargeable to this fund, were only $23,000,000, leaving $157,000,000 which the Government has taken. Since 1908 I think the banks have paid something over $10,000,000 of the same kind of taxes, and the expenses have been very small in comparison.

BANKS PAY ALL EXPENSES.

In this you will note that the banks are paying all expenses, and there is no reason why the Government should come in and allow the issue of anything but a fine class of note issues, especially as to work.

Hoping that you will secure a change in this plan and that they will give us first-class currency hereafter, I am,

Very truly, yours, F. B. LYFORD.

NEW YORK CITY.

MAKES MORE DIFFICULT TO DETECT COUNTERFEITERS.

THE FIFTH AVENUE BANK.
New York, April 11, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE.
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your Senate Document No. 1020 is quite correct in so far as it relates to the washing of our paper currency.

Our teller says that it is much more difficult to detect a counterfeit now that washed bills are in circulation. Aside from the fact that a washed bill has lost in some slight degree the sharpness of the engraving, the paper has been changed in a way difficult to describe, so that it is very similar to the paper of most counterfeits, and therefore the delicacy of touch by which a counterfeit is often detected is apt to be lost or greatly diminished.

TELLER'S WORK VERY TRYING.

I have had an experience of more than 50 years in banking, and in the early sixties was a teller in a bank in Poughkeepsie, N. Y. The difficulty of detecting counterfeits, and the vast number of them in circulation then made the teller's position very trying. The Government has changed all that by better engraving and by issuing new plates without stint whenever successful counterfeits appear, and by the unremitting pursuit of counterfeiters, as, for instance, in the celebrated Pennsylvania case in which Detective Burns was so successful.

It seems a pity to diminish the safeguards against counterfeits to save the cost of destroying old bills and issuing new ones in their place. The rule of the Bank of England never to reissue a note, but to redeem and destroy all notes they receive, even if fresh, is, in my opinion, a great hindrance to counterfeiting.

Thanking you for your interest in the subject, I am,

Yours, very truly,

A. S. FRISSELL.

MANAGER NEW YORK CLEARING HOUSE CONDEMNS WASHED MONEY.

NEW YORK CLEARING HOUSE,
New York, March 25, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying with your favor asking for an expression of opinion on Document 1020, United States Senate, I have the honor to say that I consider it a very well-expressed argument against the washed-money scheme.

I can see no good reason for the adoption of that plan. As you truly say, it aids the counterfeiters' industry and will cause great loss to the people, larger, I believe, than will be saved by this mere experiment of washing.

SMALLER NOTES CONDEMNED.

In the important matter of the issuance of currency by the Government, I feel warranted, after a practical experience of 50 years in the handling of currency as a bank clerk, as a Treasury official, and manager of the New York Clearing House, in expressing warmly my objection to the plan to shorten and curtail the size of the currency notes of the Government, as I believe it will lead to confusion in the handling of money by the banks. The volume is exceedingly large, and if it is composed of mixed sizes of bills it will cause not only a loss of time but great risk of miscount and error.

Trusting that these experiments will not be tried, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

WM. SHERER,
Manager New York Clearing House Association.

DEAR SIR: With reference to Senate Document No. 1020, "Washed Money," beg to advise that this bank would much prefer paying its proportionate part for the printing of new money and do away with washing the old money. SENATE DOCUMENT EXPRESSES HIS VIEWS.

LIVE STOCK NATIONAL BANK,
South Omaha, Nebr., March 11, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of a copy of your Senate document entitled "Washed Money," which I have read with much interest and great pleasure, and which expresses my views upon the questions involved better than I could have expressed them myself.

When the proposed change in the form of our currency was first advanced by Secretary MacVeagh, I filed strenuous objections, but they received scant courtesy. Have also written Secretary McAdoo repeating my objections, copy of letter being herewith inclosed.

A SHAME TO GO BACK TO "SHINPLASTERS."

It would seem a shame that our great Government should go back to the issuing of "shinplasters," and street-car transfers in the form of currency, simply for the purpose of saving a few dollars expense, the larger part of which has heretofore been borne by the national banks without complaint, so far as I know, upon their part. If a part of the expense which is devoted to the franking of congressional mail and advertisements for muckraking magazines were devoted to the sending of new currency to the banks throughout the country, it would seem to be better for all.

It is said that the Bank of England never reissues a note after it has once been returned to the bank, even though it has never left the banking room.

SECRETARY MACVEAGH'S INSPIRATION.

I think the late Secretary of the Treasury, in making the order to change the form of our currency, was actuated by the same motive as the ruler of a country who orders the profile changed on the coin that his reign may be remembered.

I sincerely trust that you may be able to bring enough pressure to bear upon Secretary McAdoo to prevent the proposed change in our form of currency, and also stop the laundering of our money, which is a disgrace to our Government.

Respectfully, yours,

C. F. MCGREW, President.

SINCERELY OPPOSED TO WASHED MONEY.

THE GEORGE D. HARTER BANK,
Canton, Ohio, March 14, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,

DEAR MR. MARTINE: Your letter of March 8, inclosing printed matter on washed money, received. I read the contents of this folder some time ago and I heartily indorse all that was said in the subject matter, and I sincerely am opposed to washed money. Our tellers are having a great deal of difficulty examining these bills when presented for deposit. The currency after treatment is faded and presents anything but a perfect piece of work.

WILL BE COUNTERFEITER'S DELIGHT.

It certainly will be the counterfeiter's delight and probably be a great loss to the general public. I hope this practice will be eliminated immediately. Let us not lower the standard of our currency system.

WRONG KIND OF ECONOMY.

FIRST CITY BANK,
Pomeroy, Ohio, March 19, 1913.

Senator JAMES E. MARTINE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your secretary has sent us the article you had printed on washed money, with the suggestion that our views would be welcome, and we are very glad to express them.

We are against the whole plan of washing money and we consider it a wrong kind of economy. We think it is wrong in principle and a step in the wrong direction. We rather favor an increased expenditure in the direction of putting new money in the people's hands. The money in circulation even this far West is far too dirty to be a credit to the Government, and in other sections we have heard it is even worse. And so far we have had no washed money to contend with—no doubt it will be even worse if the washed money reaches this locality. It will not reach us, however, through any of the local banks, I am sure, for none of them would receive any such bills from their city correspondents if they should attempt to force them on our community.

FAVORS A MORE LIBERAL POLICY.

Instead of trying to save money in this way, at the cost of untold annoyance and suspicion about every washed bill, we would favor a more liberal policy in the way of making it easier and cheaper for country banks to get new money from the Government—absolutely new money, no other.

Respectfully,

W. G. PLANTZ,
Assistant Cashier.

THE GERMAN-AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK,
St. Joseph, Mo., April 10, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have read your pamphlet referring to washed money and wish to state that it is very poor economy for our Government to wash its currency, and it is extremely dangerous to have such washed currency in circulation, and I hope a united effort will be made to discontinue the washing of our currency and give us the highest product of new bills that the artist's skill can produce, as the public is entitled to this.

Thanking you for your efforts in this direction, and trusting that the Government will at an early date discontinue the washing of currency, I am,

DULLS BILLS, BLURS THE INK, AND ENCOURAGES COUNTERFEITERS.

THE CITIZENS NATIONAL BANK,
Tilton, N. H., March 27, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Having received a copy of Washed Money, published as Senate Document No. 1020, and an invitation being thereby extended to do so, I will briefly give you my opinion.

Our currency is, in my opinion, the finest product of the engraver's art in the world.

As such it is poor economy to undertake to spoil that effect by any washing process. My observation is that it dulls the bill, blurs some of the ink, and gives such an appearance as to encourage counterfeiters to imitate the same, which can be more readily done with washed currency than unwashed.

The Bank of England never pays out the same bill twice, but retires it when returned to the bank, even if it comes back the same day. This is an extreme treatment of the same, as, of course, new currency is still usable. On the other hand, we go to the other extreme, and currency is in use to-day that is positively filthy.

It is impossible to count up $2,000 of the average currency as it comes in over the counter without so soiling the hands that they need "washing."

DO NOT WASH, BUT DESTROY FILTHY BILLS.

If the Bank of England can afford to destroy over 90 tons of paper frequently, as it does, from the failure to reissue currency, I believe that the United States can afford to destroy filthy currency rather than to attempt to go into the laundry business.

From the standpoint of a banker of some years, having never known any other business, and with the memory of having been taught to sit on a high stool at 6 years and count money for my father, who died with an honorable record of 45 years of continuous service, I fully think that we would better study how to make our currency better by retiring the old, rather than to try to save a few dollars at the expense of public safety.

If a bank man can be deceived by the washing process, what about the rank and file of people who do not, and can not, tell a good counterfeit?

Enough said, perhaps.

I thank you for the opportunity.

Yours, very truly,

ARTHUR N. CASS, Cashier.

LITCHFIELD.

BLEACHED AND WASHED-OUT APPEARANCE.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Litchfield, March 24, 1913.

Senator JAMES E. MARTINE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Wish to acknowledge receipt of article on washed currency. In reply to same would say that we do not favor this washing process at all. In the first place, the bills present a bleached and washed-out appearance, and, in the second place, it is a matter of small expense to have fresh, new currency. We are far inland and a great number of the bills in circulation are torn, ragged, and dirty, and it would only be fair that whatever bills are put in circulation that they should be new, and, in the third place, we should guard, as well as possible, from counterfeiting, which would be comparatively easy with a large amount of washed bills in circulation.

Before closing, would like to urge the necessity of currency legislation as soon as possible. Every fall, in crop-moving time, we are taxed to our fullest capacity, and it seems absurd that business operations should be slowed down because we have not got the currency to transact the business of the country. The panic of 1907 was in the fall in the midst of crop-moving time, and with us was a currency panic and nothing more. The twin-city banks were shipping currency into the interior for crop-moving purposes until they had none left.

The trouble with the Vreeland law is that this is not put into operation until there is a panic. Can not some constructive legislation be enacted whereby the necessary currency is furnished to transact the commercial business of the country, and when the stress is over that it be retired from circulation? Whether this is accomplished by a central bank, clearing-house associations, or rediscount associations, with the privilege of issuing currency, is of little moment to the most of us as long as we get the results.

Yours, truly,

A. W. KRON, Cashier.

DEAR SIR: We have yours of the 28th ultimo in reference to the washing of currency proposition, and in our opinion it seems to be a dangerous and risky thing to do, considering the apparent ease with which these bills may be counterfeited, and, in our opinion, no question of economy or saving to the Government within any reasonable limit should be considered if by so doing it would in any way, to the slightest degree, render our circulating medium unsafe and easy to imitate.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,

DEAR SIR: I have read with considerable interest your pamphlet on washed money. I am surprised that a Government like ours, with all the pride we have along other lines, should stoop to the practice of "washing money" for the purpose of saving a few dollars. It is a disgrace to the country, and will cheapen our money and help to bring our currency into disrepute. I am sure the people would not stand for it a minute if left to a vote. Do all you can to stop it. The efficiency of the engraving should never be less, either. Counterfeiting will be rampant when the washed money is in circulation.

YANKTON.

APPRECIATE NEW CURRENCY.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Yankton, S. Dak., March 11, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of February 28 received relative to the document printed at the request of Senator JAMES E. MARTINE, of New Jersey, on January 20, 1913, entitled "Washed Money, the Counterfeiters' Delight," and in reply to same will state that we are strongly opposed to washing our currency, for the following reasons:

First. We live in the West and have very little new currency, and practically the only new currency we have is what we get from Washington on account of our $50,000 circulation, and the farmers being the people with whom we deal and depend upon mostly, appreciate what little new currency we have to give them, and we find that this washed currency does not take its place.

OPPOSED TO REDUCING HIGH STANDARD.

Second. We are opposed to the Government trying to reduce their expenses in the currency department, for the reason that our present currency has a high standard, and, in our opinion, it would be folly to run any risk of reducing this standard which our currency has attained by taking any risks by counterfeiters imitating these washed bills.

We have discovered no counterfeit bills and possibly would not know them if we had, but can see where it is logical that these washed bills would be easier to imitate than the new currency where the cuts are clear and distinct.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD BE SATISFIED WITH ENORMOUS PROFITS.

Third. The Government realizes enormous profits from the manufacture of paper currency, and our present currency system has paid the Government many dollars in profit, and from the action they have taken one would think they are not satisfied with the millions of dollars of profit or rather accumulations which they have made in the past. Why they should cut down the high standard of this department we can not understand, unless it is for the purpose of increasing the enormous profits which they now have.

Fourth. In closing I wish to state that we are in favor of a revision of our present currency system, although this does not come under the topic upon which you asked us to write. I take the liberty to give you our expression on the question.

Very truly, yours,

E. R. HEATON,
Assistant Cashier.

DEAR SIR: We have read Document No. 1020, entitled "Washed money," with much interest, and as a banking institution with 60 years' experience we are very much opposed to the scheme to use washed currency. It would be a crime to cheapen the quality of our paper money, and it would certainly be difficult to detect counterfeits if the idea were carried into effect.

UNWISE TO CHANGE THE SIZE.

MY DEAR MR. MARTINE: I am glad of the opportunity to express to you my views on the money question. It only requires the application of a little gray matter for any intelligent man to see that by making the engravings coarser and cheaper and washing away the life of the bill it makes the work of the counterfeiter more easy. Changing the size of bills is another serious mistake, as they can not be put up in packages with the large bills and will cause all kinds of confusion and mistakes. The United States is able and should use the finest work of the engravers' art on its money. Educational pictures are especially desirable.

CONFIDENCE OF PEOPLE SHOULD NOT BE SHAKEN.

SANDFORD & KELLEY, BANKERS,
New Bedford, Mass., April 2, 1913.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours at hand, and in reply we beg to state that we are not in favor of the reissuing of washed money, as we believe that the confidence of the people should in no way be shaken through the possibility of any measure that would make it easier for counterfeiters to ply their profession and circulate their counterfeits. In the rush of business as it is done these days people should not have to stop to examine washed bills; and, further, we are paying too much money to protect the country from the wiles of the counterfeiter to let down the bars at this time, or, in fact, at any time. The Government should go to the limit to protect the handlers of the money which they have issued and in which the people place confidence.

Yours, very truly,

SANDFORD & KELLEY.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On July 9, 1913:

S. 2272. An act providing for an increase in the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy after June 30, 1913.

On July 15, 1913:

S. 2517. An act providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees.

SALARY OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 132, relative to the salary of the Secretary of State.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that under the rules a motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable.

Mr. BRISTOW. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. BURLEIGH'S name was called). The junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is detained from the Senate on account of protracted illness. That Senator is not paired, and I am going to express the hope that a pair may be arranged so that he may be protected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I therefore withhold my vote. I am in favor of the motion, however, and should vote "yea" if I were at liberty to do so.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. CULBERSON'S name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when Mr. REED'S name was called). I desire to state that my colleague, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], is absent from the Senate on official business in connection with what is known as the lobby committee. He is paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia (when Mr. SWANSON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SWANSON] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I learn that he is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] are unavoidably absent from the city.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is absent, being on duty with the investigating committee. During his absence I have undertaken to protect him. I rose to withdraw my vote and stand paired with him upon this question, but I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and will permit my vote to stand as originally cast.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] is absent on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted in the affirmative, forgetting that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON]. Therefore I must withdraw my vote; but if at liberty to vote I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—41.

Ashurst	Johnson, Me.	Pittman	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Johnston, Ala.	Poindexter	Stone
Borah	Kern	Pomerene	Thomas
Bryan	Lane	Ransdell	Thompson
Chilton	Lewis	Robinson	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Tillman
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gore	Myers	Sheppard	Williams
Hollis	O'Gorman	Shields
Hughes	Overman	Shively
James	Owen	Smith, Ariz.

NAYS—29.

Bradley	Cummins	Lodge	Sterling
Brady	Dillingham	McLean	Sutherland
Brandegee	Fall	Norris	Townsend
Bristow	Gallinger	Page	Warren
Burton	Gronna	Penrose	Weeks
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Root
Colt	Kenyon	Sherman
Crawford	Lippitt	Smoot

NOT VOTING—26.

Bankhead	Goff	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Burleigh	Hitchcock	Oliver	Stephenson
Catron	Jackson	Perkins	Swanson
Chamberlain	La Follette	Reed	Walsh
Clapp	Lea	Simmons	Works
Culberson	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
du Pont	Nelson	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. BRISTOW'S resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: When the vote was taken on the motion to lay the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] upon the table, I was out of the Chamber, having been called into the reception room. I came in after the call had been finished and voted. I did so in entire forgetfulness of the fact that I had a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I could have transferred my pair, I find, to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], and thus it could have been covered. I wish to make this explanation because it was my fault, and I very deeply regret it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that our Democratic friends may be able to stop the discussion in this Chamber of this resolution by the action just taken, but they can not convince the American people that a member of the Cabinet can neglect his official duties and go out over the country in other employment when his services are needed in his department in Washington.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. What does the gentleman discuss?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. LEWIS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire what is the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution has been laid on the table, and the Chair holds that its discussion is out of order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will discuss something else, then.

Mr. LEWIS. I call for the regular order.

COTTON TIES AND COTTON BAGGING.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 134, calling for an investigation by the Secretary of Commerce into the advance of the price of bagging.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, as I was saying, the Senate may dispose of one resolution, but other resolutions appear, and as long as there is freedom of discussion in the Senate a Senator may talk within the rules upon the resolution that is pending.

It would be just as consistent for the Attorney General to take two or three months of his time during the year and engage in the practice of law as for the Secretary of State to follow his private business to the neglect of his duty.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRISTOW. For what purpose does the Senator from Montana rise?

Mr. MYERS. I rose to make a parliamentary inquiry. What is the regular order, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution now pending before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. What resolution is it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has already been stated. It is Senate resolution 134.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the reading of it, please.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SMITH of South Carolina on the 15th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and is hereby, directed to investigate the recent advance in price of bagging used in baling cotton, also the advance in price of ties used in banding or baling cotton, and to report to the Senate at the earliest possible time the cause or causes for said advances.

Mr. MYERS. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I object to the resolution. Let it go over one day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss at length the resolution that is pending, but I think there is a condition before the country that should demand the attention of Congress and of the administration in power. Can the members of the Cabinet, with business of the highest public importance pending, commanding the most careful and industrious attention of the entire administration, absent themselves from their departments and go about the country in private business for profit and gain, because the salary paid of $12,000 a year is not enough to sustain them, and leave subordinates that draw from $5,000 to $7,000 a year to do the work that they are supposed to be doing?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. For what purpose does the Senator from Mississippi rise?

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Are you really apprehensive that the business of the State Department will be neglected by the absence of the Secretary of State?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, Mr. President, that is a pertinent question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the Senator will give me a very candid answer to it, because he is always candid.

Mr. BRISTOW. It has been said since this discussion came up that the department was better off with the present Secretary of State away than at home. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is your opinion about that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will enforce order in the galleries or clear them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is your opinion?

Mr. BRISTOW. I believe that if the present Secretary of State would devote his time and bring to bear on the problems that confront his department his great intellect he could render substantial service to his country. Whether there are men more fitted to perform the duties of Secretary of State, who are holding subordinate positions upon whom the duties now rest, than the Secretary of State himself, is a question which I can not answer, because I am not acquainted with the subordinates. I have endeavored to answer the Senator's question as clearly as I can. I could consume hours of the time of the Senate in the discussion of this question, but I do not intend to do it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask of the Senator who is now addressing the Senate, as throwing some light on the question asked by the Senator from Mississippi, if it is not possible that if the Secretary of State had remained in his office attending to his duties the Senate of the United States might not ere this have had an answer to a resolution adopted by this body on April 24, 1913, which so far has been treated with silent contempt?

I refer the Senator to the resolution offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], reported favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations, unanimously adopted by this body, April 24, calling upon the President of the United States to furnish to this body information as follows:

Senate resolution 62.

Resolved, That the President is respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to cause to be transmitted to the Senate:

First. A full list of the names of claimants, if any, and the nature and amount of the claims for damages to person or property made by citizens of the United States of America against the Republic of Mexico and filed or deposited with the Department of State at Washington, D. C., since the beginning of the Madero revolution in Mexico to the present time, together with the statement of fact on which said claims are based.

Second. A full list of the names of all citizens of these United States, if any, who, while leading lawful and peaceful lives in Mexico, have been killed or wounded in Mexico or driven out of Mexico by Mexican soldiers or other armed bands on Mexican soil, together with the facts and circumstances attending such killing, wounding, or forceful deportation.

Third. A full list, if any, of such peaceful citizens of the United States of America as have been forcibly seized and held prisoners for ransom in the Republic of Mexico during the time first mentioned, and what sums of money, if any, have been paid by any person or persons to secure the release of anyone so imprisoned or held.

Fourth. What redress, if any, has been offered by Mexico in the premises, or demanded by the United States of America, and the result of such offer or demand, and what assurance of protection to the lives and property of our peaceful, law-abiding citizens in Mexico does that Republic offer.

Mr. President, I submit the question to the Senator from Kansas as to whether, in his opinion, if the Secretary of State, rather than delivering lectures upon the Chautauqua platform, were to remain in the city of Washington and to attend to his business, it might not have been possible for the Senate to receive ere this the information which it demanded from the department? I presume that when the Senate unanimously requested the information it was with the idea in view that it was of interest to the people of the United States and possibly necessary in the consideration of very grave and important subjects which may at a very early day come before Congress.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I think that if the department had been as industriously managed as it should have been we would have had that information ere this.

I want to say further that it has been the custom for years, when constituents of Members of the House and Senators are about to proceed abroad, to get letters of introduction, in order that our citizens when they are in foreign countries may call upon our consular agents for any information that they might desire. That is what we keep agents in foreign countries for. The American people pay our Consular Service to serve them in various capacities. It has been the practice since I have been a Member of the Senate to have very prompt replies to such requests. In recent months, upon at least one occasion, I made such a request for a constituent and I did not get the reply until some weeks afterwards, when my constituent had sailed.

This is not a partisan discussion on my part. I desire to read an editorial from the New York World of July 17. Certainly the New York World can not be regarded as a paper that is unfriendly to this administration and that would pass an unjust criticism upon any of the President's Cabinet officers. The editorial reads as follows:

[From the New York World, July 17, 1913.]

A DEPLORABLE MISTAKE.

It is of course obvious that Mr. Bryan's explanation of his money-making lecture plans readily explains what can not be readily excused.

He says that he is going to limit his profits to his vacation. The last thing he should be thinking about at this time is a vacation.

The Mexican crisis alone makes any talk of a vacation little short of an insult to his office.

We earnestly believe that when the present administration reversed the former policy of dollar diplomacy and substituted the diplomacy of minding our own business in international affairs it was a splendid reform.

But this policy of hands off illegitimate diplomatic problems should make it all the more essential for the State Department to devote a full measure of time and attention to legitimate diplomatic problems. Otherwise there may arise grave doubts in the public mind as to where a policy of conviction ends and where a policy of convenience begins.

As for Mr. Bryan's financial sacrifices, they constitute a question which should have interested Mr. Bryan before he accepted the portfolio of State and which can not be expected to interest the public now.

That the public has a right to take the same view that Thomas Jefferson did in his letter to Richard Henry Lee, which Mr. Bryan possibly remembers, in which he said:

"In a virtuous government, and more especially in times like these, public offices are what they should be, burthens to those appointed to them, which it would be wrong to decline, though foreseen to bring with them intense labor and great private loss."

I do not want to give this discussion a partisan tinge, but I want to ask my Democratic friends if they do not think that the New York World, when it commended to Mr. Bryan the ideals of Jefferson, did a very fitting and proper thing in the interest of the administration now in power? Has the time come in American politics when the question of the profits of public office is the uppermost thing in the mind of high public officials?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. STONE. The Senator asked a question. I should like to ask him a question for my personal information. The Senator has been a very distinguished and influential Member of this body for five or six years. Has the Senator from Kansas during his service here delivered Chautauqua lectures or other speeches for pay?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have not delivered Chautauqua addresses or other speeches for pay at any time when the Senate was in session or my public duties required my attention.

Mr. STONE. The question I asked was whether during his service——

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say further to the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from Kansas has been present in this Chamber every day that this body has been in session since it met last December, and has not absented himself for any personal or private reason or for any other cause.

Mr. STONE. The one question I asked the Senator has not been answered. I ask him if during his service here in the Senate he has delivered speeches for which he has received pay.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have delivered speeches during the vacations of the Senate occasionally for which I received pay.

Mr. STONE. Then the Senator belongs to the Chautauqua lecture class.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say that I have refused invitations this year and last year that would have aggregated at least half as much, I will say, as Mr. Bryan says he hopes to make. I refused them because I felt that I owed it to my country and my State to stay here and attend to my business while the Senate was in session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. Will my friend the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. I certainly will.

Mr. ASHURST. Has the Senator from Kansas always entertained the views which he now urges?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have.

Mr. ASHURST. I have a letter, purporting to have been written by the Senator, containing the following words, addressed to Chester I. Long, then a Senator of the United States:

WASHINGTON, May 27, 1906.

DEAR SENATOR: I wrote you briefly last night. Received your letter to-day. If there was a vacancy in some desirable office, and you or Will White were here the day it was available, the President would appoint me to it, but otherwise no one knows what he might do.

He asked me what I wanted. I told him that I did not know what was available. He said he did not either, and for me to see Taft as soon as he returned. I think I would like to have one of those advisory places on the Canal Commission. They pay $7,500 and require a visit to the Isthmus once in three months. I could hold it and live in Kansas, being there at least half my time, and when the fight got hot, I could resign.

Did the Senator write that letter?

Mr. BRISTOW. I wrote that letter. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will preserve order in the galleries. This is the second notice, and the Chair instructs the Sergeant at Arms to see that this order is obeyed or clear the galleries.

Mr. BRISTOW. And it is not at all inconsistent, and nothing connected with that letter, directly or indirectly, is inconsistent with the position I take now. I will say to the Senator from Arizona, my friend, that that letter has been hawked about in every township in the State of Kansas for 10 years.

Mr. ASHURST. No; it was written in 1906.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, since 1906. I think it is approximately 10 years; something less, probably.

Mr. LODGE. Eight years.

Mr. BRISTOW. It was circulated in every voting precinct in Kansas when I was a candidate for the United States Senate against the gentleman to whom it was written, and as a result I came to this body by the vote of the majority of the people in the primaries and of the majority of the people in the State. I stand here now and proclaim that, in my judgment, it is the business of a public official, when he is paid from the Public Treasury to transact public business, to be at his post of duty and to attend to the business for the transaction of which he is paid.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BRISTOW. And I want to say to the Senator from Arizona, since he has been so kind as to bring up some old political campaign letters——

Mr. ASHURST. I merely wanted to see if the Senator had changed his views.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have the floor. I want to say to the Senator from Arizona, who has been so kind as to bring up some of the old political campaign documents that were circulated in Kansas years ago, that since I have been a Member of this body I have not expended a hundred dollars a day of the funds of the United States to carry private telegrams to my State on personal political business.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Kansas has not been in touch with his constituents as much as his duty would require.

Mr. BRISTOW. Not by carrying on private correspondence by telegraph when it should have been by letter and carried at his own expense.

Mr. ASHURST. I fail to catch the Senator's statement.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Arizona doubts my statement, I refer him to the records of the Secretary of the Senate relating to the Senator from Arizona and his own private account with the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BRISTOW. I very gladly yield.

Mr. ASHURST. It does not require any abstruse lines of reasoning to ascertain that my friend, in a moment of heat, seems to be obsessed with the idea that I have been too much in communication with my constituents by means of the telegraph; but if the Senator from Kansas means to insinuate that I have used the telegraph, or aught else, sir, other than in a public way and in a proper way—if the Senator from Kansas dares to assert here or elsewhere that I have ever used the mails of this country or the telegraph of this country other than in a proper way, the Senator insinuates something that is wholly baseless, false, and without foundation. It is true that I write 200 letters a day during certain times. I recall at one time that I sent over 700 letters and over 100 telegrams in one day. Does the Senator from Kansas object to that? I remember one day I telegraphed every newspaper in Arizona—about 55 in all—asking their assistance in trying to bring about an advisory election to ascertain just whom the people's choice was for United States judge for Arizona. There was no necessity for my friend to lose his head.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Kansas has not lost his head, and if the Senator from Arizona is through, I will answer the question which he asked me a few moments ago.

Mr. ASHURST. There was no occasion for my friend——

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Kansas has not lost his head at all. He knows just what he is saying.

Mr. ASHURST. I trust the Senator does, but there was no occasion for his losing his head and his heart over this matter. I simply desired to know whether the Senator had changed the position which he occupied in 1906, when he said that he would draw the salary and live in Kansas, being there at least half the time, and when the fight got hot he could resign. The Senator does not usually resign when the fight gets hot. He fights instead of resigning. What I wanted to know was had the Senator changed his position, and I do not think I have violated the proprieties of debate or of the occasion in asking the Senator that question.

Mr. BRISTOW. In regard to the first part of the Senator's remarks I desire to say that in my judgment the Senator from Arizona has misused the privilege of charging official telegrams to the Government. He has carried on private correspondence at public expense. He has charged to the United States Government telegrams that should have been paid for by himself, and the telegraph companies have presented their bills to the Sergeant at Arms for payment of such messages.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Kansas has a reputation for combining the ability of a Sherlock Holmes with that of other famous characters, and if he has such evidence it is his duty to make a charge to that effect. It is his duty to see that the money improperly expended, if any, should be restored. That I have misused any privilege I deny.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, the information has not been in my possession for a long time, but it came to me through official channels, and it has had my attention, as can be verified by other Members of the Senate who are entirely familiar with the attitude that I have taken upon such unwarranted expenditures of the public money to conduct private correspondence.

Mr. ASHURST. I deny with all the vehemence at my command that I have ever used any publicly paid telegram or letter to conduct private business. I make this assertion here in the Senate of the United States. I will say that I have no private business. I am probably financially the poorest man in the Senate. I have no private income whatever. I declined to practice law when I entered the Senate. I have used the telegraph in the conduct of the public business, and the Senator's rather bad temper this morning has caused him to make a charge that is without foundation. That I have telegraphed to my constituents very much I admit. I purpose continuing to do so. I think one of the chief faults with us is that we do not keep sufficiently in touch with our constituents, and I purpose, to the best of my ability, to inform my constituents as to what we are doing and how the public business is conducted. I am of opinion that keeping constantly in touch with my constituents by telegrams and letters gives me more accurate and reliable information than in listening to a speech—say, from the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. The records of the Senate will determine whether the Senator from Arizona or myself is right. It is a question that can be verified. Copies of the telegrams are on file which have been charged to the Government, signed by the Senator from Arizona, and the nature of them will show in the telegrams themselves. So there need be no question of veracity between him and me. I am willing to leave the matter to the documentary evidence.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course so am I.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Kansas has not neglected his duty in this respect so far as his duty goes, as the Senator from Arizona can learn if he will make proper inquiry of the chairman of the committee who is in charge of that part of the Senate's business.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; and if the Senator finds a violation of the law in that respect in reference to myself he will lay it before the Senate, will he?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well——

Mr. ASHURST. I ask you will you do it?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have made the statement as broadly as I know how to make it. I was under the impression that it was before the Senate now.

Mr. ASHURST. This is the first I have heard of it; and I should like to have the specific facts and dates set down.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will be very glad to furnish the Senator and the Senate, if he desires, the specific facts and dates. I think we can call upon the Sergeant at Arms to do it. It will not be a very great task.

Mr. ASHURST. I will be very pleased to have the Senator do so.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. OWEN. Would the Senator from Kansas object to having the resolution read again upon which he is proceeding?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, it has been read twice, and I think the Senate is interested in the discussion far more than it usually is in the discussions of the body, at least the attendance seems so to indicate.

Mr. OWEN. I merely wished to call attention, Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me, to the irrelevant character of this debate.

Mr. BRISTOW. I agree with the Senator from Oklahoma. It is entirely irrelevant, but since the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] saw fit to drag into it an old political circular that was used and discredited in the Kansas campaigns years ago as a defense of the Secretary of State in his violating his public duty and neglecting the affairs of his office in order that he might accumulate a larger fortune than he now has, I think the remarks of the Senator from Arizona were not exactly pertinent to this question under consideration, and I am free to say that my retort did not have a direct bearing upon the resolution that is now before the Senate, but it probably contained some information that may result, especially on the part of some Senators, in economies in the future in the use of the telegraph for private business at public expense.

As I was proceeding to say—and I am not going to weary the Senate with this discussion—I think if the time has come when the consideration for public office is private gain, when we are to neglect our public duties in order to increase our bank accounts, and the American people will justify that kind of an administration of its public affairs, then we have approached a serious period in the history of our country.

It is with regret, I desire to say, that I felt compelled to introduce a resolution of this kind. I have been during recent years at least an admirer of Mr. Bryan. I have shown my admiration of his capacity as a political leader upon more than one occasion, as Senators here will remember, but because I may have admired him, because I have a friendly feeling for this administration, and will be very glad to see it succeed, is no reason why I should withhold a criticism which four-fifths of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber know ought to be made.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Kansas allow me to interrupt him by a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will.

Mr. LEWIS. Was the Senator from Kansas a Member of this Chamber during the last term of the Secretary of State under President Taft?

Mr. BRISTOW. I was.

Mr. LEWIS. Did the Senator from Kansas have his attention attracted to the general charge published throughout the country that the then Secretary of State was so constantly absent from his official duties at important times as to have to be brought back from his stock farm at Valley Forge?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not aware of that. That may have happened, but it was not called to my attention.

Mr. LEWIS. Did the Senator from Kansas address himself to those conditions by introducing a resolution making inquiry?

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will permit me, how could I introduce such a resolution when I was not advised that such was the fact?

Mr. LEWIS. Did not the Senator have the same opportunity of public information then as he has now?

Mr. BRISTOW. If there ever has been such another demonstration of the neglect of public duty in order to acquire private fortune, it has not been brought to my attention; but I will say further that if the last Secretary of State sacrificed the public business for his private gain he should be now condemned and should have been then condemned; and any Senator who was cognizant of those facts, if they were brought to his attention, as they might have been, and failed to present them to the Senate, fell short of his duty.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, as I understand the distinguished Senator from Kansas, his criticisms are not directed against the present Secretary of State because he is a Democrat?

Mr. BRISTOW. Not at all.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I rise for the purpose of preventing something which I am sure both the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] would regret, that there should be left on the records any apparent finding or concession that the Secretary of State under the administration of President Taft did neglect his duties, whether for gain or for any other reason. I dispute any such proposition, and I am sure that no one will undertake to establish it here.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say——

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me to address myself to the observation of the Senator from New York, may I ask the Senator from New York, will he show to the Senate that during the term of the service of Secretary Knox as Secretary of State under President Taft he was not absent from his official duties time and time again, and much of the time at his stock farm at Valley Forge, and that there was complaint of his absence, without any regard to whether his absence was for gain or not?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am not aware that Secretary Knox was absent from the city of Washington any more frequently or for any longer periods than was entirely within the proper limits of the discretion of the head of a department.

Mr. LEWIS. Ah, Mr. President, that begs the question and apologizes for the situation. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROOT. I am quite certain that if he visited his stock farm, if he has a stock farm, it could not have been for the purposes of gain.

Mr. LEWIS. Probably it had the object of getting accomplished some fast movement at that particul : time in order that the running might be better in the administration of the Senator's party. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that, so far as I know, Secretary Knox never neglected the duties of his office. I am not informed if he did; it was never called to my attention, and did not come to my attention through the public press. I want to say that if he had neglected the duties of his office in the same way I should certainly have criticized him with equal severity that I have criticized the present occupant of that high office.

I have not been slow to criticize members of the political party with which I have been affiliated when I thought they were doing the wrong thing. I have not hesitated to vote against this side of the Chamber when I believed it was standing for things that were not best for the country. I have tried to follow what I believed to be right and obeyed the dictates of my judgment and my conscience since I have been a Member of this body; and I do not want the criticism which I make upon the Secretary of State to be regarded as a partisan criticism, because I know that I am reflecting the opinion of the majority of the Democrats of the country in the remarks that I am making here to-day, as well as the opinion of a majority of Republicans; indeed a majority of the entire people; and without prolonging the debate—there are many things that I should like to incorporate in the RECORD, but I will not take time to do so——

Mr. LEWIS. May I be permitted to interrupt the distinguished Senator from Kansas for one other inquiry?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Was the Senator a Member of this body when the former President of the United States, President Taft, made his general circuit for political campaign purposes throughout the States while he was President of the United States?

Mr. BRISTOW. I was.

Mr. LEWIS. Did the Senator offer a resolution under those circumstances either to investigate such conduct or to condemn such a course?

Mr. BRISTOW. I did not.

Mr. LEWIS. The President was a Republican. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BRISTOW. But I desire to say here that I did not approve the absence from his office of the last President of the United States in the political campaign that he waged. I did not think it comported with the dignity of the high office he held. But while in my opinion he did neglect the duties of his office in pursuing a political campaign, he did not do so for gain.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KERN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. In a moment.

It has been too frequently the habit of men holding high official positions to absent themselves from their official trusts in order to carry on political campaigns. That has been done too much in the past. I hope it will be done less in the future. It has been one of the evils of our political life, and has been growing, I regret to say, during recent years. But that can not be offered as a justification for the course that is now being pursued by the Secretary of State.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KERN. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas whether the President of the United States, when on that more or less celebrated tour of the country, was not operating for political gain, and whether he was not operating at public expense, and whether there is any real difference between a man leaving his post that he may gain in politics and a man leaving his post that he may gain in purse? On the other hand, is there not all the difference in the world between a man going out on business, paying his expenses out of his own pocket, and a public official going out to wage a political campaign at the expense of the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. BRISTOW. My friend from Indiana has too discriminating a mind not to realize the difference. It has been the habit of men holding positions in American politics to go upon the stump and defend the policies of the administration in power. It has been a political habit to have a campaign carried on by those responsible for the policies that have been adopted by the administration in power. I see a vast difference, and I think my friend from Indiana will also, between the head of a party or the head of the Government, or a subordinate who is responsible for a policy in the Government, on the one hand, going before the American people and presenting the arguments for such policies and discussing the political views on questions involved, defending the policies for which the administration stands and meeting the criticisms that have been made, and, on the other hand, abandoning the duties of the office and going out to make money, hawking about for purposes of profit—receiving so much of the gate receipts, if you please—the high honors that have been bestowed upon him by the American people. I see a very, very wide difference between the two situations.

I was going to close a few minutes ago with an observation, but I was interrupted. I desire to say, with all seriousness and earnestness, that I should at least like to see the heads of our great departments of government hold up to the American people the high ideals that came down to us from the founders of the Republic in regard to the public service.

The public service is a great honor in a free country like this, and men seek that honor. It is of the highest importance to our country that men should regard it as a high distinction to serve their country in these positions of great responsibility. While there may be rare exceptions, as a rule in the fierce political controversies which rage in this country of ours no man has attained high distinction except at personal sacrifice and financial loss.

The very genius of our political institutions is such that it can not be done otherwise by men who are patriotic and honest.

I want to protest here against the man who sits at the right hand of the President of the United States declaring, not only to his own country but to the nations of the earth, that he can not afford to sacrifice any of his profits in private business in order that he may hold the highest position within the gift of the President. I say, if public opinion in the United States will justify such a course of conduct, the days of free government in this country of ours are nearing their end.

Mr. STONE and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if other Senators desire to discuss the matter which has been discussed by the Senator from Kansas, I shall not stand in their way very long. In my opinion this whole thing is a very small affair, too small in all its aspects to engage the serious attention of the Senate. In fact, I can not escape the impression that it has been injected here in a narrow, partisan spirit that does no credit to its originator.

The Senator from Kansas has been a Member of this body for nearly one full senatorial term. During that period two Republican Presidents, Roosevelt and Taft, have toured the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Canadian boundary to the Gulf, being absent from their offices for weeks, engaged in political propaganda. They were seeking in these repeated tours to promote the political policies for which they stood, and to promote their personal political interests.

The Senator from Kansas was here at that time and not a word of complaint, protest, or criticism fell from his lips. He says now that there is a difference between a President absenting himself from office and scouring the country for weeks at a time in advocacy of party policies and in the promotion of individual ambitions and a Cabinet officer going out on rare occasions to lecture in response to urgent invitations sent to him by communities desiring him to address them. The Senator is too hypercritical for most men to follow him; he is too hair-splitting for the ordinary man to understand him. While criticizing, strange to say, the Senator himself admits that he, while holding his position here in the Senate, with important and multiplied duties resting upon him, has gone out on the Chautauqua circuit to deliver addresses for which he received compensation.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. STONE. To be sure.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire that the Senator's language may not be misconstrued. The way he put it would lead to the inference that while the Senate was in session, and I was occupied here with my duties, I had gone out for the purpose he mentions. The Senator from Kansas has done nothing of the kind, as he very clearly stated.

Mr. STONE. The Senator endeavors to escape by saying that he was in his seat when the Senate was in session, but in vacation he went out and delivered lectures or speeches, for which he received a compensation. He justifies himself in this behalf because he did this when the Senate was not in session.

Mr. President, the executive departments of the Government are supposed to be always in session, theoretically; but the President goes every year for rest to his summer home. The President has done this from time whereof the memory of man hardly runs to the contrary. Executive officers—that is, the heads of departments and the heads of bureaus—go to the seaports or to mountain resorts, on well-earned vacations, that they may have rest and recreation, but always within easy reach of their offices and in close touch with their duties, ready on the shortest notice to return; aye more, they are usually well prepared to keep close track of and to conduct the official business of their offices while on their vacations.

The Senator from Kansas has business to do, as all of us have as Senators, even when the Senate is not in session. He has complained about having to wait for an undue length of time for a letter for some constituent of his who wished to go abroad, and who wanted a letter of introduction to our foreign representatives. I suppose if the Senator from Kansas had been in California or Maine during the vacation of the Senate, lecturing for pay, it would have been difficult, if not impossible, for this anxious constituent to have reached him in order that the Senator might have made this important application to which he calls such particular attention. Mr. President, all of us here know that applications for letters of the kind referred to by the Senator are matters of routine departmental business, and that they can be and are just as well done when the Secretary is absent from his office as when he is present. Such a letter signed by one of the Assistant Secretaries is just as potent as if signed by the Secretary himself. This shows how puerile the criticisms of the Senator from Kansas are. While dilating on what the Secretary might do in matters of small detail I admonish the Senator not to forget that there is a multitude of things a Senator has to do and can do in vacation as well as during the sessions of the Senate, just as there is a multitude of things Cabinet officials might personally do if they were present instead of being away on a vacation or on official business. Mr. President, the Senator in making this childish criticism shows conclusively that he is just groping in a vain search for something on which to hedge a denunciation of an honorable public official.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has himself done substantially the very thing he is now, in a narrow partisan spirit, which does him no credit, for the doing of which he attacks the Secretary of State. The honorable Senator and his partisan colleagues have long been in the habit of assailing with unwonted energy and bitterness the distinguished Secretary of State; and now the honorable Senator thinks he finds a new opportunity on this slight pretext, of which he seeks to take advantage, to make this attack.

The Senator from Kansas is playing his game on dangerous ground—in fact, a sort of quicksand as to him. The Senator from Kansas should remember that he has himself gone upon the lecture platform and received pay for speeches he made—receiving, no doubt, much less than his speeches were worth—while he was a Senator of the United States. But in this respect he is not exceptional, for other distinguished and able men, whose names add luster to our public life, members of both political parties, have done the same thing, and have done so for years and years in the past.

While sitting here at my desk I have made a list of some able Republicans who have engaged in this business of lecturing for pay. I give you a brief list of eminent Republicans who have done this character of work, and I could also give you a list of eminent Democrats who have done the same thing. For the present, however, I confine myself to the Republicans, for Democrats are not complaining.

Of course, at the top of the list I place the Senator from Kansas. But the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has also been one of the most eloquent and attractive lecturers on the public stage. I make no criticism of him; I congratulate him.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has gone over the country from one ocean to the other during recent years delivering lectures, and has exercised a tremendous influence on public opinion.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator from Missouri believe that the work of the Senator from Wisconsin on the Chautauqua platform has been of more good than anything he could have done in this body?

Mr. STONE. I would not like to say that. I think the work of the Senator from Wisconsin has been of great potentiality both in this body and out of it.

Mr. KENYON. I did not mean to say that his work was not of great value in this body, but the Senator from Wisconsin has been the forerunner in this country of the great movement for popular government, and he has done it on the Chautauqua platform. He had audiences there that he could not get in any other place.

Mr. STONE. I think that is true.

Mr. KENYON. And Mr. Bryan likewise.

Mr. STONE. I think that is true. But I do not care to be diverted into a discussion of this phase of the subject.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator said that this is a partisan attack. I think it is not a partisan attack. There are many on this side who——

Mr. STONE. Judging by the vote here this afternoon, it would seem that the Republican side of the Chamber had lined up with the Senator from Kansas to make this a partisan question. We regret that, but we stand ready to meet it.

All of us remember Senator Dolliver, dear to our hearts and memory, a magnificent man, a great Senator, the immediate predecessor, I think, of the Senator who just interrupted me. I am glad that Dolliver has been so well succeeded. Senator Dolliver delivered hundreds of Chautauqua lectures throughout the country, not only during the vacations of Congress, but also while Congress was in session. I never heard any criticism of him, and far be it from me to criticize him. I merely refer to the matter by way of giving answer to the unwarranted assault upon the Secretary of State by the Senator from Kansas.

The able and eloquent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is accredited with delighting and instructing audiences on the Chautauqua platform.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Missouri refer to the senior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STONE. I had reference to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that I never delivered a Chautauqua address in my life. I have never at any time before or since entering public life delivered a speech under the employ of a Chautauqua bureau. I am not criticizing those who do or eulogizing those who do not. I am simply stating a fact.

Mr. STONE. Then I withdraw all I have said as to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The soft impeachment.

Mr. STONE. I withdraw the "soft impeachment," as my friend from Mississippi says.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will permit the compliment to stand, however.

Mr. STONE. Yes; the compliment stands; but I venture another assertion on perhaps less information, for I have not any information about it, that the Senator from Idaho has been often solicited to speak on the Chautauqua platform; and I say this because a man of his fine ability and superior eloquence could not well have escaped such importunity.

Mr. President, among those in this very limited and imperfect list I have is the name of former Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, a progressive of progressives, a leader of the most advanced thought of this day and generation.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, I am only speaking by hearsay, but Senator Beveridge has often told me that he never lectured for compensation. It is not that I am attempting to excuse a man who does that, but simply in justice to a Senator who is no longer here. He has often made that statement to me.

Mr. STONE. In what I said I never dreamed that I was doing Senator Beveridge an injustice.

Mr. CLAPP. No; but the Senator was implying that he had lectured for pay.

Mr. STONE. I did assume, if the Senator please, that when Senator Beveridge had gone over the country to address great assemblages, at Chautauquas and elsewhere, he went under the terms and conditions ordinarily obtaining in such cases.

Mr. CLAPP. What I am saying is not in any sense intended as a criticism of those who do it; but it is a singular fact, I think, in connection with Senator Beveridge's career that, while he writes, he never lectures for pay. At least, he has often told me that he never lectured for pay.

Mr. STONE. Of course I know nothing of that.

But now as to writing, it seems to be admitted that Senator Beveridge at least wrote articles for newspapers and magazines for which he received pay, and that work required investigation and time, time which I suppose the Senator from Kansas thinks Senator Beveridge should have been devoting assiduously and exclusively to his public duties.

By the way, it has just been whispered to me that even the Senator from Kansas, who is so uncompromisingly opposed to a public servant devoting any of his time to other than his public duties, has himself done some writing for magazines or newspapers in the way of reporting the proceedings of the last Republican and Democratic national conventions for pay. I will ask the Senator if that is true?

Mr. BRISTOW. Since the Senator addresses the inquiry, I will say that I have upon different occasions written articles for which I have received compensation, and I had the pleasure of writing a number of articles in regard to the Baltimore convention for which I received compensation.

I desire to say further that I offer no criticism on a man following the lecture business. It is an honorable occupation. I offer no criticism on a Senator or anyone else delivering lectures before colleges or Chautauquas or writing magazine articles presenting his views, or even writing occasionally for newspapers, provided that he does not sacrifice the public business in so doing.

Mr. STONE. Let me ask my distinguished friend this question: Did he attend the Baltimore convention of last year?

Mr. BRISTOW. I did.

Mr. STONE. Did the Senator undertake to report for some newspaper or magazine the proceedings of that convention?

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. STONE. Or to write his impressions of it?

Mr. BRISTOW. I wrote my impressions of the convention.

Mr. STONE. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that at that time the Senate of the United States was in session, and will ask if he did not desert his post here and go to Baltimore to write articles for pay. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. BRISTOW. I call the attention——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms has now been given two notices, and there will not be another one from the presiding officer to the Sergeant at Arms about the conduct of the occupants of the galleries.

Mr. BRISTOW. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the Senate was not in session during that period.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to say, Mr. President, that the Senate was in session during the Baltimore convention. The Senator from Kansas is entirely mistaken in saying that the Senate was not in session during that convention.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Kentucky should be more frank. If the defense of the Secretary of State depends upon such flimsy argument as that presented now by the Senator from Kentucky, it will have very little effect upon the public mind. If the Senator from Kentucky is informed, he knows that the Congress of the United States took a recess pending the two conventions and was not in session.

Mr. JAMES. I do not hardly believe that it lies in the mouth——

Mr. BRISTOW. There was an agreement that no business should be done. Two or three Members may have sat here to comply with the Constitution, but the Senate was not in session, and the Senator from Kentucky knows it.

Mr. JAMES. I do not believe it lies in the mouth of the Senator from Kansas, who has introduced the most buncombe of all buncombe resolutions I have ever heard of being introduced in this Chamber, to charge the Senator from Kentucky with using a flimsy argument when he merely presents the fact, which is that the Senate was in session; and perhaps there would have been enough Senators present to do business if all of them had not been away, as the Senator from Kansas was.

Mr. SMOOT. In justice to the Senator from Kansas I wish to state that I remember there was a virtual agreement among Senators that no business should be done during the time of the Republican convention at Chicago and the Democratic convention at Baltimore.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course, as every Senator knows, that is the fact. There was a unanimous-consent agreement that no business should be done. The Senate was in recess.

Mr. STONE. I was personally so much occupied with the business of the Baltimore convention that I confess I was not only not in the Senate at that time but I do not know even what was done in the Senate; but the Senate could not have adjourned more than three days at a time, and the Baltimore convention lasted a week or more. In the interval there must have been one or two sessions of the Senate.

I should like to ask if the Senator from Kansas consented that the Senate of the United States might abandon its functions for days and days that he might attend a Democratic national convention and have an opportunity to write articles about it, for which he was to receive a liberal compensation? If he objected, let us have the page of the RECORD.

Mr. BRISTOW. Being a Member of the Senate and there having been unanimous consent, with almost every Member of the Senate consenting, that the Congress should stand in recess, I should think I was a party to the agreement with the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Yes; the Senator was here. I was not here, and I have no apology to make for it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have none either.

Mr. STONE. In view of the resolution and speech of the Senator, I think it is high time he should apologize.

Proceeding, I next recall that a Republican Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Shaw—another Iowa man—went all over the country delivering speeches, whether for pay I am not prepared to say.

Mr. SMOOT. Not on the Chautauqua.

Mr. STONE. The Senator says he was not on the Chautauqua, but this——

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was oratorical.

Mr. STONE. Yes; an oratorical mission. These rounders-up and stem-winders usually get pay for making speeches whether they are on the Chautauqua or not. I do not know whether Mr. Shaw was paid, but I know while Secretary he went all over the country and made speeches, elaborating his views on financial affairs and on fiscal systems. I did not hear any criticism of that, although he was a member of the Cabinet and in a position fully as important as that of the Secretary of State.

Again, Mr. President, Members of the House have done the same thing. I recall to the attention of Senators one very distinguished Member of the House among many I might recall, Gen. Grosvenor, of Ohio, a very able man, a very distinguished man, who spent a great deal of his time in lecturing over the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe it is an historical fact that Gen. Grosvenor collaborated with a gentleman by the name of CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri?

Mr. STONE. He did.

Mr. GALLINGER. They went together.

Mr. STONE. They went together, and Speaker CLARK and Senator Dolliver went together and "collaborated," as the Senator says. Certainly that was done. Who objected? I am not saying that Democrats have not done as Republicans did. Many Democrats have been on the lecture platform, probably more Democrats than Republicans, and this for reasons I fear I could not state without offense to some of my friends. There was a greater demand for them.

I see that my good friend the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] is absent. He stayed here a moment to refute some observations of the Senator from Illinois with reference to former Secretary Knox and then disappeared.

It is said that Mr. Bryan has been absent a great deal from his office. I have seen criticisms of him in the opposition press about the number of days he has been away from his office. A day or two ago I read a statement of his absences, among others that he had been quite a long time in California about the Japanese trouble out there, and it counted up something like two weeks that he lost from his office.

And then they told about him going down the Chesapeake Bay to meet Dr. Müller, the special ambassador sent here from Brazil to return the visit made to that country by Secretary Root. He went down as the head of the State Department to welcome this special ambassador of a great neighboring state, and he is criticized for doing that. What would you say if he had not done it?

Secretary Root made a trip, and he did right in making it, on an American war vessel, to Central and South America. He visited those countries. He came in contact with the governmental representatives of those people, talked with them, and I am sure accomplished a good work; but he was absent from his office for many weeks.

Secretary Knox made a trip to Central America also, taking him from his office for a long time. In addition to that, he was commissioned by President Taft to go on a special mission to Japan. He boarded a war vessel in the harbor of San Francisco and was conveyed with due dignity as our special ambassador to Tokyo, the capital of Japan. His high mission was to deliver personally the condolences of our Government to the new Mikado, because of the death of his father, and to express to His Majesty the deep grief of the American people over the loss sustained by the Empire, and at the same time to give renewed assurances of our high esteem, and so forth. He was gone on this important diplomatic mission—a grave and most delicate diplomatic mission—for more than a month. I have never heard any criticism of that. I have never criticized it; I do not criticize it now. I do not know what the Senator from Kansas thinks about it. His voice even unto this day has been silent.

Now, Mr. President, dealing in common honesty with each other, am I not justified in saying that all this outburst is the merest partisan tommyrot injected here for purely partisan purposes, and in no sense worthy of a dignified consideration before this body? The motion to lay it on the table was agreed to, as it should have been; yet the Senator from Kansas has insisted upon speaking on another and wholly irrelevant resolution that he might give voice to his partisan spleen and exploit a bad spirit of partisan vindictiveness. I do not know how many of his compatriots on the other side are in sympathy with him or will join in supporting his most unhappy contention.

That is all I care to say.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I regret the circumstances which impel me to raise my voice in criticism of any officer of this Government. To my mind it is of vital importance that the people have confidence in their public servants, for lack of such confidence is, in effect, lack of confidence in government itself. I have felt, however, that the events upon which I am about to comment are of such a nature as to result in the establishment of bad precedents unless public protest is uttered.

I allude, Mr. President, to the publicly announced intention of the present distinguished Secretary of State to engage his time and energies and talents not only for his own pecuniary profit but for the profit of private individuals or organizations and at the expense of large numbers of American citizens who are to be charged a fee for the privilege of listening to an address by one to whom the people as a whole are paying a salary by no means small. I deem it the more important that notice be taken here of the adoption of this policy because of the public career of the man who is sponsor for it.

For more than 15 years Mr. Bryan has posed as a public censor of men and measures. He has preached the duties of citizenship and assumed to establish standards of public service. His public acts, therefore, more than those of any other man except the President, are of influence in the fixing of standards of public service and public policy. If the American people remain silent at this time, and by their silence give their inferential approval or assent to the policy Mr. Bryan has announced, that attitude of an official toward his duties must be assumed to be a permanent feature of our governmental institutions.

For my part I feel impelled to voice a protest. I am no respecter of persons. I see no reason why the head of a department should be permitted to make private gain by methods that are forbidden to his subordinates. I see nothing in his announced policy that is not equally available to any man or woman in the Government employ, and certainly no one will question the assertion that the general application of that policy would mean the absolute ruin of public service.

It has been ordered by another member of the Cabinet that postmasters shall not engage in any other business than that relating to their offices as postmasters. The same rule is applied to other subordinate Federal officeholders. Why this discrimination in favor of a high-salaried officer against the low-salaried one?

Mr. Bryan says he is selling his time, energies, and talents to private individuals or organizations because his official salary is not enough for him to live upon. He is receiving $12,000 a year. In the Government service there are thousands of employees who receive less than one-tenth of that sum, and who, in these days of high cost of living, find it difficult to live within their income. Not one of these thousands, however, is permitted to abandon his post of duty and sell his time and energies and talents to others for the reason that Mr. Bryan has given for his action. If Mr. Bryan's example shall be followed by public employees generally, who can see the extent of injury to the public service?

If it be said in further defense of Mr. Bryan that the work of his office proceeds just the same in his absence, let answer be given to the question why the same defense can not be made by each and every chief of a division or head of a bureau who can find opportunity to resell a portion of the time he has already sold to the Government.

It is true that the clerks, division chiefs, and bureau heads accepted their positions knowing what their salaries were and the time required of them; if they did not deem the salaries sufficient, they were not required to enter the Government employ; but I fail to see wherein this obvious truth applies to a $1,200 man with more force than to a $12,000 man. If we are to adopt the policy of placing the dollar above public duty, then the door of opportunity should not be opened to one citizen and closed to another. If there is to be discrimination, it should be in favor of the poorly paid man, but I can see no reason why a distinction should be made.

At a time when most unusual foreign complications confront us, when the perplexing Japanese question is up, when our relations with the disturbed Republic to the South of us are most grave and fraught with mighty responsibilities, when treaties affecting our relations with various nations of Europe are pending and awaiting the action of this Nation, when the question of Panama Canal tolls is pressing hard upon us, when the alleged claims of Colombia are being urged, when the Congress is dealing with the tariff containing provisions which may affect our diplomatic relations with other countries, indeed, at this time, above all other times, the statement of Mr. Bryan that he proposed to desert his office for the purpose of personal financial gain comes as a shock to all thoughtful people. This action is even more inexcusable when it is known that the Secretary has been in office but a few months and from the nature of things he can not have become familiar with all of the responsibilities of his great position. The Secretary of State is regarded as the most important executive officer of the Government below the President. He is premier of the Cabinet. He should be the first example of faithful, intelligent devotion to duty.

I know of nothing more unfortunate to the cause of public virtue and singleness of purpose for high ideals than this expressed determination of Mr. Bryan, upheld by the reasons which he gives. When he entered into the implied contract with the Government to serve as Secretary of State he knew what the salary of that position was. He had for years proclaimed the doctrine of the simple life of pure democracy. He knew that $1,000 per month was the compensation he would receive from the Government. To a majority of people in public and private life that compensation seems most adequate, and yet now he declares to the country that it is insufficient to meet his expenses as Secretary of State. His salary is the same as that received by other Cabinet officers, and no one of them has complained that it is inadequate. How now are the virtues of economy and simplicity to be impressed upon the people when their great advocate states that it is necessary for him to capitalize for financial gain his great ability as a Chautauqua lecturer because he can not support himself and family upon $12,000 a year? If he had resigned as Secretary, giving as his reason the one he did give, viz, that he could not live on his salary and by inference that he owed a higher duty to his desire for wealth than he did to public service, there would have been less reason for public complaint, but to hold his office and draw the full salary for only a part of the time he renders service, the balance of his time having been sold to individuals, is, in my judgment, improper and inexcusable.

I hold, Mr. President, that the public official must perform the full duties of his office to the best of his ability (and undivided service is of the very essence of his contract) and the higher the position the more imperative becomes that demand.

Mr. Bryan was one of the highest-priced lecturers in the country before he became Secretary of State. His superior ability as an orator plus the notoriety he secured as a several-times candidate for President gave him great drawing powers as lecturer at Chautauquas, and he had a right to improve the opportunities thus opened to him, but no man has a right to exploit the public office which he is holding for private financial gain, especially not when such exploitation must of necessity interfere with the performance of the duties which he voluntarily assumes.

And so, Mr. President, it seems to me that aside from the technical and legal question of the right of a public servant to sell his services twice, the public announcement by Mr. Bryan that a man of his well-advertised democratic tastes can not live upon an income of $12,000 a year presents a moral question for the consideration of the American people. The question is simply this: Whether, under such circumstances, it is the duty of the citizen and the public servant to modify his style of living to bring it within his legitimate income or whether it is his privilege to resell his services in order to cover the cost of the style of living he has adopted.

Mr. President, I am sorry that an occasion has arisen which, from my viewpoint of public service, compels me to voice my protest, although my action may be misconstrued as an attack upon a coordinate branch of the Government. The President is responsible for the public service of the members of his Cabinet, and, to my mind, Mr. Bryan's action, whether with the President's consent or assent, must be considered as an approved policy unless publicly renounced.

Whatever I have had to say regarding the matter is not based upon innuendo nor presented in the form of generalities, but it is a criticism of a concrete example, which, unrebuked, might be assumed to be inferentially approved, and which, if generally followed, would certainly be greatly detrimental to good government by placing individual selfish interest above the general welfare.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I had sincerely hoped that there would arise no occasion for any Senator on this side of the Chamber [Democratic side] to treat with dignity, much less responsibility, the resolution presented by the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], which, though laid on the table, is discussed through the privileges available under our rules. The Latins have an expression reading "Parturiunt montes; nascetur ridiculus mus," or, liberally translated, "the mountains labored and brought forth a mouse." I would not have my observation construed that these mountains which have thundered and parted have only brought forth mice. I recognize the leonine strength of these lions of debate and their assumption that legislative veracity and political integrity only abound on the other side of the Chamber; but I am instantly attracted by the evidence of the constant absence of any effort on the part of those distinguished gentlemen to have urged their exalted standards at the time when they could have been applied appropriately to those of their own party affiliations.

I am particularly attracted to my distinguished, able, and learned friend from Michigan, Senator TOWNSEND, who has addressed himself to a splendidly prepared oration, reading it with deliberation. It was accurate in construction, attractive in diction, perfectly poised, and eloquently phrased. For that the commendation of a fellow Senator and a friend goes ungrudgingly to the Senator, but as to its propriety, its statesmanship, or weight I reserve the right to pass judgment and now to express it. May I not inquire when have these distinguished gentlemen—the honorable Senators on the other side of the Chamber—been so suddenly inoculated with this great danger to the institutions of the Republic from the fact that now and then some official takes an excursion into some literary undertaking before the public? Or presents some public policy or proposed legislation in which the public have great interest and ought to be instructed from every source? Did the distinguished Senator from Michigan during his renowned service in this Chamber or when a Member of the House find it agreeable to voice these expressions of hostility to vacations when the President of the United States, a Republican, made it convenient to circumnavigate this country in a private car—coupled with other conveyances—for political purposes, and charged the expenses to taxpayers of the Republic? This while he was drawing the munificent salary of $75,000 a year and surely able to pay his expenses. I ask my friend from Michigan why should there be a rule, to quote and paraphrase his expression, for the high official different from that for the lowly? Why should the humble voter from Michigan working here in Washington be compelled to return to Michigan—as he was—to vote for Representative TOWNSEND in his contest for Senator and to pay his expenses for transportation, while the President of the United States, the highest official of the same party, can make his political expenses payable out of the Public Treasury?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to my friend, anticipating a query that I trust may be pertinent at this moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to say, in answer to the Senator, that I never did approve of the policy of the President in going out in the campaign. I think it was not only unwise but fateful. The Senator from Illinois should remember, however, that the Congress of the United States took deliberate action and expressed not only impliedly but directly its desire to have the President travel over the country, and appropriated $25,000 in express language for the purpose of having him go out to the people, believing that it was a good thing for them to meet their President. So Congress itself provided that the President should travel at the expense of an appropriation which it had allowed.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator from Michigan say, upon the responsibility of his station, that the Congress of the United States passed a measure allowing President Taft to go to Massachusetts and Ohio and other States to make his political campaign at the expense of the taxpayers, and that he as a Senator or Representative voted for such a measure of imposition upon his countrymen?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not saying that Congress made any such express allowance, but they made no restriction. They simply allowed the President so much money for traveling expenses.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I ask, did the Senator from Michigan apply his present morals of condemnation to the President when he was apparently and publicly expending that sum in his political campaign, using the fund to the extent that even his cook and his bath attendant were likewise paid from the funds of the Federal Government?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say, in answer to the Senator, that I do not know for what the President expended this money. I am not able to say whether he used any portion of the money for doing that or not. I am satisfied that the President of the United States—and I am not making any excuses for some of the trips which he made—I am positive that the President never proposed to leave his office for six weeks in charge of somebody else with the idea of going out and receiving compensation because he could not live on $50,000 a year.

Mr. LEWIS. I will ask the distinguished Senator if while he has been a Member of Congress—and distinguished he was as such—and drawing his salary, did he not practice his profession of the law—legitimately, and draw compensation from clients?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not.

Mr. LEWIS. What was the reason your clients lost such confidence in you during that time? [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state—perhaps I ought to modify that—when I was elected to Congress I had a number of lawsuits pending. Those that I could turn over—and most of them were transferred, because they could be turned over to better hands—were transferred. There were, however, a few which were not turned over, to which I attended, not when Congress was in session, but the courts kindly postponed them until Congress adjourned, and I then went home and tried them. I have not taken any cases since the end of my first term in the House.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, I will ask the Senator, during the time which he calls "vacation," was he not both drawing his salary from the Government and likewise charging legitimate or proper compensation to his clients for his valuable services?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course. There is such a difference when it is a Democrat. [Laughter.] So legitimate for a Republican Senator—so criminal when done by a Democratic Secretary of State.

Now, Mr. President, we are particularly interested, and, I am sure, to a degree amused by this illuminating spectacle of virtue on the part of our distinguished friends—for all of whom we entertain deep affection; but where was this voice of protest that has been calcium lighted upon this particular stage when a high official of the Post Office Department deliberately deserted his official duties and turned himself into a political machinist to nominate a distinguished friend—Secretary of War Taft—for political office, abandoning all his duties and under circumstances publicly shaming this country? Where was the protest when an officer of the Army, Maj. Ray, was deliberately ordered to abandon a purely nonpartisan employment, that should have been fraught only with unquestioned patriotism and nonpartyism, and turn himself to the partisan employment by being a special political emissary located in the city of Chicago for the Middle West to secure converts for a political aspirant for the Presidency? Now, before the eyes of the country this officer seeks reward of promotion for that questionable service. Did then from my distinguished friend from Michigan arise a protest, or any from the honorable Senator from Kansas?

The records are waiting for them to speak and are heavy with silence. Will they contend to the contrary? Is it because the gentleman against whom they now inveigh is a Democrat, an officer of the Wilson administration, and opposed to their political predilections that a lawmaker would engage himself in this undertaking of discrimination? Mr. President, it is not through patriotism that these distinguished Senators protest, but out of a narrow, small partyism; and it is apparent that it does not do credit to their intelligence, while it renders the dignity of their splendid position contemptible.

What is the claim the distinguished Senator from Michigan makes? Not, sir, that anything has happened to the hurt of public service; not, sir, that any wrong has been inflicted upon the Republic; not, sir, that any public duty has been neglected by the Secretary of State; nor, sir, that any particular omission in any form of performance can be sustained. No. Yet he prepares a lecture upon good behavior of Democratic officials, and in the agony of anticipation that permeates his throbbing body screams his quivering fear that the precedent might lead to others doing the things which he contends the Secretary of State threatens—to the great undoing of the Nation.

What is that threat? It is that he, the Secretary of State, will in the time of vacation go to the country and deliver addresses upon subjects of public importance. From this avowal it is claimed by the Senator from Michigan that the Secretary is to receive some form of remuneration; but in the meantime does the Senator from Michigan, from his very high and exalted station, upon his unimpeached honor, intimate to the Republic that this official is neglecting any duty; that he is not keeping in touch with his department; that he is not to be ever present at any hour that his presence is required, as much so as if the Senator returned to his home in splendid Michigan on private business subject to the call of the Senate in the performance of his official duties in this Chamber? Where is the difference?

Why all this cant? Why all this ridiculous performance? Now, Mr. President, let us be frank. There may be, on the part of some gentlemen with tender sensibilities lately aroused and newly announced, some objection to an important official adding to his income by a form of undertaking such as assumed by the distinguished Secretary of State, and who, without blush and without disguise, frankly concedes such as his object. The distinguished Senator from Kansas and likewise the Senator from Michigan delight to indulge in the retrospection that such practice has not been in the character and life of those named in the resolution of the Senator from Kansas (commented upon by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] in his able utterance). Sir, the hour has struck when common, plain truth in this elevated station is to be approved.

It may be admitted that a form of obnoxious and objectionable poverty afflicts many Members of the heretofore minority—the Democracy—fighting and struggling in behalf of the masses of America day by day and disdaining a form of employment that corrupted the souls and defiled the bodies of honorable men. They would not accept tendered opportunity of compensation of a nature and quantity that would enable them to hold with ease office in the great Capital City. They have not been, as other officials of another party, favored with the gift of splendid homes adorned with silken tapestries brought from the Orient, floored with burnished carpetings from Syria, walls refined with furnishings in Carrara marble, gilded and inlaid with onyx and precious stones, favors from certain admirers who could make the presentations to which I have alluded and which incidents are now familiar to the minds of the listening Senators. Our Democrats probably were compelled to resort to the honorable method of working for a living, and this by visible means of support. Ah, different, indeed, from that other era just passing, when commonly, notoriously, when obnoxious to decency, contemptuous of citizenship, certain officials under another political régime did not hesitate to use their office for the recoupment of their coffers by open speculation in the stock market, and basing these upon the tariff bills of the Government while they made profitable the gambling practices upon the legislative undertakings of the Government, by shaping their own official course along the line of recommendation of public measures on the one hand or the support of them on the other as would enrich their private fortunes and give to them the luxuries of coarse vulgarities. Sir, the true Democrat who, never having engaged in such undertakings, could never hope for the profit from such nor sought he to avoid labor to make good his needs caused by his honorable avoidance of such detestable business.

Oh, there is a difference, there is a change. We delight to know that patriotic men on both sides of the Chamber dream that the difference now intrenched shall always exist. Mr. President, when the hour really comes for examination by the American public as to what all this false tempest is about, they will waste no time in a petty analysis of these reverberating anathemas of the gentlemen who, spending days and nights devising sentences and meaningless utterances that are "sound and fury," hoping that the geniuses who preside over the press gallery may advertise them to their constituents as worthy of notice and possible of praise—fatuous allurement—no; the people are just.

When all of these pretenders have been excluded by the sincere, abandoned by the prudent, smiled at by the dignified and thoughtful; there will arise the query from the great heart of America, which knows this Bryan, asking, What wrong has this man, the Secretary of State, committed? What duty has he violated? What obligation has he avoided? What offense has he committed that distinguished Senators, under their solemn oaths to maintain the dignity of a great and exalted assemblage of their country, should be content to drag it along the lower plane to insignificance and contempt, while they humiliate an exalted officer, a Christian gentleman, merely to gratify some spleen of party on the one hand or to obtain political publicity to themselves on the other?

For myself I trust that no such scene may be duplicated in the time that I am permitted to honor myself by association with these distinguished gentlemen, and if it should arise again to their thoughts to repeat the comedy let them reflect that there is a sentiment of honor in their States and a manhood of citizenship in their homes. That from these already, in humiliation, breaks a protest, voicing of each of them the condemning execration—

> I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
> Than such a Roman.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there has been such a heated discussion over this question, in which personalities have been hurled from one side to the other of this Chamber, it might be well for us now to look at what the resolution introduced by the Senator from Kansas is and what its purpose and motive were. When we consider this resolution and read the clause contained in it with relation to Mr. Bryan we find that this is the language used:

> Whereas the "Great Commoner" now holding that high office, Hon. W. J. Bryan, has stated in the public press that the salary of $1,000 per month is not sufficient to enable him to live with comfort, and that because of the meagerness of the salary of $12,000 per annum he is compelled to neglect the duties of his office and go upon the lecture platform in order to earn a living.
> Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to advise the Senate what would be a proper salary to enable the present Secretary of State to live with comfort and to enable him to give his time to the discharge of his public duties, for which he is now being paid the sum of $1,000 per month.

In that language the position of Mr. Bryan is not only exaggerated but misrepresented. Since there has been a statement made by Mr. Bryan that he is not in favor of an increase of salary for any of the Cabinet officers, the object of the resolution has been met, and the Senator from Kansas should withdraw it instead of discussing the subject.

Last night Mr. Bryan delivered a lecture at Mountain Lake Park, Md., a few miles from Washington, and in the course of the discussion, as reported by the Washington Post of this morning, he made an explanation contained in the following report of the meeting:

> Subsequent to his lecture, however, when asked if $12,000 was not sufficient to maintain him and his family, would he advocate an increase, Mr. Bryan replied that he would not. The salary, he said, was sufficient to meet all expenses when these are confined to the home and official life. This, however, was not true in his case, for the reason that there were certain fixed charges that must be met.
> "These charges," he said, "with my living expenses and expenses incident to my position, exceed my salary." He added that the public would not suffer by his absence from Washington.

Mr. President, in all fairness the governmental question that would naturally be presented by this resolution is as to the policy of the Government concerning the salaries of Cabinet officers. When that is settled and determined by the man whom this resolution seeks to attack, it seems to me that it ought to close the discussion upon the subject; but we find contained in this resolution quotations that were never uttered by Mr. Bryan. For example, I quote the following:

> Whereas the "Great Commoner" now holding that high office, Hon. W. J. Bryan, has stated in the public press that the salary of $1,000 per month is not sufficient to enable him to live with comfort.

That declaration is absolutely negatived and denied in the statement which Mr. Bryan made. Before the Senator from Kansas introduced his resolution, in a conversation which I had with Mr. Bryan he stated to me that he was absolutely opposed to an increase in the salary of Cabinet officers. It seems to me, then, that this resolution is aiming at an object that is not a proper senatorial inquiry, whether the Government should pay its officers better salaries or not, but goes beyond that and criticizes unjustly and improperly a member of the Cabinet.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no intention of participating in this debate, but I have been listening to it with great care. I observe that in the speech made last evening by the distinguished Secretary of State he alludes to certain "fixed charges." In business matters we know what that means. Will the Senator, if he has the information, advise the Senate as to precisely what the term "fixed charges" in connection with a public official mean?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I do not know. I have never talked with Mr. Bryan relative to that; but nearly every public official has some expenditures which he is compelled to make every year which probably can not be counted as part of his household or official expenses. Why, in this very interview some one asked him about his farm near Lincoln, Nebr., and in reply thereto he said it was a liability instead of an asset. I have not any doubt that item constitutes part of the fixed liability which he feels under obligation to meet. He farms there, I presume, by hiring labor; and every man who ever attempts to do that finds there is no profit, but usually a liability, in such an undertaking.

But I want to go further with relation to this unfair recital. The resolution proceeds:

> And that because of the meagerness of the salary of $12,000 per annum he is compelled to neglect the duties of his office.

Where is there any statement of his that he is going to neglect the duties of his office? Who has any right to assume that he is going to neglect his duties.

Everybody who is well acquainted with Mr. Bryan knows that he is one of the hardest-working men that ever lived, not merely during the paltry hours that he is compelled to spend in the office of the Secretary of State, but during the time after office hours and into the late hours of the night.

Where is there any statement of his, or any implication which can be drawn from Mr. Bryan's interview, that he is going to neglect his official duties? He has stated in this very interview that he expects to cancel whatever lecture engagements he may have if he finds that his presence is needed at the State Department. At all times he would be in telegraphic and telephonic connection with his office.

Senators are endeavoring to make it appear that the State Department is now handling a great crisis. I do not see that the present conditions are different from those that usually exist.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator says Mr. Bryan is opposed to any increase of salary?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume the Senator also takes as true Mr. Bryan's other statement, that the salary of the office is not sufficient for him to live on and pay the fixed charges, whatever those may be?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I suppose so.

Mr. NORRIS. Then does it not follow that men who are very wealthy, or who, like Mr. Bryan, can make something outside of the office, are the only ones who can be appointed to the office of Secretary of State?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, not necessarily; no.

Mr. NORRIS. If those fixed charges are necessary, how could a man who did not have the eloquence or the ability of Mr. Bryan, or of men like him, or a man who had not sufficient wealth outside of his salary, afford to accept the place?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Bryan has always felt, no doubt, that he had a right to use in any manner he might wish the time which men ordinarily spend as their vacation.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with that; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he has not yet answered my question. If it be true that the Secretary of State can not live and perform the duties of his office on a salary of $12,000, and that the salary should not be increased, does it not follow that only wealthy men can be appointed to the office, or men who can make some money outside of the salary of the office?

Mr. SHAFROTH. But Mr. Bryan has expressly stated that the compensation is amply sufficient to meet the ordinary expenses of living and the ordinary duties of his office, but that he himself——

Mr. NORRIS. What are the other charges?

Mr. SHAFROTH (continuing). That he himself has some fixed charges to pay; and that is a matter with himself, as to whether or not he would under those circumstances accept the office.

Mr. NORRIS. Do I understand, then, that the fixed charges of which the Senator is speaking are not charges pertaining to the office of Secretary of State, but something connected with Mr. Bryan's private affairs?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I suppose so.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not get that idea from what the Senator said.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; as I understand, they are connected with his own private affairs.

I am one who also believes that Cabinet officers, Senators, Representatives, and other officers of the Government are getting a fair compensation for their services. It may be that some are in the habit of making more money. I do not believe in great salaries. I do not believe men should get rich in public office out of the money which they get from the Government. I believe there should be some element of patriotism—some sacrifice, even, if necessary—in order that men should hold these high offices. For that reason it seems to me that our salary roll is sufficiently high, and should not be increased.

But Senators have said that if this rule prevails of a Cabinet officer going out and lecturing, it should also prevail as to subordinates; and it does. One month's annual leave is given to each of the employees in each of the departments of the Government. I apprehend that in that time if they want to lecture, or if they want to work on the farm, or if they want to do anything else, they have a perfect right to do it without criticism from anybody. So the privilege Mr. Bryan is exercising is not anything more than the privilege which is given to the very lowest of the Government employees.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether it is customary for these other employees to take their vacations at the end of the year or when they have been only three months in office?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know about the time. I think those in authority generally accommodate employees to their convenience, and let them select the time whenever they wish.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator is going to make a comparison, and to put the case under discussion on all fours with the illustration he makes, it really seems to me that at least the distinguished Secretary of State might have spent a few months in office without finding it necessary to go for a vacation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, well, the summer months are usually the months of vacation. Consequently I do not see that there is anything out of the ordinary in his choosing that time. In fact, there is usually less going on, and the presence of the head of the department is of less moment to the Government during the hot season.

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly the Senator from Colorado does not mean to say that there is less than usual going on at this moment in the office of the Secretary of State. Unless all the signs of activity are false, I should suppose that at this very moment some of the most important questions that are apt to come before the department are on its files.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know of anything except the Mexican matter that is being discussed to any extent. That is something which, in my judgment, should not be rushed, because of the fact that we know that the money brokers of Europe have been lending money to the Republic of Mexico, and now are exerting their influence upon the United States to induce it to recognize that Republic, not for any good to our Government, but in order that there may be more stability and more security to the loans which they have made to the Mexican Republic.

Mr. LIPPITT. It is reported that some foreign nations have made certain representations to this country on that subject. Of course, I am not informed upon that matter any further than I see in the public prints. But the statement and insinuation of the distinguished Senator would seem to imply that these foreign nations are being controlled in their action by foreign money lenders or somebody else. It seems to me that is going a long way beyond the facts in order to try to make it appear that this is a time when the Secretary of State can be most particularly spared from his duties, whereas all the ordinary signs seem to show that it is a time when he should be particularly attentive to his duties.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not apprehend that there is anything of special moment pending. The policy which has been pursued up to this time, according to newspapers, has been that of nonrecognition of the Republic of Mexico. It has been announced, though I have no knowledge concerning the matter either from the Secretary of State or from anyone connected with the administration, that recognition of the Republic of Mexico will be made whenever there is an election in that country, and a duly elected and qualified president is chosen by the people. It seems to me that is a wise policy. The election does not occur until the 26th day of October. Consequently I can not see what rush there is in relation to the matter. This is the season when many of the foreign ambassadors are away from Washington and hence the most appropriate time for a vacation for the Secretary of State. But, anyway, whether it is or not, Mr. Bryan has announced that every single lecture engagement he may have will be canceled if his presence is necessary at the Capital. I have no doubt that he will keep in close touch with every movement that is made in the State Department.

It seems to me this is a tempest in a teapot. Hundreds of cases have existed where men in public office have left Washington during the vacation season for the purpose of lecturing and for the purpose of attending to some of their own private business. To single out for criticism one man because he has been our leader in three successive campaigns is unworthy of the Senator who introduced the resolution and unworthy of the consideration of the Senate.

The discussion has deviated from the resolution. The resolution was with respect to compensation to public officers; but instead of that the discussion has taken the turn as to whether any man should be permitted to earn a dollar aside from his salary while he is holding a public office. It seems to me that as Mr. Bryan has stated clearly that he does not want his salary increased that ought to foreclose discussion with relation to the resolution, and it should be withdrawn.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I got into a colloquy a while ago with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], in which I stated that the Senate was in session during the Baltimore convention which nominated Woodrow Wilson for President. The Senator from Kansas stated that that was a flimsy argument; that the Senator from Kentucky well knew that the Senate had an agreement that they were not to transact any business; that two or three only met and adjourned. He was particularly emphatic in his declaration. He had just before that stated that he was reporting the proceedings of that convention, or giving his observations of that convention, for some newspaper or magazine for money.

If I were as unkindly disposed to the Senator from Kansas as he has been to the Secretary of State, I might have applied a great many of these "whereases" to him, because the Senate of the United States was in session and did transact business. It did not, as the Senator from Kansas states, meet and adjourn. It transacted considerable business, and I intend to insert it in the RECORD.

On July 1, when that convention was in session, the Senate passed a bill appropriating $10,000,000 of the people's money. The Senate was in session to that extent.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky if that was not after the unanimous-consent agreement had expired?

Mr. JAMES. Ah! No matter when the unanimous-consent agreement expired; I know nothing of that. Senators who themselves are critical of other people can not excuse themselves to the people who send them here by saying that all the Senate agreed with them not to do work while they did other work at a national convention.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Kansas is not excusing himself for anything.

Mr. JAMES. I understand that.

Mr. BRISTOW. He takes the responsibility for everything that he has said and every act that he has done, and asks no excuse or apology from the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. The Senate met on Monday, July 1, 1912. This convention was then in session. The RECORD shows that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who had previously given notice that upon this day he would call up the Indian appropriation bill, rose and said:

> I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 20728, being the Indian appropriation bill.
> The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Then follows the consideration of that bill, covering many pages of the RECORD.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. JAMES. So, Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas was mistaken when he stated there was an agreement that the Senate was to meet and adjourn and that there were not enough Senators here to do business during the Baltimore convention. The RECORD shows that they did do business, and on one bill to the extent of ten or twelve millions of dollars.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. JAMES. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Kentucky were frank, he would state that that business was transacted after the unanimous-consent agreement had expired, when everybody supposed the Democratic convention would have adjourned; and the reason it had not adjourned was because it was prolonged beyond anyone's expectations.

Mr. JAMES. Let me ask the Senator whether he did not stay in the convention at Baltimore and report its proceedings during this time?

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say that I did not; that I returned when the Senate resumed its sessions, and wrote the article which was last printed from Washington.

Mr. JAMES. Was the Senator present in the Senate when this bill was under consideration?

Mr. BRISTOW. I was.

Mr. JAMES. Then why did the Senator state that when the convention was in session at Baltimore there were not enough Senators here to transact business?

Mr. BRISTOW. There were not until the unanimous-consent agreement had expired; and I want to repeat that if the Senator were frank he would admit that he seeks to impute a misstatement to me. But I am not on trial here, and if I were I would not be tried by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, I am not seeking to put the Senator upon trial. I am seeking to sustain the statement I made.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am correct in the statement I made, and I repeat it now.

Mr. BRISTOW subsequently said: I should like to have incorporated in my remarks in the colloquy I had with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] the following order of the Senate. I should like to read it and have it made a part of the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. And the date of it, please.

Mr. BRISTOW. June 12, 1912.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I call up the unanimous-consent agreement which I offered last evening. I have changed it so as to make it more explicit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the following unanimous-consent agreement be entered into.

The Secretary read as follows:

"It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Monday, June 17, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will adjourn to Thursday, June 20, 1912; that upon the last-named day, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will adjourn to Monday, June 24, 1912; that upon the last-named day, and immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will adjourn to Thursday, June 27, 1912; that upon the last-named day, and immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will adjourn to Monday, July 1, 1912; and that during the period from June 17 to July 1, 1912, no business, other than routine morning business, will be transacted, and that no bills shall be passed."

It is on page 7981 of the RECORD, volume 48.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator is no more correct in that statement than in the other one, because the Senate on Thursday, June 27, did transact business. Motions were made, petitions were presented, messages from the President were presented to the Senate, and bills were passed. If that does not constitute a session of the Senate, what does constitute it?

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator please state what bills were passed?

Mr. JAMES. I have not had time to look over the particular bills. There are many pages of the RECORD here. I will put into the RECORD the whole proceedings, so that there may be no dispute about it. It shall all be before the Senate. But, Mr. President, this only goes to show that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. [Laughter in the galleries.] So far as I am individually concerned, I find no fault with the distinguished Senator from Kansas because he went to the Democratic convention. I wish to God he would go to more of them. [Laughter in the galleries.] But I do insist, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will preserve order in the galleries. He has had four notices.

Mr. JAMES. But I do insist, Mr. President, that the Senator would be subject to the same criticism by those who are disposed to be critical to which he undertakes to subject the Secretary of State.

The Senator stated in his argument this morning that he called for a passport for some friend, and he did not get it for two or three weeks. Surely the Senator does not mean to insinuate that the illustrious Secretary of State was responsible for some failure in the routine business of the State Department. Is that the character of statesmanship that is to be shown upon this floor for the purpose of securing some petty party advantage, by attacking small things? It is really gratifying, Mr. President, to see our Republican friends unable to criticize the great policies of our party, unable to criticize the tariff bill we present, unable to criticize the currency bill we have under consideration, but that they resort to small things——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. JAMES (continuing). For the purpose of making criticisms, and consuming the time of the Senate, and keeping back the passage of these great and important bills of relief to the people, while they discuss the question of the absence of the Secretary of State from the department for a few days to deliver lectures upon religious subjects.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. LIPPITT. I just rose for the purpose of venturing to assure the distinguished Senator from Kentucky that Senators on this side of the Chamber have no intention of not criticizing the "great policies," as he calls them, of his party.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, the Senator from Rhode Island is always ready and always ludicrous.

Mr. LIPPITT. If he for a moment thinks the bill is going to be passed through this Chamber without there being called to the attention of the people a great many points that we think are thoroughly justified by way of criticism, he is proceeding under a very mistaken idea.

Mr. JAMES. I venture to say that, even as courageous as the distinguished Senator is, he would not undertake to say now that he would vote for the repassage of the bill that bears the name of one of the distinguished citizens of the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky that before I would put my vote at the back of the tariff bill that has been brought in here, and which even at this moment is stopping the industries of my State and stopping the industries of neighboring States, I would vote for the bill that is now on the books ten times over.

Mr. JAMES. Let me say to the Senator, in relation to his remark about stopping industries, that that is an old gag. You played that off the boards long ago.

Mr. LIPPITT. Yes; that was an "old gag." It occurred in 1892 and 1893, and for months and months the employees of the mills in my State were walking the streets and going to the soup kitchens to get relief.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, that is an old, worn-out argument. I have heard that before.

Mr. LIPPITT. It is not worn out. It fits the present situation like a garment.

Mr. JAMES. But we will see the Senator when he comes in action upon the present tariff bill. That is the best answer to it all. But I think if there is one Senator above another upon that side that would stand for tariff duties so high that they would keep out competition of all sorts, I should most respectfully bow to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply rise to call the Senator's attention to a statement he made. I know the Senator wants to be accurate.

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator stated a moment ago that Senators on this side of the Chamber are delaying the consideration of the tariff bill by the discussion that is now under way. I will say for myself that I came into the Senate Chamber this morning expecting that the distinguished Senator who is at the head of the Finance Committee [Mr. SIMMONS] would make his opening argument, and we would proceed with a good deal of haste to consider this important measure. We understand why the Senator from North Carolina has not spoken; and we all trust, on this side of the Chamber, that he will be able to open the discussion to-morrow. I want to say to the Senator, and I speak from knowledge, that Republican Senators have no disposition whatever to delay the consideration of the tariff bill after they have had fair time to discuss it and consider its various provisions.

Mr. JAMES. I am very glad to hear the Senator from New Hampshire make that statement. It must be known, however, because it is of record, that practically all of the members of the Republican Party—all except two, I believe—voted against the motion to lay this resolution upon the table this morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that would be justified upon the ground that there was no other business before the Senate, and that we might as well have this interesting discussion as anything else.

Mr. JAMES. But the Senator is mistaken about that. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the second in command upon the Committee on Finance, is here ready, and has been, to make the report of the Finance Committee upon the tariff bill. It would have been reported immediately but for this matter that has been precipitated here.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would take just two minutes. If the Senator from Missouri were prepared to make a report, unquestionably the Senate would agree that the Senator should make that report—by unanimous consent, if necessary.

Mr. JAMES. I merely rose, Mr. President, not to engage in any controversial discussion with my friends upon the other side but merely to present this record as it is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. One remark made by the Senator struck me as justifying a little statement on my part. That was his apparent challenge everywhere of the fact that there was no disposition to discuss or take issue with the propositions made on that side of the Chamber with relation to the tariff and, he also added, in relation to the currency.

Mr. President, I fully realize that the sentiment of the people of the country will not countenance a discussion of the proposed currency legislation as a matter of partisan politics. I do not believe thoughtful gentlemen on that side of the Chamber want to have a great question of that kind, far-reaching as it is and affecting as it does men in every walk and in every station of life, discussed and considered and determined from the standpoint of the kind of political discussion we have heard here to-day on both sides of the Chamber. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. JAMES. I do not mean to interrupt the Senator, but I was trying to follow the line of his question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the question of currency legislation is to be put forward to the people of the country as a matter of the sort of partisan politics that is being discussed here this afternoon, God save the people of the United States.

Mr. JAMES. He will. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am sure He will; but I will add to that remark of the Senator that if the Democratic Party is going to approach the currency question in that spirit the Democratic Party will not save the people of the United States.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, what God Almighty intends to do with the people of the United States is a question about which I am not entirely informed. I think we are a good people and He will take care of us. I think we will do well now, however, to discuss the questions we have before us here, questions of great moment—the tariff bill, involving our consuming public and thousands of industries; the currency question, and other great problems—without halting this great work to play petty politics.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am perfectly willing that that shall be done; but the distinguished Senator from Kentucky threw out a very broad statement with reference to currency legislation.

Mr. JAMES. I think the Senator will be prepared to vote for the currency bill when it comes from the House.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to reply to that suggestion. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I propose, so far as it is possible for me to do so, to act in sympathy and in a spirit of cooperation with all the members of that committee and to help, so far as I can consistently with my convictions, the distinguished chairman of that committee, who has brought a currency bill into the Senate. But I wish to say that when we come to discuss the details and propositions entering into the bill as it is presented here now I shall, as the bill is proposed at the present time, be compelled to differ in a decided manner from those who contend that the bill is all-sufficient in its present form, not as a partisan, but as one who wishes to get the best possible legislation for the country upon the subject. I do not care to discuss it in advance of a full consideration by the committee of which I happen to be a member, but I suggest that the Senator should not make his charge too sweeping with reference to there not being sufficient conviction upon the subject to challenge discussion upon a great many features that are in the bill in its present form.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, so far as Mr. Bryan is concerned, no assault made here, no assault, in my judgment, made in the newspapers, no assault that may be fomented by political foes, can affect him. He is secure in the confidence and affection of his countrymen. No resolutions that you may pass, no partisan speeches that you may make, will ever convince the American people that William J. Bryan would desert his post of duty when there was the slightest necessity for his presence.

That has not been his record in times of defeat. It will not be his record in times of triumph. Our Republican friends used to tell us that if Bryan ever got into office he would ruin the country, and now the Senator from Kansas is telling us that if he leaves office he will ruin the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, many distinguished men, as the Senator from Missouri said, have gone upon the Chautauqua platform; and let me say, of all the forces of uplift, of all the powers that have made for our progressive life, of all the influences that have battled to relieve the people from the clutches of greed, I most respectfully point you to the Chautauqua platform. Free from the rancor and malice of partisanship, they gather to hear when they are cool and unprejudiced. They listen to these arguments, and the forces and the power of not only many distinguished men in this country, but more especially of Mr. Bryan, are responsible for the great uplift in this country and the trend toward better and higher ideals and purposes.

Mr. President, so far as criticism of Mr. Bryan is concerned, Senators upon the other side remained silent and free from criticism of the President of the United States, Mr. Taft, when he went, at Government expense, for the purpose of making political speeches, yet they freely and violently criticize Mr. Bryan when the speeches that he is making are those of a religious character, and I do not believe that even the Republican Party has much to fear from that.

And you may rest assured of just one thing, that Mr. Bryan will be in touch with his office at all times, and that at the slightest show of the necessity for his presence at the Capital he will be here to perform his duty.

In connection with my remarks, Mr. President, I ask that the entire proceedings of the Senate of June 27 and July 1, 1912, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The proceedings of the Senate referred to are as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 27, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., June 27, 1912.

To the Senate:

In the absence of the Vice President and of the President pro tempore of the Senate, by authority of Rule I, I hereby name DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, a Senator from the State of Florida, to perform the duties of the Chair to-day.

AUGUSTUS O. BACON,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

Mr. FLETCHER thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer, and directed that the Journal of the last legislative day's proceedings be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the Journal read this morning. A number of us have been absent.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have asked that the Journal be read this morning. Some of us who were not here desire to know what the Journal contains. We can spend that much time in hearing it read.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I withdraw the request.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, and it was approved.

THE FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HEYBURN. I notice in the Journal of the last legislative day that a communication from the Secretary of War, Senate Document No. 856, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That was in response to a resolution which I offered, and I desire that it shall lie on the table so that I may call it up in the morning hour. I was not able to be here at the time it was referred, but I do not desire that it be referred to a committee, because I wish to address the Senate upon it at an early day. For that reason I ask that the communication be withdrawn from the committee and that it may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the communication and that it may lie on the table. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT GHENT, BELGIUM (S. DOC. NO. 863).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $25,000 to enable the Government to participate in a universal and international exposition to be held at Ghent, Belgium, from April, 1913, to the end of October, 1913, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate communications from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by the court in the following causes:

Edgar L. Swaine, administrator of the estate of Peter T. Swaine, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 859);

Lucy May Castor, administratrix of the estate of Thomas Foster Castor, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 861);

Diantha G. Littlejohn, administratrix of the estate of John Egan, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 860); and Washington Loan & Trust Co., administrator of the estate of James W. Cuyler, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 864).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented resolutions adopted by the Swedish Evangelical Mission Covenant, in annual convention at Chicago, Ill., favoring the enactment of an interestate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by District Council, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen Society of North America, American Federation of Labor, of New York, remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called illiteracy-test amendment to the immigration law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions of the Diocese of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Connecticut Avenue Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, and a petition of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WORKS presented a memorial of members of the National League for Medical Freedom, of Los Gatos, Cal., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pacific Beach, Cal., praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a board of river regulation and to provide a fund for the regulation and control of the flow of navigable rivers, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the People's Church, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation granting the right of suffrage to the citizens of the Philippine Islands and the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Eureka, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES presented a petition of sundry citizens of La Crosse, Wash., praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a petition signed by a large number of stockmen of Mohave and Yavapai Counties, Ariz., with reference to the so-called leasing and grazing bill. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SELIGMAN, ARIZ., June 22, 1912.

Hon. HENRY ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned stockmen of Yavapai and Mohave Counties, Ariz., do respectfully ask you to do everything in your power and influence to assist in having the present leasing grazing bill passed.

This bill, known as the La Follette bill, proposes to lease the Government grazing lands of the western part of the United States or the public domain. The bill is now pending before the Senate of the United States Congress, and we earnestly request you to present this petition to the committee in charge of the bill and use your utmost efforts to have this bill passed before the present session of Congress adjourns.

Sincerely, your petitioners,

J. W. Sullivan, E. L. Paterson, D. L. Williams, Thos. King, Chas. King, Arthur King, M. A. Perkins, N. Perkins, S. Perkins, N. Penteny, Chas. Penteny, Joe Mathie, Albert Mathie, M. L. Boner, J. W. Knootz, John Duke, J. W. Stewart, Clarence Stewart, Rall Stewart, Geo. Carter, J. H. Stevens, Ed. Stevens, Chas. Ridgen, John Hurley, Joseph Campbell, Abe Caufman, Al Sanford, A. L. Nelson, Ed Carrow, John Lawler, Joe Tribble, Robt. Tribble, Lee Cockrell, Ed Haskins, Walter Brown, Le Van Evens, John Markham, Jas. Johnson, Carl Davis, Ray Carr, Dee Nelson, John Neil, W. B. Stevens, M. L. Boner, Henry Bacon, Jones Bishop, Sam Sloan, Geo. Miller, Wm. Epperson, William Ellison, John Simpson, Geo. Daniels, Dave Kaiser.

Mr. CURTIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial signed by 459 members of the Florida Branch of the League for Medical Freedom, remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7197) for the relief of the heirs of L. A. Davis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WORKS:

A bill (S. 7198) granting a pension to Ida A. Mitchell (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7199) granting a pension to Rebecca J. Murphy (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7200) granting an increase of pension to Rosa L. Couch (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 7201) granting a pension to Fannie M. Carey; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 7202) fixing the date of reenlistment of Gustav Hertfelder, first-class fireman, United States Navy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 7203) to provide for homestead entries in national forests; to the Committee on Public Lands.

DRY-FARMING PROCESS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill to exempt from cancellation and provide for patenting by dry-farming process desert-land entries. It is a very short bill, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD. With the permission of the Senate, if it be in order, I should like to give notice that immediately after the morning business on Tuesday, the 9th of July, if such be the pleasure of the Senate, I shall submit a few remarks with reference to the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not catch the suggestion of the Senator, and I ask what the request was?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request, as the Chair understands, is to introduce a bill and to have the bill printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought I heard something about the bill being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have the bill printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think there is no rule permitting that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Arizona is entitled to have the bill read, and in that way it will go into the RECORD. Let the Senator request that the bill be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not in order to print the bill in the RECORD without having it read.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I most respectfully ask to have the bill read. It is very short.

The bill (S. 7204) to exempt from cancellation and provide for patenting of desert-land entries reclaimed by dry-farming process was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That no desert-land entry heretofore made under the public-land laws for lands shall be canceled or in any wise impaired because of any failure on the part of the entryman to make any annual or final proof falling due upon any such entry prior to December 31, 1913: Provided, however, That patent shall be permitted to issue to any desert-land entry when the proofs disclose that the land embraced within such entry has fairly and in good faith been reclaimed to agricultural or horticultural crops by the dry-farming process."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona gives notice that he will address the Senate on this bill on the 9th of July, and it will lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST. With the kind permission of the Senate, I will change the notice to Tuesday, the 16th day of July. I feel it is due to the Senate that I should state that my remarks will be very brief, and it is simply because of what I deem to be the great public importance of the bill that I will take the time of the Senate to discuss it. My remarks, as I have said, will be brief, but I do feel that I should say something in support of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 to investigate the treatment of ores and other mineral substances with special reference to the prevention of waste in the mining and the utilization of important mineral resources, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WORKS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,250,000 for necessary improvements in the Colorado River to protect the land and property of Imperial Valley, Cal., from overflow, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment providing that hereafter the proviso to the act of July 1, 1898, directing that all bonds, notes, and checks be printed on hand-roller presses, shall not apply to checks, the backs and tints of all United States bonds, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 to pay the city of Salt Lake, Utah, to assist in defraying the expenses of the International Irrigation Congress to be held in that city September 30, 1912, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $28,000 to enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to make field examinations of selected lieu lands in California, and to adjudicate the same in the General Land Office, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $41,615 for the protection and improvement of the Mesa Verde National Park, Colo., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act and joint resolutions:

On June 25, 1912:

S. J. Res. 120. Joint resolution authorizing and directing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain from the United States Treasury the money appropriated for salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

On June 26, 1912:

S. J. Res. 101. Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of Andrew D. White a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; and

S. 6479. An act authorizing the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. to repair, alter, or rebuild certain bridges in the State of Arkansas.

THE ORGANIZED MILITIA (H. DOC. NO. 852).

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Very complete arrangements have been tentatively prepared for the participation in camps and maneuvers of a large portion of the Organized Militia of the United States. Preparation has been made for this most important military instruction both by the United States and by the various States whose Organized Militia will participate. The magnitude of the maneuver plans can be seen when it is estimated that 70,000 officers and enlisted men of the Organized Militia will take part in them during the coming year. Should it be impossible to carry out the contemplated maneuvers it will be at a very great loss of efficiency to the troops concerned and will entail a great disappointment to the thousands of men who, with the maneuvers in view, have been preparing themselves therefor.

In contemplation of the maneuvers it has been necessary already to expend the sum of $80,000 from the unexpended balance of last year's appropriation for maneuver purposes for the Organized Militia, which sum will be lost should the project of maneuvers not be consummated. In addition to this, the various States have made arrangements to expend large amounts from their apportionment from the funds appropriated by Congress under section 1661, Revised Statutes, or from funds appropriated by the State. Without an appropriation by Congress the maneuvers may not be held. I have the honor, therefore, strongly to recommend and urge that the following item, taken from House bill No. 18956 (Army appropriation bill), be enacted separately and specially:

"One million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars 'Encampment and maneuvers, Organized Militia, 1912–1914.'"

In addition to the appropriation for the Organized Militia for maneuver purposes it would be necessary that certain amounts be appropriated and made immediately available for the Regular Army to participate with the Organized Militia and aid the latter in the purpose of the maneuvers. This appropriation would total $367,500, and is made up of the following items:

Regular supplies	$160,000
Incidental expenses	4,500
Barracks and quarters	33,000
Army transportation	75,000
Roads and walks, etc	4,000
Water and sewers	57,000
Clothing and equipage	34,000
Total	367,500

The immense importance of the training of the militia leads me again to urge most strongly that the two appropriations mentioned be made available on or before the 2d day of July, 1912, since, unless the maneuvers can be definitely determined upon by that date, the plans for the encampments and maneuvers of a great portion of the Organized Militia of the United States will have to be abandoned.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 24, 1912.

LIEUT. COL. J. F. REYNOLDS LANDIS (S. DOC. NO. 862).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, concerning a silver medal and a diploma awarded by the Italian Government to Lieut. Col. J. F. Reynolds Landis, United States Army, in recognition of services rendered by him at the time of the Messina earthquake.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, these papers are submitted to Congress with a view to its decision whether the Secretary of State may be authorized to deliver the medal and diploma to Lieut. Col. Landis.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1912.

CAPT. FRANK PARKER (S. DOC. NO. 858).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Cuban Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, concerning a decoration of the Order of Military Merit of the Third Class which has been conferred upon Capt. Frank Parker, United States Army, by the President of Cuba in recognition of services rendered by Capt. Parker as military instructor of the rural guard of Cuba.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, these papers are submitted to Congress with a view to its decision whether the Secretary of State may be authorized to deliver the decoration to Capt. Parker.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1912.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and that the request of the House for a conference be granted, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. WETMORE, and Mr. FOSTER conferees on the part of the Senate.

ANNIE R. SCHLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley, which was, on page 1, line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "seventy-five."

Mr. MCCUMBER. In the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], I ask that the bill and amendment of the House of Representatives lie on the table until his return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5623) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors which was, on page 4, to strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I inquire what are the lines stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the paragraph of the bill stricken out by the House.

The Secretary read as follows:

"The name of Anne Jones Banks, widow of William Banks, late of Capt. William M. Allred's company, Nauvoo Legion, Utah Volunteers, Utah Indian War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month."

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order that under the unanimous-consent agreement a motion to concur can not be made. That would be to pass the bill, and would be legislative business.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I think the Senator is correct in regard to that; but I was not going to move to concur.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I was not going to move to concur, but simply that conferees be appointed. Probably, however, even that motion would not be in order, although I observe that in the case of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill conferees were appointed. I think, Mr. President, that all the pension bills amended by the House had better lie on the table until next Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will lie on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion. I was in some doubt when the conferees were appointed on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill as to whether that was not in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement. That period of the consideration of a bill often provokes considerable discussion. I do not raise any point against it, but it is no part of the morning business and I merely make that suggestion.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to say a word with regard to the appointment of the conferees in the case of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. It was not the intention in moving that conferees be appointed to perfect or present any conference report until next week. Debate and action usually take place in connection with the presentation of the conference report, but I should presume, unless I am reminded otherwise by something not now evident, that morning business would carry with it the receipt of messages from the House and the reference of a bill to a conference committee, the same as if a bill were introduced and referred to one of the regular committees of the Senate. Of course the appointment of the conferees is not a matter of voting, but the custom is to take the senior Senators who have served on the subcommittee and appoint them conferees. I only wanted, of course, to carry out what I thought was the morning business of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend to raise any objection that would embarrass the Senate at all; but I was of the opinion at the time the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into that it should have been better protected. Of course the conferees should be appointed, but clearly their appointment was not in accord with the unanimous-consent agreement.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday next, at the close of the routine morning business, I will ask the Senate to consider the Indian appropriation bill, being House bill 20728. I observe that notice has been given for the same time for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and I desire to say that the giving of the notice of the intention to ask for the consideration of the two bills on that day is not to be taken as suggesting any differences whatever between those who have them in charge.

Mr. HEYBURN. The original notice, as appears from the calendar, for the consideration of that bill was June 27. I understand the Senator has already given notice to that effect. Is this intended to be an original notice in lieu of any notice heretofore given?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, I do not know whether it is or not. There are several objections going to be made to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and, in order that Senators may know when the bill will come up, I give this notice.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, I, too, desire to give a notice. It is that on next Monday, when the Senate resumes business, I shall endeavor to have the Senate proceed immediately to the consideration of the chemical schedule bill. In the absence of Senators a unanimous-consent agreement, or what appears to be one, was obtained which undertook to confine the consideration of the chemical tariff bill to one calendar day. I think there will be some difficulty in enforcing that agreement, because it is my intention to discuss that measure when the order of the unfinished business is reached on that day, and if the unfinished business is laid aside it will be by a vote and not by unanimous consent. I merely give that notice.

Mr. CLAPP. Some time ago—in fact, very soon after the Indian appropriation bill was reported—I gave notice that I would ask for its consideration, and continued the notice from day to day. It is an appropriation bill, and I think Senators are desirous of getting the appropriation bills through the Senate and into conference. So I give this notice this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It seems to me that that is not morning business. I understood that nothing but morning business would be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the motion, although I think it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn, to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why make it 11? I should like to inquire why the Senate——

Mr. GALLINGER. I have made my motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to amend by making the hour of meeting 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has moved that the Senate adjourn to meet on Monday next at 11 o'clock. The Senator from Idaho moves to amend by making the hour 12 o'clock. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the original motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 42 minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 1, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore under the order of the Senate of June 12, 1912.

THE YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 2, 1912, an estimate prepared by Capt. C. H. Knight, Corps of Engineers, relative to the cost of new roads in Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the communication printed with the illustrations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be printed with the illustrations. To what committee is it desired that it should be referred?

Mr. HEYBURN. It should not go to any committee. It is in response to a resolution which I offered calling for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such communications are usually referred to some committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table, without objection.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6847) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 2, line 15, to strike out "Stotler" and insert "Statler."

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5623) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. Burnham, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6084) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments, ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. Burnham, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6340) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. Burnham, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6384) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers or sailors.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. Burnham, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6851) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and that a conference be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. Burnham, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

ANNIE R. SCHLEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley, which was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "seventy-five."

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Rayner] evidenced some interest in this bill. I will ask that the bill and amendment of the House may lie on the table until his return.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered without objection.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6925) to authorize the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri which were, on page 1, line 6, after "a," to strike out "railroad," and on page 1, line 7, after "point," to insert "on the west side of said river."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPERTY IN SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6252) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., which was, on page 2, strike out lines 4 to 17, inclusive, and insert: "to be used by the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That if the same shall at any time be used for any other than such charitable purposes, all right and title thereby relinquished shall revert back to and again vest in the United States," so that the act will read as follows:

"That all the right and title of the United States to the following-described property is hereby relinquished to the city and county of San Francisco, the same being the two 50 vara lots on which the old marine-hospital building now stands, fronting 275 feet on the north side of Harrison Street between Spear and Main Streets, with a uniform depth of 137 feet and 6 inches, as laid down on the official map of the said city, to be used by the city and county of San Francisco for such charitable purposes as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That if the same shall at any time be used for any other than such charitable purposes all right and title hereby relinquished shall revert back to and again vest in the United States.

"SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right at any time to amend, alter, or repeal this act."

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAWFORD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 to reimburse the Government of the Philippine Islands for expenses relative to the disinterment, shipment, and transportation of the remains of the late Ormon K. Osbon, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment providing that no allowance or disallowance heretofore made shall preclude an officer or enlisted man of the United States or Volunteer Army or his next of kin or personal representative from applying for and receiving any pay and allowance which may be due him under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the number of topographic and hydrographic draftsmen in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment relative to the donation of any land or building or the use of any land or building in or near the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., suitable for experimental work of the Bureau of Mines, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for inquiries and investigations into the methods of mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for inquiries and investigations into the mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADLEY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for expenses of the semicentennial exposition for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,656.88 for the purchase of additional land in Cave Hill Cemetery, at Louisville, Ky., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 to enable the Census Department to collect statistics concerning the quantity of leaf tobacco in all forms in the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws, etc., from $140,000 to $150,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. WETMORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 22126) relating to the compensation of clerks of the United States district courts, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

IMPERIAL VALLEY, CAL. (S. DOC. NO. 867).

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, a few days ago I offered an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill for the improvement of the Colorado River to prevent the overflow of land in the Imperial Valley. This is a matter of urgency. The appropriation has been urged by the Secretary of the Interior and has been recommended by a special message of the President.

I have here a statement showing the necessity for the improvement that is sought to be made. I move that the statement be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to accompany the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES IN PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGNS.

Mr. WORKS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 350), as follows:

"Whereas it is asserted and has been charged on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere that large sums of money have been furnished to and used by candidates for the office of President of the United States by the various candidates for that office to control the presidential primary elections in the different States, and otherwise, to secure the election of delegates to the national conventions of the Republican and Democratic Parties; and

"Whereas it is well known that many persons drawing salaries or other compensation from the Government for services as public officials or employees, from the President, Cabinet officers, and United States Senators down, have been using the time for which they have been paid by the Government in campaigning for themselves and others and aiding as campaign managers and otherwise during this session of Congress, and in the endeavor to influence and control the primary elections in the various States for the election of delegates and the nomination of candidates for President of the United States: Now therefore be it

"Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators, four Republicans and three Democrats, be appointed by the Vice President a special committee to investigate, inquire into, and report to the Senate the following facts:

"1. What amount of money has been subscribed, paid, or furnished to or for the use of each and every candidate for the nomination as a candidate for President of the United States, both Republican and Democratic, or to their and each of their managers, treasurers, auditors, committees, agents, or friends, or paid out or subscribed in aid or support of his candidacy, directly or indirectly, and the amount paid out by such candidate himself for such purpose, giving the name of each such candidate, the amount subscribed, paid, and used for or in aid of his candidacy, by whom paid, subscribed, or furnished, directly or indirectly, the name of each person or corporation by whom subscribed, furnished, or paid, and in behalf of which candidate; the amount paid by each person; the total amount subscribed, paid, and furnished to or in aid of the candidacy of each of such candidates; the amount of money paid out by or in aid of the candidacy of each such candidates and for what purpose, in detail, and the total amount subscribed, paid, or furnished to or for and paid out by all such candidates.

"2. What persons engaged in the campaign by and for each of such candidates or in aid thereof, in whatever mode or form, were under salary or other pay of the Government, in what capacity, the amount of compensation paid each of them, the amount of time devoted by each of them, including the candidates themselves, and the total amount of money paid by the Government to such persons and the aggregate amount paid to all of them for the time consumed by them all in conducting, carrying on, or in any way aiding in the conduct of such political campaign, giving the amount so paid for workers of all kinds for all of said candidates, giving them separately.

"3. The proportion or percentage of the registered and qualified voters voting at the presidential primary elections in each of the States, giving the Republican and Democratic percentage of votes cast separately, and the total vote cast at such election in each of the States, giving the Republican and Democratic votes separately.

"4. The amount of money paid to newspapers and other publications and periodicals and newspaper and other writers for services of any and every kind rendered by said newspapers and other publications and periodicals and writers in aid or support of each and every candidate for such office; the names of such newspapers and other publications and writers and the amount paid to each, directly or indirectly, whether for additional subscriptions or otherwise; the amount paid by, for, or on account of any such candidate in the aggregate, and the whole amount so paid by all of such candidates to all of such newspapers, publications, or periodicals.

"5. The cost to the candidates and each of them, and of the delegates attending the same, of the national convention for the nomination of candidates for President of the United States, and each of them, and for what purpose moneys were paid and used at each such convention, and particularly whether the expenses of any delegate to such convention, or either of them, were paid, either in whole or in part, by anyone other than themselves, and if so, by whom and in what amounts and on what terms and conditions, if any.

"6. In what States corrupt-practice acts have been enacted applicable to primary elections and, in general terms, the provisions of each of said acts and the penalties imposed for the violation thereof.

"That said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers; to send for persons and papers; to administer oaths; and to report the results of its investigations, including all testimony taken by it, and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee."

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have been an earnest advocate of the direct and presidential primaries. I believe they are necessary to the preservation of the rights of the people and the prevention of fraud and corruption in elections. I believe they will have that effect if rightly and honestly conducted. They have been on trial for the past few months. I think it is time to take account of stock and see what they have profited us.

We have just passed through a campaign in both of the great parties for the nomination of candidates for President of the United States. No American citizen can look back upon it without the blush of shame. Candidates for that great office have gone on the stump and canvassed for their own election. That was shame enough. But one of them was President of the United States and another an ex-President, pitted against each other. Their campaign was undignified, malicious, and disgraceful. It was not a discussion of principles or an effort to inform or instruct the people, but consisted of personal attacks and counter-attacks, criminations and recriminations. If half the things they said of each other were true, neither of them was fit to be nominated. The whole country was shocked at this unexampled spectacle. The people were humiliated and indignant. It was openly charged on the stump and on the floor of the Senate that enormous sums of money were being used to carry the election. The people have a right to know whether this charge is true or not. They have a right to know whether the direct primaries can be controlled by the use of money, as we all know the caucus and convention can be controlled and corrupted. If they can, if the masses of the people can not be trusted and their votes can be had for money, the last hope of maintaining the institutions of the country free and uncorrupted has vanished. The hope of the country rests upon the integrity and patriotism of the people.

We all know that public officials, paid by the Government, from the President down, have given their time, that the people are paying for, in carrying on the campaigns of the various candidates. The people have a right to know how much of the time paid for by them has been used in conducting, managing, and manipulating politics in the interest of candidates. They have a right to know, too, how much it cost to hold the nominating conventions and who put up the money for these expenses. The enormous sums of money expended in political contests has become one of the crying evils of the time. This country has every right to be informed on these subjects. In other words, the people have a right to know how much it costs them, in money and time, to nominate a candidate for President, and how much the candidates and their supporters have paid in the attempt to secure the nominations. It is information that touches the very vitals of our systems, new and old, of nominating candidates for President.

We have tried both the direct primaries and conventions in this campaign. The national convention at Chicago was a fitting sequel to the campaign that preceded it. It was full of malice and hatred. Charges of fraud and corruption were openly and loudly made. The nomination made is tainted with the belief of thousands of people that it was procured by unjust, fraudulent, and illegal means. And now we have a torn and dismembered party and the prospect of a new one. The movement for a new party is founded upon hatred, revenge, and ambition. The Democratic Party is torn with the same dissensions, the result of like causes.

What is the duty before us in this condition of discord and unrest? The people are going to rule this country. Of that we may be assured. If they can not do it through the instrumentalities of the old parties, they will have a new one. They will no longer be ruled by political bosses and privilege-seeking corporations. But we do not need a new party in California. The Republican Party in my State is decent and respectable. Five years ago California was one of the worst boss-ridden States in the Union. It was owned and controlled by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. and its hired bosses and corruptionists.

The question confronted us there, as it is confronting Republicans of the whole Nation to-day. Shall we form a new party to meet this consuming evil, or shall we undertake to free and redeem the old one? We chose the latter course. We succeeded beyond our fondest hopes. The good people of the State, Democrats and Republicans alike, came to the rescue. It was not a question of party, but of political freedom and civic righteousness. As a result the people and not the bosses have control of the party and the State government. They have complete control of the party organization. The Southern Pacific machine has retired from business. The State has the best and purest government in its history. We are not ready yet to surrender this redeemed and purified party to the old machine and embark in the perilous venture of a new party. When we do we want it to be a party founded on principle and the best interests of the public welfare. We want no political bosses or privilege seekers, who are looking for the loaves and fishes, to govern or control it, but men of courage and patriotism who are willing to sacrifice their standing and interest in the old party to the public good. But are we ready now for such a party? Is it necessary? Are we willing to surrender and give over the old party, with all its achievements and traditions, to the men who have brought it to the brink of ruin? Are we ready to give up the fight the Progressives have been making for a free and untrammeled party? Not yet. The fight has just begun, and the people have been winning battle after battle against the interests. Many of the States have already shaken off the shackles of boss rule and become free. So may all the others, and so they will if their leaders are faithful and vigilant.

I can remember when a mere boy shouting for Abraham Lincoln in his first campaign. Later, when still a boy, I took my place with thousand of others in the ranks of the Army formed to maintain the principles of freedom upon which the Republican Party was founded. I cast my first vote for Ulysses S. Grant, who led that Army to ultimate victory. I have cast my vote with that party in national affairs until now. Now I am called upon to make my choice between the old party and a new one to be formed. The temptation is great. The provocation is almost overwhelming. This is a time when men should search their own consciences and their motives unmoved by anger or passion and do what seems to each of them to be his patriotic duty to the whole people. I shall not shirk my own individual responsibility or question the motives of others who may take a different course. As conditions now present themselves to my mind, I can not join a new party movement. But, Mr. President, I do not want to be misunderstood by the Senate or by the country. It does not follow, from what I have said, that I shall support the alleged nominee of the Republican convention. I believe he secured his nomination by unjust and illegal means. I do not believe that he is the nominee of the party in any just or proper sense. I hope he does not realize, in accepting such a nomination, what thousands and thousands of his party believe to be the fact—that it was procured for him by compromising with fraud and corruption and the violation of an express statute of a State. But its alleged nominee is not the Republican Party. He does not represent its principles or its sentiments. His title to the nomination is tainted and questioned by the great mass of the party. Neither I nor any other Republican who views the situation and believes as I do owe him, personally, any political allegiance or support. If any good Republican representing the real sentiments of the party were to become an independent candidate, running on a progressive platform that he could conscientiously stand upon, the voters of the party would sustain him; but in my judgment the man who attempts to form a new party, as conditions now are, will not be serving the interests of the people. Better far to see the great Republican Party go down to temporary defeat now for the sins its leaders have committed, and redeem it four years hence, than attempt the uncertain and dangerous remedy of forming a new party. Better, for the time being, to "bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of." The party had already been purged in many of the States of its worst and most dangerous elements. Many of the members of the national committee who made possible the nomination that was brought about had been repudiated in advance by the voters of their States. This victory was thrown away by the delegates chosen to represent the progressive element of the party in the convention, a victory that would in all probability have taken the control of that committee out of the hands of the powers that manipulated it at the convention. Four years from now, if we stand to our guns and do not follow after false gods, the people will have complete control over the Republican Party in the Nation, as it now has in many of the States.

Mr. President, this struggle for political freedom and civic righteousness is not confined to the Republican Party. Its great rival, the Democratic Party, has the same fight with the powers of evil; and one man, with a courage and patriotism that challenges my admiration and respect and should incite the gratitude of the American people, is bravely fighting for the integrity and righteousness of his party and fighting practically single handed and alone. He is making the fight that every good and loyal citizen should be making, not outside but inside of his party. If that effort, rightly made, fails, it will be time enough to form a new party? If it does fail, no one will be more ready than I to form that new party, founded on principles of justice, liberty, purity, and honesty in politics.

Mr. President, I have offered these resolutions so that the people may, so far as it can be ascertained by such an inquiry as they call for, be informed as to what has brought us to this present pass, so far as the campaign just closed is concerned.

I understand the Vice President is not likely to be present for some time to come. I desire, therefore, to amend my resolution, where it authorizes the appointment by the Vice President, so as to read "by the President pro tempore of the Senate."

I desire further to say that in view of the limited attendance this morning I shall not insist upon pressing the resolution at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified as suggested by the Senator from California.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that under the law the resolution will necessarily go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. I was about to suggest that it take its regular course and go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is necessary that that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution necessarily will be so referred.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, before the close of morning business, if I may be indulged, in order briefly and imperfectly to do what should be done with care and elaboration, I will interpose a demurrer to the statement read by the Senator from California. I do not desire that it should be taken as accepted by Republicans.

I shall not occupy any considerable time. Not having the resolution of the Senator from California in print, and not having known that such a motion would be made, it will, of course, be somewhat difficult to cover the subject. I shall not undertake to do that.

An attack has been made in this resolution upon the integrity of the President of the United States as an incumbent and as a candidate for reelection. Concurrently an attack has been made upon those who are responsible for his nomination. Still further, an attack has been made upon the integrity of the Republicans of this Nation.

Mr. GALLINGER. And upon Members of this body who are upon the national committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire who sits on my left, upon Members of this body who chance to be members of the national committee. More than that, with an ever-widening circle of slander, an attack has been made upon the citizenship of the country at large.

It is charged, in effect, that the standard of the citizenship of this country is so low and so venal that it may be bought and sold like chattels in the markets; that it may be controlled by corrupt men. This resolution undertakes to stamp a character of degradation, inefficiency, and corruption upon the citizenship of this country to the extent that it controls the Government. The man who can be corrupted is as bad a citizen as the man who corrupts him or attempts to do so. There is no difference under any rule of morals or of law.

So this resolution charges that these people constituting the citizenship have been subject, for a period not named, to the dominion and control and manipulation of corruption and corrupt men. I deny it. I challenge any man, responsible for this resolution or otherwise, to hand in to the Secretary of the Senate and have read from the desk the names of five men that within his knowledge come within the class of debauched citizenship.

No man should be allowed to slander another, even in political excitement or campaigns, without being held responsible. The offense of slandering the American citizenship, singly or in the aggregate, is as heinous a crime as that of attempting to bribe them. It is usually indulged in for the purpose of compelling some one to do or not to do something—heaping opprobrium and epithets upon your fellow citizen in order to deter him or to influence him one way or the other.

The statement in the resolution that an unhappy condition of affairs has existed in the country is true in a very large measure. It did not emanate from the rank and file or the leadership of either party, singly and alone. Whatever of the unhappy conditions pictured in this resolution have existed are the result of an attempt—an irresponsible and unwise attempt—to change overnight the form of this Government and the manner of the performance of the political duties of citizenship. Where there is no meeting or coming together of men there can be no riot. Where the opportunity is not given or accorded them to violate long-established principles the principles are safe.

It is not necessary to take up the resolution in detail and analyze it, because it is all based upon one wrong, vicious proposition. To stand in the Senate of the United States and charge that Members of this body, in the performance of their individual citizenship, have participated in disreputable and dishonest procedure in a national convention is intolerable, and if such a charge is made it should be accompanied by the names of those charged.

We have a rule in this body which precludes any Member from speaking disrespectfully of another. We have a rule in this body which precludes any Member from charging another with improper motives. It may be said that that applies only to his actions in the body. I hold that it applies to the action of the Senator, because he is a Senator of the United States wherever he is during the tenure of his office.

What a document that would be to read in the public schools of the United States! As well take in the infected flag of smallpox or cholera. It is a more serious offense to poison the minds of the children and the students of the country than it is to infect them with a disease. The mind, once tainted, never is restored to perfect health. A suggestion of dishonor made against the representative bodies of the people of the country is never eradicated from the mind of the child.

If it is said that the charges are true, why investigate them? No man should say that these charges are true unless he can stand in his place and show that they are true by giving the day, date, data, and names. The things charged in that document are crimes. They are crimes against the law of citizenship; they are crimes against the law of the land. There should be no necessity for an investigation of such a charge by a committee.

What would be the result? Send out a committee of this body to travel up and down the land for months and months, sitting in various places, with its daily proceedings made the subject matter of newspaper quibble and comment, charge and vituperation, and you had as well send the trailing bag of infectious disease from one end of the country to the other to poison the air. There is nothing more important than that the minds of the people of the country, especially of the youth and those whose minds are in process of formation, should remain untainted by a charge coming from a responsible body.

It is bad enough to be confronted with irresponsible slander, but it is infinitely worse to be confronted by a charge coming with the sanction of the Senate of the United States for investigation in the local communities of the United States. The committee would succeed in procuring conjecture, uncertainty, but would any man come before the committee and make a definite charge? If he would, he is accessible now without this public exhibition of irresponsible charges.

The thing to be desired is that whatever has occurred during these political contests shall be buried in oblivion as soon as possible, that most of the men shall be forgotten at the earliest possible moment. The names of men who engage in disgraceful conduct in the performance of public duty ought not to be remembered overnight. No man is entitled to fame because of his misbehavior.

This, if it is calculated for anything more than another, is calculated to perpetuate the consideration of the evil deeds of evil men. We do not want that kind of history written. We want to write only the history of the good deeds of good men, and how much of it would be found in the report of this committee? It does not ask that the committee shall investigate lawful deeds of men engaged in lawful proceedings. It is a little on the order of the journalism of the day. I have not seen in any paper any statement as to the good deeds of a man in display type at the head of a column. I have not noticed any reference to the class of men who do good deeds except, perhaps, in obituary. Would this committee sit under the resolution to hear the facts in regard to really great and pure statesmen actuated by high motives of statesmanship? It does not ask that they shall do it, and they have no jurisdiction. It is simply a dragnet in search of crime, in search of the disreputable, in search of that which should be forever hid.

Now, Mr. President, it is not a subject to elaborate on very much, in my judgment. It contains suggestions and innuendoes enough to wipe out every good and patriotic impulse in the mind and breast of every child in the land. A suggestion that those things are true to those who are studying the institutions and learning the lesson of citizenship is a blot upon their life, I care not what are the politics of the officials who are charged irresponsibly, against whom a suggestion is made that if you will enter into this investigation you will probably find that they are disreputable. I would like the man to stand up before us and make the charge. I like the habit when a man commences to tell you in confidence something to the detriment of another to say, "Wait; I will call him up on the phone that I may have him here and listen to the conversation." I have stopped a good many confidences of that kind in that way.

Let any man making those charges give the names, and in the presence of those whose names he gives take the chances. If he will not, the charge ought not to be made. Let us elevate the standard of citizenship so that there will be no possibility of such a condition as is presented here this morning.

I am not going to consider the question whether or not there will be two parties or three parties or many parties in the coming campaign. The man whose mind is bent on considering that question as paramount loses sight of the principles for which parties stand. The Republican Party at Chicago has redeemed itself in its tariff declaration. We do not find within that platform the old saw about the difference between the cost of production abroad and at home. That absurdity is eliminated. It is a perfect tariff plank, except for one little joke in it, which suggests that some duties are too high. I think so. I think myself the duty on beeswax and curled feathers might be reduced. I am not afraid to meet a platform anywhere in considering the question of adjusting business relations between the American people and the people of other countries. I do not know what kind of a plank will come over from Baltimore. I do not know that I am very much interested in it, because a man can not ride in two cars at the same time, and he can not vote two tickets at the same election—that is, I do not think he can.

This resolution leaves the people up in the air, with nothing beneath their feet. It does not advise supporting either party. It rather intimates that there may come a deliverer out of Israel.

Now, Mr. President, I have said more than I intended to say, but I feel that a resolution like that should not go through in a perfunctory manner, be referred to a committee as though it were something serious, reported by a committee as though it were worthy of consideration, and considered in the Senate as though we were here to spend our time in the consideration of such a matter. I hope that the committee will be supplied with a proper undertaker for burial services.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, this resolution has been regularly referred, and I am not going to take up the time of the Senate now in discussing the merits of it.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has made a resolution of his own and discussed it quite elaborately, not the resolution offered by me. Evidently he did not pay attention to the reading and has not read the resolution itself. The resolution does not charge anybody with anything. It is purely and simply a resolution calling for inquiry as to the truth of the charges that have been made by somebody else, and made on the floor of the Senate, not by me, not by the resolution. It calls for an inquiry into the truth of the facts that have been spread all over the country, not only as emanating from the floor of the Senate of the United States, but charges that were made in the political campaign over and over again affecting the integrity of the Republican Party and those who are connected with it.

Now, who should object to the truth being known about it? The best way to overcome the evil is to disclose it and then handle it. That is just what we have to do with the affairs of the Government and in politics to-day if we are going to accomplish anything.

It was charged, Mr. President, on the floor of the Senate within a very short time, that millions of dollars had been expended to control this campaign. It was said upon the floor of the Senate that a Member of this body had made that same charge on the stump throughout the country. All sorts of charges were made during the continuance of the Republican convention. How much of them were true, how much of them were false, none of us know. But I say, Mr. President—and I say it in all sincerity—that the people of this country have a right to know whether these charges are true or false and the Senate of the United States, standing as a representative of the people, have a right to ask that this kind of an investigation may be had in order to determine whether the charges are true or not.

These resolutions do not charge corruption upon the part of the citizens of this country, as the Senator from Idaho assumes. I sincerely hope that the investigation made under the resolution will disclose the fact that they are not subject to corruption, because it would be a sorry day for this country if it should ever come when the masses of the people of the country could be influenced and corrupted with money.

There are some things recited in the resolution that every Senator on this floor knows to be true. As the Senator from Idaho says, that does not need any investigation. Members of this body and other public officials have been giving their time day after day to carry on the political campaigns of the different candidates. We know it. A good many of the people of the country do not know it, and they have a perfect right to know if it be true that men sent here as their representatives, men employed in the departments of the Government, and paid by them, are using the time for which they are paid by the Government to carry on the campaign of any candidate for President or any other office within the gift of the people.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I want to ask the Senator, in all candor, if those remarks would not apply to some of the Members of this body?

Mr. WORKS. I think they are applied to Members of this body, as the Senator would have known if he had listened to the resolution. I think, if an investigation of this kind is made, that it will be found to be true with respect to Members of this body the same as other public officials.

As I said in the beginning, I am not disposed to discuss the merits of this resolution. I am perfectly willing to take such responsibility as may flow from its introduction. It is for the proper committee and the Senate to determine whether this investigation shall be made or not. I have submitted the resolution in good faith. I think it calls for an investigation, which should be made and made thoroughly, but that, as I have said, is a matter for the Senate to determine.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, personally I have no objection whatever to the resolution introduced by the Senator from California. I, however, do have objection and I wish to protest as a Republican against the argument that was used to bolster up the resolution. We have heard the cry of fraud throughout the country in reference to the presidential primaries from the very beginning, and there is not a man in the Senate of the United States who did not thoroughly understand why that cry of fraud went out months before an election was had in a single State. It is the practice of the incendiary who purposes to destroy by fire to cry fire in some other quarter of the city and thereby divert attention from his own work. We have heard the cry of fraud and what was going to happen and the contests that were going to be initiated from one end of the country to the other. We knew when that cry went forth that there was a purpose, a clear purpose, to create fake contests all over the country, and as those fake contests would necessarily be dismissed there would be seemingly some ground for suspicion and enable the cries of fraud to gain some attention when they were dismissed.

I think it most unjust at this time, in support of a resolution of this character, to declare that the President of the United States received his nomination through fraud and corrupt practices. I do not believe it. Mr. President, myself, and I do not believe that there will be any evidence forthcoming to sustain a charge of that kind.

I am perfectly willing to investigate the question of the amount of money that is necessary in these primary contests. I am willing to investigate and ascertain how many dollars it takes to bring out one-quarter, one-fifth, or one-tenth of the party vote in any one of the States.

There are some justifiable provisions included in the resolution of the Senator from California. I agree with him that a contest has been carried on that has been a disgrace to the American people, and the very system that the Senator supports so strongly and so earnestly has been the system that has invited the kind of personalities against which he complains.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCUMBER. In just a moment.

Personalities and personal abuse that never would be made before a convention of intelligent men, that never would be made before a legislature in any State in the Union, have been indulged in as fit arguments by those who think they can mislead the people by making charges of a criminal character, charges that would not be made before any convention or any gathering of men organized to make nominations. I agree with the Senator on many of those things contained in his resolution, but I do not agree with him that there has been any fraud or injustice whatever in the matter of dismissing any of those fake contests. There may have been some few contests in which there were close questions, but I believe as a whole the members of the national committee acted honestly and conscientiously in their decisions, and to charge that they have acted dishonestly and corruptly is not only uncalled for but is untrue.

Why, Mr. President, the greatest——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCUMBER. One moment. The greatest amount of money that was ever raised in any political campaign was raised in 1896 during the McKinley campaign, and not a dollar of the millions of dollars that were raised was used to buy votes; it was used for literature; it was used to pay the expenses of the speakers; it was used to cover the thousands of expenses that are necessary to carry on a great campaign of education. I do not condemn the using of a great amount of money, whether it comes from the Standard Oil Co., whether it comes from Mr. Perkins in support of his candidate, or whether it comes in support of the present President of the United States, if it is used honestly and fairly for the purpose of getting out literature, for the purpose of presenting facts to the people and not sensational falsehoods. I think the greater force we can have to disseminate true political knowledge over the country the better it will be for the country.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota may be perfectly right that the presidential primary has resulted in such a campaign as we have just witnessed. If that be the case it has a great deal to answer for, and if it is going to have such an effect in this country I want to know it. I am not so wedded to any kind of machinery for conducting the elections of this country as to insist upon that or any other machinery that is going to result in such consequences.

With respect to the question of the expenditure of money, certainly there may be legitimate expenditures of money in a political campaign whether for President of the United States or anybody else. The object and purpose of the resolution is to ascertain whether the large sums of money alleged to have been used have been used properly or not. To that I should think the Senator from North Dakota would not object.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I do not object to that, Mr. President.

The closing remarks of the Senator from California in his first address on this subject were not surprising to me. It is a part of what has seemed to me for the last 8 or 10 years to be a consistent policy—a policy of rule or ruin. "If we can not rule the party, if we can not secure the success of our nominee this year, we will turn against the candidate who is nominated." Then they use that as a reason why some other person, representing a different view, should be selected next time. I have heard in a number of the States in the past few years, where we have conducted such elections, the claim made: "We have put up our candidate"—I will say "our progressive candidate"—"for a number of years in the primary; he has not been chosen; so we will elect a Democrat to that position. That will furnish evidence to you, the people of the country, that you had better nominate our candidate." It is simply a hold-up system. "Support our views; support our candidate; or we will destroy the party." That is the proposition in a nutshell that is presented to the Senate of the United States in the argument that has just been made. "If we can not secure the defeat of your candidate in the primary, then the next step is to defeat him in the election. We will try once more; we will defeat him, if it is possible; if we should not succeed in defeating him, it will be time enough then to consider whether it is necessary to create a third party in order to win."

Mr. President, I believe in fighting out our difficulties within the party itself. I do not believe that the public is so corrupt, I do not believe that the average people who go as delegates to conventions are so corrupt, as the Senator would have us believe. I do not believe that those who support one party are criminals and those who support the other party are saints. I believe that we should and can fight out these questions in our conventions, or fight them out in our primaries if we have the primary system, and then let us as good partisans stand by the party of our choice. If there is a plank in our platform that is not just according to our idea, let us try to better fit it to the necessities of the country. If we think our tendency is in the wrong direction, let us work together to guide the party in the right direction. We gain nothing by uniting a number of people who have been defeated in their purposes and attempting to destroy the old organization by creating a new one.

Mr. President, I only rose primarily to dissent most earnestly from this continuous cry of fraud by those who were defeated, and while I might have, with the majority, differed as to some of the contests that were decided I certainly believe that the men who decided them were honest in their convictions in every decision. The majority of the elected delegates favored the renomination of President Taft. As a Republican he is my nominee. Had either of his opponents been nominated I should have supported that nominee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that House joint resolution No. 331 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WARREN. I think the joint resolution should be read for information, and then referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I will say that the committee have already had the subject under consideration and will probably be prepared to report at once; but I wish that the joint resolution may be read so as to go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

"Resolved, etc., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government, and for the payment of pensions under existing laws, which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1912, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for and during the month of July, 1912, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than as the sum of one-twelfth of the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1912 bears to the whole of the appropriations of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1913 under the several appropriations hereby continued, and under the several appropriation bills now pending, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal one-twelfth of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1912, and eleven-twelfths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any office shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: And provided further, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the same.

"This joint resolution shall be construed as authorizing the continuance of the salaries and other expenses under the organization of the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce and Labor as the latter existed June 30, 1912, for the period of time and under the conditions provided herein for all other branches of the public service."

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: The Committee on Appropriations, having considered House joint resolution 331, I report it back favorably without amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS OF HON. N. C. YOUNG (S. DOC. NO. 865).

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I have here a very short address delivered by Hon. N. C. Young, late a member of the Supreme Court of the State of North Dakota, on the subject, "Shall we change our plan of government?" I consider it a very worthy article, and ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MANEUVERS OF REGULAR ARMY AND MILITIA.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if any immediate action is being taken in regard to the appropriation for maneuver camps?

Mr. WARREN. We will await the action of the other House upon that matter. Of course we have been unable to act until to-day, but I assume that the other House will take care of it, and that we shall hear from them soon.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Very well.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GOVERNMENT EXPENSES (H. DOC. NO. 854).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I send herewith the report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency on "The need for a national budget." The recommendations contained therein are approved by me. I recommend to the Congress the enactment of the legislation necessary to put them into effect.

The subject is one of fundamental importance to the Executive as well as to the Congress. Notwithstanding the magnitude and complexity of the business which is each year conducted by the executive branch and financed by the Congress, and the vital relation which each governmental activity bears to the welfare of the people, there is at present no provision for reporting revenues, expenditures, and estimates for appropriations in such manner that the Executive, before submitting estimates, and each Member of Congress, and the people, after estimates have been submitted, may know what has been done by the Government or what the Government proposes to do.

Briefly stated, the situation is this: Under the Constitution (and subject to its limitations) Congress is made responsible for determining the following questions of policy: What business or work the Government shall undertake; what shall be the organization under the Executive which is charged with executing its policies; what amount of funds and by what means funds shall be provided for each activity or class of work; what shall be the character of expenditures authorized for carrying on each class of work—i. e., how much for expenses, how much for capital outlays, etc.

As a means of definitely locating this responsibility Congress was given the sole power to levy taxes; to borrow money on the credit of the United States; to authorize money to be drawn from the Treasury. To the President also has been given very definite responsibility. To the end that Congress may effectively discharge its duties the article of the Constitution dealing with legislative power provided that "a regular statement and account of receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be published," and the article dealing with the Executive power requires the President "from time to time to give to the Congress information on the state of the Union and to recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall deem necessary and expedient."

Notwithstanding these specific constitutional requirements there has been relatively little attention given to the working out of an adequate and systematic plan for considering expenditures and estimates for appropriations, for regularly stating these in such form that they may be considered in relation to questions of public policy, and for presenting to Congress for their consideration each year, when requests are made for funds, any definite plan or proposal for which the administration may be held responsible.

Regular committees on expenditure have been established by the Congress for the purpose of obtaining knowledge of conditions through special investigations. During the last century over 100 special congressional investigations have been authorized to obtain information which should have been regularly submitted, and much money as well as much time has been spent by the Congress in its effort to obtain information about matters that should be laid before them as an open book; many statutes have been passed governing the manner in which reports of expenditures shall be made; specific rules have been laid down giving the manner in which estimates shall be submitted to Congress and considered by it. From time to time special investigations have been made by heads of executive departments. During the last century many such investigations have been carried on and much money has been spent in the conduct of these, as well as by Congress, for the purpose of obtaining facts as a basis for intelligent consideration of methods and procedure of doing business with a view to increasing economy and efficiency. From time to time Executive orders have been issued and reorganizations have taken place.

Generally speaking, however, the only conclusions which may be reached from all of this are that—

No regular or systematic means has been provided for the consideration of the detail and concrete problems of the Government.

A well-defined business or work program for the Government has not been evolved.

The reports of expenditures required by law are unsystematic, lack uniformity of classification, and are incapable of being summarized so as to give to Congress, to the President, or to the people a picture of what has been done and of cost in terms either of economy of purchase or efficiency of organization in obtaining results.

The summaries of expenditures required by law to be submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, with estimates, not only do not provide the data necessary to the consideration of questions of policy, but they are not summarized and classified on the same basis as the estimates.

The report on revenues is not in any direct way related to the expenditures, except as the Secretary of the Treasury estimates a surplus or deficiency, and this estimate is based on accounts which do not accurately show expenditures or outstanding liabilities to be met.

Instead of the President being made responsible for estimates of expenditures, the heads of departments and establishments are made the ministerial agents of Congress, the President being called on only to advise Congress how, in his opinion, expenditures may be reduced or revenues may be increased in case estimated expenditures exceed estimated revenues.

The estimates do not raise for consideration questions which should be decided before appropriations are granted, nor does the form in which estimates are required to be presented by the Congress lay the foundation for the consideration of subjects of work to be done, the character of organization best adapted to performing work, the character of expenditures to be made, the best method of financing expenditures.

The present law governing the preparation and submission of estimates, requiring them to be submitted each year in the same form as the year before, was passed without due consideration as to what information should be had before Congress as a basis for action, the result being that the unsystematic and confused method before in use was made continuous.

The rules of the Congress do not provide for the consideration of estimates in such manner that any Member of Congress, any committee, or either House of Congress as a whole may have before it at any one time the information needed for the effective consideration of a program of work done or to be done.

The committee organization is largely the result of historical development rather than of the consideration of present needs.

Inadequate provision is made for getting before each committee to which appropriations are referred all of the data necessary for the consideration of work to be done, organization provided for doing work, character of expenditures, or method of financing.

Following the method at present prescribed, the estimates submitted by each organization unit may have to be split up for consideration by appropriation committees of the Congress and be made the subject of several different bills; in few places are all of the estimates or appropriations asked for by a single organization unit brought together.

The estimates for appropriations requested for a single class of work are similarly divided, no provision being made for considering the amount asked for, the amount appropriated, or the amount spent for a single general class of governmental activity.

Generally speaking, the estimates for expenses (or cost of each definite class of services to be rendered) are not separately shown from estimates for capital outlays (or cost of land, buildings, equipment, and other properties acquired).

While the classification and summaries of estimates do indicate a proposed method of financing, these summaries do not show classes of work or the character of expenditures provided for, and therefore can not lay the foundation for the consideration of methods of financing as a matter of governmental policy as is contemplated under the Constitution.

The appropriations are just as unsystematic and incapable of classification and summary as the estimates; in fact, follow the same general form, making it difficult and in many cases impossible to determine what class of work has been authorized, how much may be spent for each class, or the character of expenditures to be made; nor does any one bill cover the total authorizations for any particular general class of work.

Bills for appropriations (the authorizations to incur liabilities and to spend) are not considered by the committee to which measures for raising revenues and borrowing money are referred, nor are revenues and borrowings considered by committees on appropriations in relation to the funds which will be available.

So long as the method at present prescribed obtains, neither the Congress nor the country can have laid before it a definite understandable program of business or of governmental work to be financed; nor can it have a well-defined, clearly expressed financial program to be followed; nor can either the Congress or the Executive get before the country the proposals of each in such manner as to locate responsibility for plans submitted or for results.

Although the President has the power to install new and improved systems of accounts and to require that information be presented to him each year in such form that he and his Cabinet may intelligently consider proposals or estimates, although the President, under the Constitution, may submit to the Congress each year a definite well-considered budget, with a message calling attention to subjects of immediate importance, to do this without the cooperation of the Congress in the repeal of laws which would be conflicting, and in the enactment of other laws which would place upon the heads of departments duties to be performed that would be in harmony with such procedure would entail a large expenditure of public money in duplication of work.

The purpose of the report which is submitted is to suggest a method whereby the President, as the constitutional head of the administration, may lay before the Congress and the Congress may consider and act on a definite business and financial program; to have the expenditures, appropriations, and estimates so classified and summarized that their broad significance may be readily understood; to provide each Member of Congress, as well as each citizen who is interested, with such data pertaining to each subject of interest that it may be considered in relation to each question of policy which should be gone into before an appropriation for expenditures is made; to have these general summaries supported by such detail information as is necessary to consider the economy and efficiency with which business has been transacted; in short, to suggest a plan whereby the President and Congress may cooperate—the one in laying before the Congress and the country a clearly expressed administrative program to be acted on, the other in laying before the President a definite enactment to be acted on by him. Included in this report are summaries of expenditures for the year 1911, summaries of appropriations for the fiscal year 1912, and summaries of estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1913. To these summaries your special attention is invited. Attached is also an appendix containing a digest of laws pertaining to appropriations and allotments, to the preparation of estimates, and to forms of reporting expenditures; also the suggested pro forma draft of budget, which has been prepared by the commission and is submitted for your consideration as a matter bearing very directly on the economy and efficiency with which Government business is carried on.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1912.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

WILLIAM F. M'KIM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representative to the bill (S. 1754) to correct the military record of William F. McKim, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of William F. McKim."

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6978) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

H. R. 4113. An act for the relief of Robert E. Burke;
H. R. 4512. An act for the relief of Mary Beal; and
H. R. 25060. An act for the relief of Joe Cook.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs;

H. R. 18425. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Simon Nager; and
H. R. 19190. An act for the relief of John F. Risley.

UNEXPENDED BALANCE FOR PARTING AND REFINING BULLION.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report back favorably without amendment Senate joint resolution No. 121, authorizing the use of certain unexpended balances to defray expenses incident to parting and refining bullion, and I submit a report (No. 899) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, etc., That the unexpended balance of the permanent indefinite appropriation for parting and refining bullion remaining on the books of the Treasury June 30, 1912, may be drawn upon to defray in full the expenses incidental to refining and parting bullion in the mints at Denver and San Francisco and the assay office at New York, including labor, material, wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps, until the regular appropriations for the mint service for the fiscal year 1913 are available, and that the amount expended under this provision shall be deducted from the annual appropriation for this service."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the report accompanying the joint resolution may be printed in the RECORD. It is short and carries with it a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in explanation of the necessity for the passage of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire that it be printed in the RECORD without being read?

Mr. WARREN. Without being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The report submitted this day by Mr. WARREN is as follows:

"Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report, to accompany Senate joint resolution 121:

"The Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) authorizing the use of the unexpended balance of the permanent indefinite appropriation for parting and refining bullion remaining on the books of the Treasury June 30, 1912, for said purpose for the fiscal year 1913 until the annual appropriation therefor is available, reports the same to the Senate with the recommendation that it pass without amendment, and in explanation of the action of the committee respectfully submits the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"Washington, June 29, 1912.

"Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
"Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
"United States Senate.

"SIR: In connection with the consideration of a joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenses of the Government after June 30, 1912, pending final action upon the regular appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1913, I beg to invite your particular attention to the situation relative to parting and refining operations in the mints and the assay office at New York.

"The provision under which all expenditures incident to parting and refining bullion have been met for years past is to be found in the deficiency act of July 7, 1898 (see ch. 571, 30 Stat. L., 657), and reads as follows:

"'Chapter 571. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

"'PAR. 4a. And refining and parting of bullion shall be carried on at the coinage mints of the United States and at the assay office at New York, and it shall be lawful to apply the moneys arising from charges collected from depositors for these operations, and also the proceeds of sale of by-products (spent acids arising from any surplus bullion recovered in parting and refining processes), pursuant to law, so far as may be necessary, to defraying in full the expenses thereof, including labor, material, wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps.

"'But no part of the moneys appropriated for the support of the coinage mints and assay office at New York shall be used to defray the expenses of parting and refining bullion.'

"The policy of using the proceeds of charges imposed upon bullion to meet the cost of operating the refineries was changed by a provision of the deficiency act of March 4, 1911 (see ch. 240, Public, 480), the repealing clause reading as follows:

"'All laws and parts of laws, to the extent that they make a permanent indefinite appropriation for the expenses of parting and refining bullion, are repealed to take effect from and after June 30, 1912; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, for the fiscal year 1913, and annually thereafter, submit to Congress, in the regular Book of Estimates, detailed estimates for the expenses of this service.

"'The unexpended balance, after meeting all obligations, of the permanent indefinite appropriation for parting and refining bullion remaining on the books of the Treasury two years after the close of the fiscal year 1912 shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt.'

"It is a grave question whether a resolution so worded as to extend the 1912 appropriations will have the effect of reviving a statute which is definitely repealed. Estimates for the cost of maintaining this service in the fiscal year 1913 in the Denver and San Francisco Mints and the assay office at New York were submitted to Congress, and provisions for the same appear in the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses. It is highly important that provision be made for continuing these refinery operations at the three institutions without a break. The wages of 90 people are involved. At the New York assay office the larger part of all expenditures have been met from the charges imposed upon bullion and the institution can not be kept open for the transaction of business unless provision is made for meeting these expenses after June 30, 1912.

"I therefore suggest that the proposed resolution contain the following specific provision, or one similar that meets your judgment, to cover the situation above pointed out:

"'That the unexpended balance of the permanent indefinite appropriation for parting and refining bullion remaining on the books of the Treasury June 30, 1912, may be drawn upon to defray in full the expenses incidental to refining and parting bullion in the mints at Denver and San Francisco and the assay office at New York, including labor, material, wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps, until the regular appropriations for the mint service for the fiscal year 1913 are available, and that the amount expended under this provision shall be deducted from the annual appropriation for this service.'

"Respectfully,

"FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary."

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 20728, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before the Secretary proceeds to read the bill, I desire to make a very brief statement.

This bill, as reported from the Senate committee, very largely increases the House appropriations. The increases come from three sources: First, many of the appropriations are appropriations of Indian funds and not of Government funds. Second, many of the increases are simply cases where the House failed to grant the amount estimated for, and the Senate committee has increased the appropriation to the estimate. Third, there are items affecting the conduct of irrigation and other projects where the Indian Office felt that it was wiser to have the larger sum appropriated.

The bill contains a great deal of general legislation, which it seems difficult to get in any other form. I am not so sensitive on that subject as heretofore, in view of the uniform custom at this session of putting much general legislation on the appropriation bills.

I call attention to these matters before the Senate proceeds to consider the bill. Of course it is for the Senate to determine what it will do with them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifteen" and insert "three hundred and thirty-five"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "$35,000 of which to be immediately available"; and in line 20, after the word "expended," to insert: "Provided, That the unexpended balances of all continuing appropriations heretofore made for survey, allotment, classification, or appraisement work, general or specific, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated herein. Surveys provided for by appropriations for surveying and allotting Indian reservations shall be made in accordance with the provisions for surveys and resurveys of public lands, including traveling expenses and allowance in lieu of subsistence, to surveyors and clerks detailed as surveyors employed thereunder," so as to make the clause read:

"For the survey, resurvey, classification, and appraisement of lands to be allotted in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians,' and under any other act or acts providing for the survey and allotment of lands in severalty to Indians, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto and to the issuance of all patents in the field and in the Office of Indian Affairs, and to the delivery of trust patents for allotments under said act or any such act or acts; and for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $335,000, $35,000 of which to be immediately available, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purpose and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the unexpended balances of all continuing appropriations heretofore made for survey, allotment, classification, or appraisement work, general or specific, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated herein. Surveys provided for by appropriations for surveying and allotting Indian reservations shall be made in accordance with the provisions for surveys and resurveys of public lands, including traveling expenses and allowance in lieu of subsistence, to surveyors and clerks detailed as surveyors employed thereunder."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as we have commenced on another fiscal year, that the words "to be immediately available" should be stricken from the bill wherever they occur.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, that occurred to me while the joint resolution we have passed was being read. It strikes me that while the joint resolution answers the purpose for the present, some provision must be made in all these appropriation bills to meet that proposition. In these bills there are certain appropriations with reference to a fixed day. That day has already passed; yet the joint resolution of the two Houses does not cover an appropriation made under those circumstances. I thought that, if necessary, when we get through with all of them, the Committee on Appropriations can meet that difficulty by some general provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not insist upon my suggestion, Mr. President. It does no harm to leave in the clause; but it seems to me it is unnecessary, for the reason that when the bill becomes a law all these appropriations will be immediately available.

Mr. CLAPP. Will they?

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely.

Mr. WARREN. The 1st of July will have passed before the bill becomes a law, but it will do no harm to leave in the language.

Mr. CLAPP. Some of them would be immediately available and some, in the very nature of things, would not be.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not insist upon it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 3, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred" and insert "three hundred and forty-five," so as to read:

"For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, $345,000, to remain available until expended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, etc.; on page 4, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty-five," so as to make the clause read:

"For traveling expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, at $3 per diem when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses authorized by law, and for incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing and expense of going to and from the seat of government and while remaining there under orders, $4,200; in all, $355,700: Provided also, That not to exceed seven superintendents of irrigation, who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, may be employed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in line 17, after the word "employed," to insert:

"Provided also, That there shall be covered into each fund, from whatsoever source derived, for construction or maintenance and operation of any irrigation project or system within the jurisdiction of the Indian service or preliminary surveys and investigations for determining the feasibility or cost of new projects in the Indian service, the proceeds of the sales of material utilized for temporary work and structures, as well as of the sales of any other property which had been purchased from such fund, and also any moneys refunded in connection with operations necessary for and incidental to such work; and for lands under any such project the Secretary of the Interior may fix annual maintenance charges, which shall be paid as he may direct, such charges, when collected, not to be covered into the Treasury but to be immediately available for use for the maintenance and operation of the project or system for which collected."

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against that amendment. I think the acting chairman will concede that it is general legislation, in violation of Rule XVI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be glad if the acting chairman of the committee will indicate whether or not there is an issue upon that point.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not see how there can be any issue. The Senator makes the point of order. It is a provision that the Indian Office is very anxious to have. That is the only thing I can urge in its behalf.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest that we go on to-day on these matters as in Committee of the Whole, and when we get into the Senate, if any Senator wishes to offer an amendment to strike out anything that has been agreed to—I do not know that such will be the case—he can do so. I do not suppose the Senator desires to have the bill passed to-day.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course I should like to have the bill passed to-day if it can be passed without pressing the matter against the convenience of Senators. It is an appropriation bill, and we want to get the appropriation bills out of the way.

Mr. OVERMAN. I realize that fact, but I think probably the Senator can not get it passed to-day. I simply make the suggestion so that we may reserve any amendments that any Senator desires to reserve. I have no amendments to offer myself and no fight to make on the bill. But there are only a few Democratic Senators here, and there may be some who will desire to have the course I suggest taken.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to agreeing to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator, Mr. President, if he objects to a point of order being made and ruled upon by the Chair?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. I only want, when the bill gets into the Senate, to reserve the right to submit any amendment that any Senator wants to submit. I am doing it only as a matter of caution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no fight to make on the bill myself and no amendments to offer.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "Indians," to insert "including the illegal introduction of intoxicating liquors into the State of Oklahoma," so as to make the clause read:

"For the supression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, including the illegal introduction of intoxicating liquors into the State of Oklahoma, $75,000."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court that the law does apply to Oklahoma, I think that amendment is unnecessary, and I will ask that the Senate disagree to it.

Mr. CLAPP. I think so, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. That we disagree to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is properly put in the affirmative, and those who wish to disagree will vote against the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have talked with some members of the committee, and I wish to offer an amendment at this point. In the conduct of this matter of suppressing the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians it has been found that a strict interpretation of the law would prohibit the introduction of wines into Indian country to be used for sacramental purposes. The undesirability of such a restriction is so manifest that I am going, at this time and in connection with this item, to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 12, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

"Provided, That hereafter it shall not be unlawful to introduce and use wines solely for sacramental purposes, under church authority, at any place within the Indian country or any Indian reservation, including the Pueblo Reservations in New Mexico."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question for information. Can it be possible that the Indians may not make wine from the grapes grown in that part of the country? They grow plenty of grapes there.

Mr. CLAPP. There are some sections of the country where grapes could be grown and homemade wine made for sacramental purposes. There are other sections of the country where it is very doubtful whether that could be done. A strict construction of the liquor law, at least the construction placed upon it by the authorities, prohibits the having of wine within the Indian country even for sacramental purposes, and to set the matter at rest and avoid any further question in regard to it I have offered this amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not rise to object to the amendment, but my attention was attracted by the suggestion that any legislation is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend for one moment. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask if the Senator from Idaho desires to speak upon the unfinished business. If not, I shall ask unanimous consent that it be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had intended at this time to make some remarks, but in view of the fact that the Indian appropriation bill is before the Senate I will defer any remarks. Of course it is not to be laid aside for the day, but only to be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT. Temporarily. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do want to get at an intelligent idea of this matter. Can it be possible that one in authority has held that Indians may not make wine out of the grapes at their door? Everyone who knows this country knows that grapes are one of the plentiful fruits, and that it should require legislation in order that they might have wine for church purposes seems to me to imply that they may not make wine out of their own grapes.

Mr. CLAPP. I will ask the Senator if it is his understanding that under the law of this country an Indian within the prohibited classes has the right to manufacture liquor on a reservation?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should dislike to think that we had ever been so unwise in legislation as to make it impossible for Indians to make wine of their own grapes for such a purpose. If we have, then it is another of the curiosities that should be taken into consideration in legislation.

I was impelled to make the suggestion because of the fact that if any person should be permitted to do it they should be permitted to make out of their production whatever a white man might make out of his. These Indians there are probably quite up to the standard of average American citizenship.

Mr. CLAPP. That is all true, but the fact remains that those in authority maintain that wine for sacramental purposes comes within the general provision of the statute.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then my criticism would be shifted to those in authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in line 12, after the words "dollars" to insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That the powers conferred by section 788 of the Revised Statutes upon marshals and their deputies are hereby conferred upon the chief special officer for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians and duly authorized officers working under his supervision whose appointments are made or affirmed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that as he has already inserted a proviso, that this proviso should read "Provided also," and I would further suggest that it be made one paragraph instead of two.

Mr. CLAPP. That can be done now or in the final preparation of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The clerks can make it a single paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, after the word "Provided," insert "also."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Let it appear in the RECORD that the part beginning in line 9 down to the end of line 19 shall be treated as one paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "two hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

"To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination, $250,000."

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to know something of the necessity for making so radical a change as to strike out $60,000 and insert $250,000 for purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination.

Mr. CURTIS. It was my purpose to oppose this amendment, and if the Senator will——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will leave it to the Senator, who is much more familiar with the subject; but I was naturally put upon inquiry by the vast raise in the appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. I dislike very much to oppose an amendment of this kind, but it seems to me that the report of the commissioner justifies me in taking that course. I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs estimated for only $75,000. The House gave them only $60,000. Last year there was appropriated for this purpose $60,000, and only $53,000 of it was used. Twenty thousand dollars of that was used in the building of a hospital and only $10,000 was used for medicine; $1,000 was used to buy material for taking photographs, and all the balance was paid in salaries. The year before they had $40,000 and used only $29,000.

It seems to me that there is no justification for so large an increase in view of what has been expended and in view of the further fact that there are now 100 regular physicians, 64 contract physicians, 54 matrons, and 88 field matrons to look after matters of this kind and attend the Indians who need care and attention.

I hope the amendment will be voted down, and then I should like to have the Senate give the commissioner what he asked—$75,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire if the Senator has information as to how much of this sum is expended for physicians and how much for vaccine matter.

Mr. CURTIS. Less than $10,000 was paid out for medicines of all kinds.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would include vaccine matter?

Mr. CURTIS. I will read the items that were paid out last year:

Relieving distress among destitute Indians	$3,000
Purchase of vaccine and antitoxin and the vaccination of Indians	3,000
Employment of special physicians and purchase of medicines	3,000
Equipment and maintenance of sanatoria in the North and Northwest	20,000
3 physicians at large, at $1,400 per annum each	4,200
Expenses of 3 physicians, at $1,200 each	3,600
1 nurse, field service	1,000
Expenses of nurse, field service	1,200
Traveling expenses and subsistence of physician detailed to Trachoma Hospital at Phoenix	1,200
1 nurse, field service	720
Expenses of nurse, field service	1,200
2 contract physicians, 1 at $480 and 1 at $720	1,200
2 nurses, at $720	1,400
2 assistant nurses, at $300	600
Incidental expenses, such as extra drugs, supplies, etc., in open market	500
1 nurse	720
1 cook	600
Incidental expenses at tuberculosis sanatorium, such as fresh fruit, extra food, and supplies in open market	500
Salary	2,000
Traveling and incidental expenses	2,095
Transportation for box of books and instruments	150
Motion-picture accessories, etc	204
Motion-picture accessories, chemicals, 2 boxes Ozone, 8 cans lime, and 100 barrels sulphuric ether	$204.00
6 cases photographic plates	100.00
3 cases lantern slides	50.00
6 gross developing paper	50.00
Photographic accessories, chemicals	100.00
5,000 feet positive film	212.50
7,000 feet negative film	262.50

Making a total of $53,104 expended last year.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is nothing in the report showing extraordinary conditions under which there should be an increase?

Mr. CURTIS. Nothing at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Can the chairman of the committee advise us as to why the increase was made?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, this item was increased from the amount allowed by the House over the estimate of the bureau on the request of the Indian Office. I will read a statement which appears in the report and which is brief:

"The records of the Indian Bureau show that a large per cent of the Indians are afflicted with tuberculosis as well as trachoma. The conditions of health among the Indians, as has been revealed by a careful study of conditions, especially as relates to trachoma, is very startling, indeed, as it is shown by carefully prepared statistics that anywhere from 15 to 80 per cent of the Indians in different parts of the country are suffering from trachoma, and if this terrible disease is not checked a large number of Indians will eventually become totally blind."

Then here comes another feature of it:

"It should be remembered that this disease not only endangers the sight of a large per cent of the Indians, but it endangers the health of millions of white people living in the immediate vicinity of the Indian reservations and who come in contact with the Indians."

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not these Indians are living in their homes—on their farms. They are not in a reservation?

Mr. CLAPP. Some are on reservations; some are on farms and in their homes. There is an indiscriminate condition of the Indian situation with reference to residence from those who are still practically blanket Indians to those who now own and cultivate farms.

Mr. HEYBURN. Are the blanket Indians remaining within the purview of this bill?

Mr. CLAPP. There are yet a great many Indians who might properly be called blanket Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. These are in Oklahoma?

Mr. CLAPP. No; this would apply to the whole country.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was just looking at the end to see whether it is so extensive.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator is correct, then the committee was laboring under a very serious misapprehension.

Mr. HEYBURN. The clause beginning in line 9 reads:

"For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, including the illegal introduction of intoxicating liquors into the State of Oklahoma, $75,000."

I find no qualifying provision between that language and the language under consideration. I suppose the committee intended this to be of general application to all Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. A general provision, to apply to all Indians throughout the country.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly. That criticism would apply to the provision for the day Indian schools.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had that in mind. I have it before me. I merely wanted information in regard to it. I have no sympathy with the vaccination proposition whatever, and to see a sum, including that kind of services, raised nearly $200,000 rather provoked inquiry.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, vaccination is a very small item. It is included with the others. I will say that there was a time when smallpox was a very destructive disease, but to-day tuberculosis and trachoma are the two diseases that menace the Indians.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am going to ask a question that will reveal ignorance on my part, although I think probably I understand it. This bill does not apply to Indians in Alaska, I assume.

Mr. CLAPP. No; it does not, except in one or two schools that are specially mentioned.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have in mind a very eloquent and pathetic appeal of the Bishop of Alaska for Indians in that Territory, or whatever we may call it, and if I get an opportunity I should like very much to vote for a liberal appropriation to relieve the suffering of the people there. But I assume that this is not of general application.

Mr. CLAPP. Only where it is specified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Georgia in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the vote is taken I will ask the Senator from Kansas if I understod him correctly to say that the estimate of the department was $75,000?

Mr. CURTIS. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. The House reduced it to $60,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Because last year only $53,000 was expended, and the year before, I think, $29,000 was expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall support a motion of the committee to insert $75,000 in lieu of $60,000.

Mr. CLAPP. I shall move now, on behalf of the committee, to insert $75,000 in lieu of $60,000, if there be no objection to that.

Mr. CURTIS. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. CLAPP. The motion now is to amend, on line 24, by striking out "sixty" before "thousand" and inserting "seventy-five" in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 24, after the word "vaccination," strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy-five," so as to read "seventy-five thousand dollars."

Mr. MCCUMBER. I understand that the amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 has been stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was disagreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I propose to insert $75,000 in lieu of $60,000, conforming to the estimates of the Indian Office.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if, in his opinion, $75,000 is sufficient for the purposes enumerated?

Mr. CLAPP. Personally, I do not feel that it is. I think the increase, especially of trachoma among the Indians during the last two or three years, warrants us in making a larger appropriation, and I not only moved the amendment at the request of the office but I very cheerfully supported it.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I think we ought to stop a moment to consider this matter before we hurriedly strike out a provision that has been adopted by the committee after a very full hearing. We are appropriating, Mr. President, some $10,000,000, I think, in the bill for the benefit of the Indians of the country. Large sums are being expended for instruction. I do not know what particular good we will obtain by instructing and educating Indians this year, when what knowledge they may have obtained could not be exercised, as they would be in the grave. I can not see the necessity of spending millions of dollars for the comfort of the Indians in certain lines while we neglect to appropriate a few thousand dollars necessary for the purpose of saving lives. It seems to me that the life of the Indian is about the first thing to take into consideration; that first we ought to look after their health. An Indian diseased with tuberculosis or smallpox is not going to be a very useful Indian, and the money expended will not be very beneficially expended in his behalf if we do not first adopt some means to stop the spread of this fatal disease among the Indians.

The evidence, as I now remember, that was taken before the committee showed that 30, 40, 60, or 70 per cent of the Indians in some sections were affected by tuberculosis. If we want to settle the Indian question in a very short time, we might withdraw all aid in this direction, and in a very few years it would not be necessary for us to pay out expenses for schools, and so forth.

I again appeal to the Senate to appropriate what ought to be appropriated to eradicate the disease. The commissioner says that it is necessary. Those who were present and testified as to the condition of the Indians in the several sections of the country showed, to my mind, most conclusively that $250,000 ought to be expended for their protection and in the attempt to wipe out this dread disease. Therefore, Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota by inserting $150,000 in lieu of $75,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from North Dakota that sufficient appropriation should be made to take care of the health of the Indians, but the Senator will remember that a gentleman who appeared before the committee stated that in one case where the Indians had been under the care of the Government they had been bothered with trachoma, and after they were left alone and went to themselves trachoma had entirely disappeared. There was no evidence given before the committee that justified such a large appropriation or such a large increase as was made by the committee. There was nothing in the previous expenditures of the department to show that that amount of money was necessary.

I agree with the Senator from North Dakota that every precaution should be taken. So far as I am concerned, I shall vote for his amendment making the amount $150,000. If any facts had been given to the committee, if any cases had been cited, or if the report had shown that the money was expended for medicine or something for the use of the Indians instead of for photographs and things of that kind, and only $10,000 of it for medicine, I would have voted for the appropriation of $250,000.

I believe that before the department get at the hands of Congress large sums they should give an itemized statement to the Senate or to the House showing what they need the appropriation for. I shall support the amendment.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I agree with the Senator that probably there may have been some wastefulness in previous appropriations, but this paragraph is clear in reference to the purpose for which the money is to be used. If the department will use the money for the purposes indicated and not for films for kodaks, I have no doubt but that a great deal of benefit can be obtained. I believe that the whole amount should have been appropriated and most of it used, not so much for trachoma and for minor diseases as for the eradication of tuberculosis. I am glad that the Senator agrees at least that we should have $150,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to ask the Senator from North Dakota if the hearings to which he alludes have been printed?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I am not certain.

Mr. CLAPP. They are in print.

Mr. MCCUMBER. We had a witness before us, a special examiner, who had been out in Montana and Washington, and his evidence was very strong on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. The proposition of the committee, Mr. President, was to increase the appropriation $163,000, which would necessarily have gone to physicians and for medicines. I think it is an extravagant suggestion. Trachoma undoubtedly exists among those people. It will not require a great deal of either medical treatment or medicine to care for that disease if it is properly handled. So far as tuberculosis is concerned, these Indians have to-day at their own command, without physicians and without medicine, all that advanced medical science says can do them any good; they are out in the open. The system now is to establish open-air camps for tuberculosis patients, and the physician who would use medicine to any very considerable extent in the treatment of that disease at the present time would be laughed at by the advanced members of the profession.

So, I see no reason why in this case a very large amount of money should be appropriated for physicians and medicines for these two particular diseases, and yet that is the proposition involved in this amendment. If the Senators who know more about the matter than I do think that the amount ought to be increased to $150,000, I certainly would not oppose it, although it occurs to me that as $62,000 was used last year and some of it was used for moving-picture films and all sorts of things that may have amused those people, $75,000 will be adequate for this year. But at best the matter is going to conference and it will be adjusted there. In that view, while I think it is not a necessary increase, I shall not vote against it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope that the motion to make the amount $150,000 will prevail. The ills of the Indians are not confined entirely to the diseases named here. The employment of physicians is very largely used for other diseases.

Mr. GALLINGER. One suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota attracted my attention. It is that the testimony showed that in many instances 75 per cent——

Mr. MCCUMBER. I would not say 75 per cent. I suggest in some cases I think 70 per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. That as high as 70 per cent were afflicted with tuberculosis. The Senator has in his own State a good many Indians, and we are making appropriations for the Indians in the State of North Dakota. I will ask the Senator if he has discovered any such percentage among the Indians in North Dakota as that even 50 per cent or 40 per cent of them are suffering from tuberculosis.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I do not know the exact per cent. I know that the percentage is very great, even among those in North Dakota. It is demonstrated, I think, that the disease is to some extent, at least, infectious, and while the Senator's remedy may be the proper remedy for the treatment of tuberculosis, and if it could be cured in a single summer by keeping the Indians out of doors, that might be quite a proper remedy, and would require but little expenditure; these Indians, especially in the northern regions, can hardly camp out when the thermometer registers 30 or 40 or 50 below zero. They are compelled to live in houses during at least six or seven months of the year, and possibly eight months in some sections of the country. Their houses are not sanitary. They need more or less instruction in the matter of their own treatment of themselves, and they need constant assistance. The Indian does not follow advice very readily. He is somewhat indigent and somewhat careless as to his personal habits. The buildings in which they live are often very insanitary and conducive to increasing the extent of tuberculosis. So there is something besides medicine that must be considered in the matter of treatment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not raise any issue on this point. I do not set myself up as an authority at all, but I have sometimes thought that we were pampering the Indian a little too much; that it is about time, after the centuries have come and gone, for the Indian to be taught some degree, at least, of self-reliance and some degree of self-support. But that probably is not the popular idea, and I have no disposition to deny to these poor people any governmental aid that they can reasonably ask, except I do feel that if this appropriation is to be largely used for physicians and medicines, while it is a good thing for the profession, with which I greatly sympathize, it is rather a profligate expense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate, audit, and adjust, under such terms, conditions, and regulations as he may prescribe, the claims of licensed traders and other bona fide claimants who have claims against individual Indians under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, $75,000: Provided, That $10,000 of this amount may be used for clerk hire in the Indian Bureau."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment on two grounds: First, the appropriation was not estimated for; and, second, it is general legislation and in violation of Rule XVI.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the committee will have to accept as sound the objection made by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 6, line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "five," and in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and fifty," so as to read:

"For support of Indian day and industrial schools, not otherwise provided for, and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and twenty-five" and insert "six hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

"For construction, lease, purchase, repairs, and improvements of school and agency buildings, and for sewerage, water supply, and lighting plants, and for purchase of school sites, $650,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 22, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the prevention and control of forest fires on Indian reservations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, all sums expended hereunder to be reimbursed from the tribal funds of the Indians on the reservations where the sums are expended."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Kansas will not press the point of order. There is a great deal of destruction of timber belonging to these Indians. This is a reimbursable appropriation. I doubt very much whether technically it is subject to a point of order. The Senate held some years ago that even in the case of a claim against an Indian tribe the item was not subect to a point of order. I certainly hope the point will not be pressed.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator from Minnesota say that this provision is wholly for the protection of timber from fire?

Mr. CLAPP. It reads:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the prevention and control of forest fires on Indian reservations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, all sums expended hereunder to be reimbursed from the tribal funds of the Indians on the reservations where the sums are expended."

Mr. CURTIS. I will withdraw the point of order on that amendment, Mr President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 9, after line 4, to insert:

"There is hereby appropriated the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, for the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians and to aid them to engage in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops. The said sum may be used for the purchase of animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended subject to the conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby appropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed report of the use of this fund."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment on two grounds: First, the amount named was not estimated for; and, second, the amendment proposes general legislation, in violation of Rule XVI.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the committee will have to concede the correctness of the point of order, though I regret it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 10, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five," and in line 21, after the word "rent," to insert: "Provided, That hereafter the Board of Indian Commissioners is authorized to employ a secretary, not a member of said board, and pay his salary out of the appropriation herein made or which shall hereafter be made for said board: Provided further, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to pay the salary of H. C. Phillips for services heretofore rendered said board as secretary out of the appropriation provided for the expenses of said Board of Indian Commissioners in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912," so as to make the clause read:

"For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $5,000, including not to exceed $300 for office rent: Provided, That hereafter the Board of Indian Commissioners is authorized to employ a secretary, not a member of said board, and pay his salary out of the appropriation herein made or which shall hereafter be made for said board: Provided further, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to pay the salary of H. C. Phillips for services heretofore rendered said board as secretary out of the appropriation provided for the expenses of said Board of Indian Commissioners in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912."

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota if it is possible that the money shall be paid out of the appropriation of the last fiscal year?

Mr. CLAPP. I suppose it was upon the theory that there was money left over.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the end of the fiscal year, it strikes me, the money must be turned back into the Treasury, and that this would not be approved. We would have to reappropriate it.

Mr. CLAPP. That is true, but does not this amount to a reappropriation? That was the design.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am afraid not. I think the Senator had better let that amendment be passed over for the present, and look into it.

Mr. WARREN. I think, if that is the idea, it will have to be expressed as a reappropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably so. Let it go over.

Mr. CLAPP. Let the amendment be passed over. I will change the language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 11, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty-five" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

"For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian service for which no other appropriation is available, $125,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 12, to insert:

"Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may expend not to exceed $1,000 of this appropriation in purchasing law books for official use in the Indian Bureau."

Mr. CURTIS. I want to ask the acting chairman of the committee why that amount of law books provided for can not be purchased out of the contingent fund of the Interior Department?

Mr. CLAPP. The Indian Commissioner advised the committee that the comptroller declined or objected—I do not know that he put it quite so strong as refused—at least he objected to paying this item out of the contingent fund. That was the reason why the amendment was put in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest that the proviso should become a part of the text of the bill on the preceding page, and not be made a separate paragraph. The Senator, if he examines it, will see the point of that suggestion.

Mr. CLAPP. I think that ought to be done, Mr. President. Let the proper record be made for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 12, after line 4, to insert:

"For continuing the work of classifying and indexing the files of the Indian Office and preparing historical data from records therein, including the pay of employees, $5,000, to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 8, to insert:

"For the purpose of conducting hearings and taking evidence to determine the heirs of deceased Indian allottees, pursuant to the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 855 to 866), and the regulations thereunder prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish the chairman of the committee would explain the necessity for that item, if he can.

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment before I take the matter up. Acting on the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] I think the bill will read much better when concluded if the words "to be immediately available" are eliminated in all cases where they occur.

Mr. GALLINGER. That ought to be done.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire it understood that it shall be done.

Mr. WARREN. Why not ask that the Secretary may do that in this place the same as in the others?

Mr. CLAPP. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. That should be done in all cases.

Mr. WARREN. In all cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], I will say that the Indian Office asks for this upon the ground that—

"The regular administrative work of the various Indian agencies taxes the efforts of those officials to the limit. There have been about 200,000 allotments to Indians on 52 reservations, of which number it is believed that about 40,000 allottees have died, leaving undetermined heirs. In order to clear up the tangled condition of the estates of deceased Indians so that the inherited lands may be disposed of to white settlers and so that the money may be available to provide the Indian heirs with funds with which to begin the farming of their own allotments and the building of sanitary homes, it is desirable that this item should be retained in the bill."

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the amendment. I merely wanted to get into the RECORD the information which the Senator from Minnesota has furnished.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indians Affairs was, on page 12, after line 15, to insert:

"That so much of the provision of the Indian appropriation act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stat. L., pp. 62-90), as limits the amount that may be paid for salaries or compensation to employees regularly employed at any one agency to $10,000 and at a consolidated agency to $15,000 is hereby amended by increasing the amounts to $20,000 and $25,000, respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Arizona and New Mexico," on page 13, line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "eleven"; and in line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "thirty," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 700 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Phoenix, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $119,400; for general repairs and improvements, $11,000; in all, $130,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five"; and in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-three," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 100 pupils at the Indian school at Truxton Canyon, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $23,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 3, after the word "dollars," to insert:

"Provided, That the proportion of the cost of the irrigation project on the Gila River Indian Reservation heretofore and herein authorized to be paid from the public funds shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States as and when funds may be available therefor: Provided further, That in the event any allottee shall receive a patent in fee to an allotment of land irrigated under this project before the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed as herein provided, then the proportionate cost of the project, to be apportioned equitably by the Secretary of the Interior, shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth therein, which said lien, however, shall not be enforced so long as the original allottee or his heirs shall own the allotment; and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien."

So as to read:

"For maintenance, including purchase of electricity for irrigation wells already completed, and the completion of the lateral irrigating ditches thereunder in connection with the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians in the vicinity of Sacaton, in the Gila River Indian Reservation, $15,000: Provided, That the proportion of the cost of the irrigation project on the Gila River Indian Reservation heretofore and herein authorized to be paid from the public funds shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States as and when funds may be available therefor: Provided further, That in the event any allottee shall receive a patent in fee to an allotment of land irrigated under this project before the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed as herein provided, then the proportionate cost of the project, to be apportioned equitably by the Secretary of the Interior, shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth therein, which said lien, however, shall not be enforced so long as the original allottee or his heirs shall own the allotment; and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not it is proposed in allotting irrigated lands to the Indians to make the cost of construction a lien upon the lands that may be foreclosed.

Mr. CLAPP. Not so long as they retain the land, but in case they dispose of the land, then it is a lien.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it is a charge against the value of their lands.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. And a limitation on the right of sale.

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly; it does amount, in effect, to a certain limitation.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would seem to me to be a very harsh way of dealing with the Indians. You take their lands, irrigate them, and say to them—and they are citizens of the United States—"you will stay right here, and if you sell these lands or do anything to better your condition in life then we will foreclose to the extent of the cost of putting water on them." The Indian would rather have the land without the water than to have it subject to so harsh a condition as that. No white man would submit to it for a moment.

I do not know where the idea originated, but, of course, I assume that it did not originate with the acting chairman of the committee. It is probable that a departmental clerk somewhere conceived the idea of making the burden of these Indians more onerous than it is. I would rather see the whole amendment go out of the bill than to see so harsh a burden as that placed upon the Indians. Two years ago and four years ago we had that same question here of seizing a man's land and, as Lord Eldon said, "improving him out of his title." That is what it amounts to. The Indian does not depend upon the market; he depends upon his own necessities for the value of the land, while the white man depends upon the market where he can sell the proceeds of the land.

I do not like to raise a point of order against these matter, but I think if the Senator in charge of the bill will allow the amendment to go over and give it a little more thought he will find some way of eliminating that harsh feature from it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, this plan has been adopted quite generally with reference to Indian reservations, but it has not yet been applied to the Pima Reservation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it has not always been successfully adopted. In the case of the California Indians, some six years ago now, the Senate refused to accede to any such plan. Again, two years ago, when the question was before the Senate, the Senate again refused to recognize it. Now it is brought up again. If they are not doing one thing, they are doing another; if they are not cutting the units down so that the Indian can not possibly sustain himself and those dependent upon him, then they are putting a burden upon the Indian in the way of payment, and they say now, "So long as you and your family and your descendants live here we will not foreclose, but it will be a charge against you and a burden on your property, and if you undertake to exercise the right that ought to belong to you if you are citizens of the United States then we will foreclose." We have to keep our eyes on the departments; we have to keep our eyes on that department particularly.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that the matter go over for the present.

Mr. HEYBURN. A word before it goes over. These are Indians with whom we have treaty relations. We have entirely lost sight of those relations, and we seem to have reached a point where we think we can be forgetful of the relations that ordinarily exist and take their lands and, as I have said, improve them out of their title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Minnesota asks that the amendment be passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that it go over for the present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the Senator from Arizona desires to say a word on the matter before it is passed over.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, just a word. I appreciate what the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has just said. I have the honor to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I desire at this time publicly to make expression of my appreciation as a Senator of the faithfulness of that committee in the performance of its duty. That committee labored for nearly three months on this bill. This item was carefully considered, and the reason—if I remember aright—why it was inserted in this way was the committee felt that it would be for the benefit of the Indian. If he had land at that particular place allotted to him and he were permitted to alienate it, speculators could come along and buy his land, he would possibly squander the money received for the sale of the land and again soon become a charge upon the Government, whereas if allowed to retain the title and cultivate his land, the Government for all practical purposes has furnished him with an irrigation project without any charge to him——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, of course Indians differ in different sections. Now, we are not under the necessity of considering——

Mr. ASHURST. Just permit me a moment, and I will close. I wish, of course, this money could be appropriated without the reimbursement feature. I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are not under the necessity of considering the Indian as incompetent to take care of his money. A tribe of Indians in the adjoining county to that in which I live is, if not the first, the second wealthiest organization or body of citizens of the United States. They know how to keep their money in bank; they know how to invest it; and they know how to do business with it probably as well as any body of white men.

Mr. ASHURST. That may be true as to some tribes of Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true generally of our northern Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of the Gila Indian Reservation, on page 15, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the proviso read:

"Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to convene a board of not less than three engineers of the Army of wide reputation and large experience to make the necessary examinations, borings, and surveys for the purpose of determining the reasonability and practicability of constructing a dam and reservoir at or in the vicinity of the Box Canyon, on the San Carlos Indian Reservation, known as the site of the proposed San Carlos reservoir on the Gila River, Ariz., and the necessary irrigation works in connection therewith to provide for the irrigation of Indian, private, and public lands in the Gila River Valley. Said board of engineers to submit to Congress the results of their examinations and surveys, together with an estimate of cost, with their recommendations thereon at the earliest practicable date. The sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of conducting said investigations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 15, to strike out:

"For the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes and for irrigation for nomadic Papago Indians in Pima County, Ariz., to be immediately available, $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 19, to insert:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the possibility of enlarging the irrigation system for the protection and irrigation of the Indian lands on the Papago Indian Reservation, Ariz., and report thereon to Congress at the beginning of its next session, $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 8, to insert:

"For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provisions of the sixth article of the treaty of June 8, 1868, between the United States and the Navajo Nation or Tribe of Indians, proclaimed August 12, 1868, whereby the United States agrees to provide school facilities for the children of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. In carrying out the authority hereby conferred the said Secretary may expend said funds, in his discretion, in establishing day schools or other industrial schools, tribal habits and climatic conditions being considered, suitable for the education of said Indians."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 23, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the White Mountain, or San Carlos, Indian Reservation, in the State of Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing suitable steel and concrete wagon bridges, with approaches thereto, across the San Carlos Creek and the Gila River, in the vicinity of San Carlos, on said reservation, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of the cost for the construction of said bridges, at such sites as he may select, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912; and the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes herein authorized."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that amendment proposes general legislation and that the amount proposed to be appropriated is not estimated for.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I realize that the point of order made by the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] may be dangerous to this appropriation of $2,000. Far be it from me to seek, for any purpose whatever, any strained ruling or strained construction of any rule which would give to Arizona or to any other State money to be expended within a State contrary to our rules. My remarks, therefore, will be directed more to the Senator from Kansas than to the Senate, if I may be permitted to so address him, in order to induce him to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. President, the necessity for this bridge at the point described in the amendment offered by the Senate committee is so great that my duty requires I should say a word here in its behalf.

The first main tributary of the Gila River is the San Francisco River, which comes into the Gila at or near Clifton. At the town of Duncan, about 20 miles above Clifton, in Arizona, the river begins to assume considerable proportions. The next important tributary is the San Carlos, which flows into the Gila River on the San Carlos Indian Reservation. These streams—that is, the Gila River and the San Carlos—are torrential rather than perennial. At times the Gila River would float a battleship, and during such periods of high water all traffic is suspended, farming lands are destroyed, and the commerce of that part of the country is wholly and completely suspended by reason of the raging and turbulent waters.

It was my intention, when I came to this distinguished body, to ask for a direct appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of constructing a bridge there. After serving here for a few weeks I learned that it would be impossible to secure such appropriation just now. Therefore this amendment has been reported by the committee. It simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the situation, and if, in his opinion, when he makes his report to the next Congress, the bridge should be built there an appropriation may be secured.

I earnestly hope the Senator will withdraw his point of order. I desire at this time to say that this proposed bridge is favored by the department, and I request to have read at the desk the letter in which the department states that this bridge should be built. The department has no objection to it.

With the permission of the Senate, I will ask that that letter be read now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Land contracts, 36118, 1911; 13579, 1912. R. J. H. Proposed bridges.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 2, 1912.

Mr. ABRAHAM L. LAWSHE,
Superintendent San Carlos School.

SIR: Referring to your letter of February 6, 1912, regarding proposed bridges across the Gila and San Carlos Rivers, there is inclosed for your information a copy of departmental report of March 25, 1912, to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, on the subject.

Respectfully,
H. ABBOTT,
Assistant Commissioner.

[I–21497. Land contracts, 16794, 1911; 13579, 1912. R. J. H. H. R. 1682.]

MARCH 25, 1912.

Hon. W. C. ADAMSON,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to departmental letter of May 12, 1911, reporting on H. R. 1682, the purpose of which is "to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct bridges across the San Carlos and Gila Rivers on the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and for other purposes."

Section 2 of the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to select the most available sites for such purpose at points on said rivers "not to exceed 3 miles above the confluence."

In its letter of May 12, the department referred to the fact that there were pending certain applications involving the San Carlos reservoir site, and that if application to construct a dam were granted, the banks of both the Gila and San Carlos Rivers would be submerged to points in excess of 3 miles above the confluence.

In connection with this case there is inclosed a copy of a report dated February 6, 1912, from the superintendent in charge of the San Carlos Reservation, who thinks it would be entirely feasible to construct bridges within 3 miles of the confluence of the two rivers, as the shallowness of the water would make such construction easily possible. The department would be much pleased to see the proposed legislation enacted into law and an appropriation made available for constructing the bridges, which would be an important factor in the development of that section of the country. It seems that the citizens of Arizona are making special efforts to construct good roads and to open up a transcontinental highway of which the proposed bridges would be a part.

While the superintendent's letter of February 6 indicates that in all probability bridges could easily be constructed within the 3 miles of the confluence of the rivers, yet to obviate the contingency of having the proposed improvements defeated by reason of circumstances which would make it impossible to construct at sites within the limit named in the bill, the department respectfully suggests that the bill be amended by striking out, in lines 12 and 13 of page 1, the words "not to exceed 3 miles above the confluence of said rivers."

If the bill be so amended, the department respectfully suggests that it be favorably considered and reported.

Respectfully, SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is true that not all of the letter is pertinent to this particular amendment, but I had it all read in order that it might not go in the RECORD in a fragmentary or broken condition. That is all I wish to say at this time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to designate the lines where this amendment is found.

Mr. ASHURST. The amendment commences on page 16, line 24, and extends down to and includes line 13, on page 17. The amendment offered by the committee simply calls for an appropriation of $2,000 in order that the Secretary of the Interior may make an estimate as to the necessity for a bridge there.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is on an Indian reservation?

Mr. ASHURST. It is, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. And on a navigable river?

Mr. ASHURST. At times the river assumes the proportions of a navigable river.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not practically navigable?

Mr. ASHURST. No.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ASHURST. Most certainly I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The letter that has been read, of course, is not an estimate, and can not be so construed. There are quite a number of bridge items in the bill. If this one is agreed to, all the others should be agreed to. I judge from the letter that the bridge is needed, and, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to building bridges where they are needed. I think, however, the Government is going too extensively into the building of bridges on reservations that are likely to be soon opened to settlement; but I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 17, after line 13, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Yuma Indian Reservation, in the State of California, with respect to the necessity of constructing a suitable thoroughfare bridge of sufficient strength and capacity to safely carry street cars, in addition to foot and wagon traffic, over and across the Colorado River, connecting Fort Yuma, on the Yuma Indian Reservation, Imperial County, State of California, with the town of Yuma, State of Arizona, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of the cost for the construction of said bridge, at such a site as he may select, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose herein authorized.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment. I should like to ask the Senator, if the Chair will permit the inquiry before ruling upon the point of order, whether that bridge, if constructed, will be wholly within an Indian reservation?

Mr. ASHURST. A frank reply, which of course is always given by a Senator, requires me to say that it will not be wholly within an Indian reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, Mr. President, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. Before the ruling I should like to say a few words, if, under the rule, I may be permitted to do so. Appreciating very much the withdrawal of the other point of order, I insist most strenuously—respectfully, of course—that the point of order against this amendment also be withheld, for the following reasons: The great Colorado River is anomalous in America. It has no parallel on this hemisphere; it has a parallel only in one place, and that is in Africa—the Nile. The Colorado River is very long; it flows some 1,700 miles without being spanned by a wagon bridge. Like the Nile, it flows a thousand miles without a tributary. Like the Nile, it rises in June and spreads out for a number of miles on either side of its banks and irrigates alluvial soil which is so rich that it could be transported to Canada and used for fertilizing purposes if it were not for the prohibitive freight rates. At high water means of communication between the two banks are almost completely shut off.

It has been determined by the unanimous voice of the great Southwest, which includes southern California and the States of Arizona and New Mexico, that at this advanced stage of civilization, in this morning of the twentieth century, at this time when the ingenuity of man is making such progress in means and ways which make for the facility of transportation, it is almost a reproach to civilization that there is no wagon or automobile bridge across that great river.

Not long since the President of the United States sent a message to Congress asking an appropriation of a million or more dollars in order that the banks on either side of the river might be revetted and riprapping built to protect the farms on both sides of the river from the raging overflow. The Colorado River almost defies, if a river could defy, the very law of nature. At one time of the year it chooses a particular course or channel; and at another time of the year, or possibly another year, it chooses another place whither it shall go. On the Arizona side of the river, which would be the eastern abutment of the proposed bridge, is the prosperous city of Yuma, a marvel of industry and progress. Directly across the river, on the California side, is the Indian reservation. Many Indians—and they are strong swimmers—have been drowned there even when the river was at low water, for the reason that it is very heavily charged and impregnated with silt, and even the strongest swimmer is in danger. But consider that river in a raging, turbulent condition, such as the press dispatches announce it has been in for the last few weeks, and the necessity for a wagon bridge across it becomes apparent.

It may be, and it doubtless is, that this amendment proposed by the committee is obnoxious to the rule of the Senate. If it be obnoxious, I most respectfully insist, with all the earnestness at my command, that such a rule ought to be abrogated, because we ought not to have a rule which will stand in the way of the requirements of advancing civilization. I am very sorry if the rule does prevent the appropriation of a thousand dollars in order that an investigation may be made by the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the suitability or the necessity of a bridge at that point.

Mr. CURTIS. I insist on the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what ground does the Senator raise the objection?

Mr. CURTIS. It is general legislation, and the item was not estimated for by the department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order made by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course I accept the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that he did not understand the Senator to contest the ruling. The Chair was ready to give full weight to any suggestion the Senator might make on the other side of the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. The Chair ruled correctly.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 18, after line 6, to insert:

"For salary due Clarence I. Stacy, supervisor of ditches, Pima Indian Reservation, Ariz., from April 8, 1911, to October 25, 1911, at $1,200 per annum, $660."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that item, because it was not estimated for. But surely there must be some reason for the committee having put it in, and I will ask the acting chairman of the committee if he will explain why that and the next item were put in this bill?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, these items were inserted for the reason that some time ago there was trouble down there—I do not know the details of it nor would they be material—and these two employees were suspended pending an investigation or examination. The result of the investigation was that they were reinstated, but the comptroller held that he could not allow their pay for this time in view of the fact that they had been formally suspended. Consequently there is no way in which they can get their pay except by a direct appropriation. I trust the Senator will withhold his point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 18, after line 11, to insert:

"For salary due N. D. Brayton as physician on the Pima Indian Reservation, Ariz., from April 7, 1911, to November 14, 1911, inclusive, at the rate of $1,200 a year, $726.67."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 17, to insert:

"For constructing dike to protect allotments on the Fort Mojave Indian Reservation, $33,000."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order that that was not estimated for, and to ask the acting chairman of the committee whether that item was inserted at the request of the department?

Mr. ASHURST. It was estimated for.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; it was estimated for, as the record shows.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I withdraw my point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 18, after line 19, to insert:

"For continuing the construction of necessary channels and laterals for the utilization of water in connection with the pumping plant for irrigation purposes on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz., as provided in the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 273), for the purpose of securing an appropriation of water for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land and for maintaining and operating the pumping plant, $35,000, reimbursable as provided in said act." (Act of Apr. 4, 1910, vol. 36, p. 273, sec. 3.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "California," on page 19, line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-three," and in line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and four" and insert "one hundred and seventeen," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 550 Indian pupils at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Cal., and for pay of superintendent, $94,350; for general repairs and improvements, $23,000; in all, $117,350."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "one hundred," so as to make the clause read:

"For the balance of the first annual reclamation and maintenance charge on Yuma allotments and for the second and third annual charge and maintenance $100,000, or so much thereof as may be required, to be reimbursed from the sale of surplus lands or from other funds that may be available, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Idaho," on page 21, after line 4, to insert:

"To reimburse Peter Moctelmy, a member of the Coeur d'Alene Tribe of Indians, for damages sustained by him because of the sale by the United States to the State of Idaho of land for a State park on a portion of which the said Peter Moctelmy made his home, $500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Kansas," on page 21, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred twenty-seven" and insert "one hundred and twenty-nine"; in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven"; and in line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred thirty-seven" and insert "one hundred and forty," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and for pay of superintendent, $129,750; for general repairs and improvements, $11,000; in all, $140,750."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "five thousand five hundred," and in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventeen thousand eight hundred and sixty" and insert "twenty thousand three hundred and sixty," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 80 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Kickapoo Reservation, Kans., and for pay of superintendent, $14,850; for general repairs and improvements, $5,500; in all, $20,360."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Michigan," on page 22, after line 22, to insert:

"That the sum of $116.37 be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated for the purpose of paying the claim of John E. Meyer, of Shepherd, Mich., for the balance due him on construction of certain wells at the Mount Pleasant Indian School, located at Mount Pleasant, Mich., in the years 1901 and 1902, the appropriation out of which such balance should have been paid having heretofore lapsed."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not like to make a point of order against that item, but it sounds to me like a claim. I wish the acting chairman of the committee would explain why the item was put in here without an estimate.

Mr. CLAPP. In one sense, of course, it is a claim, although not in the ordinary sense of the word. This man entered into a contract to sink a well. He made three attempts, and the third attempt was successful. The department, after reviewing the case, recommends, in view of all the circumstances, that this amount be paid him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 23, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five"; in line 16, after the word "sheds," to insert "for the construction of a drain from the head of Pipestone Falls east in the bed of the creek to a point where it turns south, from thence east to the section line, $1,500"; and, in line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "forty-three thousand six" and insert "forty-six thousand one," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 225 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., and for pay of superintendent, $39,175; for general repairs and improvements, $5,500, $1,500 of which shall be used for the installation of an electric-lighting system and $500 of which shall be used for the construction of coal sheds; for the construction of a drain from the head of Pipestone Falls east in the bed of the creek to a point where it turns south, from thence east to the section line, $1,500; in all, $46,175."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 19, to insert:

"That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $700 in addition to the $1,000 heretofore appropriated for the construction of a bridge across Clearwater River, on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order on that amendment, but I would like to ask if the bridge is wholly within an Indian reservation. If so, I shall withdraw the point.

Mr. CLAPP. It is on the reservation. The appropriation of $1,000 was made a year ago, and it was found that it was not sufficient, so that the committee inserted an item carrying the additional $700.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, at the top of page 25, to insert:

"That there is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the possession of the United States and belonging to the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, of which $85,000 shall be used to procure a site or sites and thereon to construct, furnish, and equip a building or buildings to be used as a hospital or hospitals as hereinafter directed; and of which $15,000 shall be used for the operation and maintenance of the said hospital during the 12 months next after its completion."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, to save the time of reading, I should like to make a point of order against the amendments commencing at the top of page 25 and ending on page 28, line 9.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I must concede that the point is well taken. In view of that, I do not see any necessity of taking the time of the Senate with the full reading. Of course, I should like to have the items in the bill, but they are undoubtedly subject to the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The remaining amendments ruled out on the point of order were, on page 25, after line 10, to insert:

"That the said hospital or hospitals shall be called the Minnesota Chippewa Hospital and shall be open to all Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota who can qualify for admission as hereinafter provided. It shall be under the control and government of a board of directors, who shall be called the board of governors of the Minnesota Chippewa Hospital. Said board shall consist of three members, one of whom shall be the secretary of the State board of health of Minnesota, who shall be ex officio chairman of said board of governors, and two of whom shall serve for a term of five years, one to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and one to be chosen by the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota.

"The representative of the Indians on said board shall be selected by a council of the Indians, to meet at White Earth, Minn., consisting of delegates from the several bands of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, each band being entitled to 1 delegate for each 100 members or major fraction thereof. The said board of governors shall meet at the hospital as occasion requires, and at least once every two months. As compensation the said governors shall receive $3 per day while attending meetings of the board and their actual and necessary traveling expenses within the State of Minnesota.

"That immediately upon the approval of this act and the selection of the board of governors, or a majority thereof, the said board shall proceed to acquire a suitable site in the State of Minnesota and thereon construct, furnish, and equip the said hospital. The title of the said site or sites shall be taken in the name of the board of governors of the Minnesota Chippewa Hospital as trustees for the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota. One part or building of said hospital shall be adapted for and devoted to the care of patients afflicted with tuberculosis; one part or building shall be adapted for and devoted to the care of patients afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases; one part or building shall be adapted for and devoted to the care of patients suffering from old age, debility, or other bodily infirmities. Said board of governors shall also immediately appoint one physician, without regard to civil-service rules or requirements, who shall be regularly qualified to practice in the State of Minnesota, who shall receive a salary not exceeding $3,500 per annum, and who shall be selected without regard to civil-service rules. The said physician shall give his entire time, from the date of appointment, to the said hospital, first in its construction and later in its operation. He shall be the attending physician and known as the superintendent.

"That admission to the said hospital shall be upon the order of a majority of the board of governors, save in emergency cases admission may be on the order of the superintendent, subject to approval by the board at its next meeting. Only the following, who are also Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, shall be entitled to admission for care and treatment.

"Indians afflicted with tuberculosis or some contagious, infectious, or fatal diseases.

"Indians who by reason of age or bodily infirmities are unable to earn a livelihood and who have not means with which to procure necessaries.

"Applications may be made by anyone in person or by others on behalf of such person, which application shall set forth the facts of the case, and be accompanied by a certificate setting forth the merits of the case signed by a physician. Discharge from the hospital shall be by order of the board of governors."

That the said board of governors shall appoint such hospital attendants as may be needed in the operation of said hospital and make such rules and regulations and perform such other acts as may be appropriate or necessary in said operation and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

"This appropriation shall be immediately available and all moneys drawn hereunder shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said board of governors."

The next amendment was, under the head of "Montana," on page 28, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and civilization of the Indians at Fort Belknap Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $25,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to read:

"For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $400,000."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The estimate was only $250,000. It seems to me that without an estimate or a statement from the department, that that amount of money is needed, it is too large an increase to make to go from $200,000 to $400,000. I, for one, would have no objection to the department being given what they estimated—$250,000—but I hope the amendment making the amount $400,000 will be disagreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, before that is disagreed to I should like to have the report read in reference to that particular section. I am assuming that there is a report on it, and that the reason is given for the additional amount.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from North Dakota desires, I will read the paragraph of the report relating to this item:

"The amendment on page 28, line 10, increasing the appropriation for the construction of the irrigation system on the Flathead Indian Reservation from $200,000 to $400,000, $50,000 to be made available, and striking out lines 13 to 16 of said item, was reported on favorably by the department under date of April 4, 1912. The department is of the opinion that it is more economical to expend larger sums during shorter periods so as to complete the project at the earliest date practicable. Overhead charges on large projects remain about the same, whether the amount expended be large or small. The department is also of the opinion that the work should not be limited to any particular unit, as that would cause discontent among Indians on other units within the reservation."

Mr. MCCUMBER. I think there was some testimony before the committee on that particular question.

Mr. CLAPP. There was.

Mr. MCCUMBER. If I remember rightly, the purport of the testimony was in effect that it would be a considerable saving to the Government to appropriate the necessary amount now and to continue and complete the work as soon as possible; and it was necessary to appropriate the full amount in order that we might have a completion and save the work that had already been done on the project. I confess that I am not entirely clear as to what the testimony was on that line, but I think it justified the committee in asking that the sum be added at the present time as proposed.

Mr. CLAPP. The statement of the Senator from North Dakota is practically the evidence we had before the committee, and the same consideration applies to some other items. The Indian Office was of the opinion that it would result in an economy in the end to have the appropriation made now instead of stringing it out at later periods.

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the fact that the Montana Senators are absent, I suggest that we pass over the Montana amendments and take them all up at one time. I understand there are other amendments in the bill to be passed over, and I presume there will be no objection to this course.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendments under the heading "Montana" will be passed over for the present.

The next amendment, after those passed over, was, under the head of "Nebraska," on page 34, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "six," and in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "sixty-eight," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., and for pay of superintendent, $52,100; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; to complete the construction of two dormitories provided for in the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1911, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available; in all, $68,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 10, to insert:

"For construction of septic tank on sewer main at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., $1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 13, to insert:

"For cottage for superintendent of Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., $4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 15, to insert:

"For additions to hospital and office at the Genoa Indian School, Genoa, Nebr., $3,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 18, to insert:

"That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases, for any annuities which may be due to said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands of Indians and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of the passage of this act and shall determine and include the present value of the same, not including interest, and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against any amount found due under said treaties all moneys paid to said Indians or expended for their benefit by the Government of the United States since the treaties were abrogated by the act of 1863, except such amounts as have been paid them under the treaty of 1868 or for an otherwise adequate consideration.

"That upon the rendition of such judgment, and in conformity therewith, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing on said roll the names of all living members of the said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom the names of those found to have participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

"Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by one of the attorneys who have been heretofore or may be hereafter employed by said bands of Indians to prosecute their claims under this act under a contract which has been approved or which shall hereafter be approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law, upon information and belief as to the existence of the facts stated in said petition, and no other verification shall be necessary. Upon final determination of the cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find to be reasonable upon a quantum meruit for services performed or to be performed to be paid to the attorney or attorneys so employed by the said bands of Indians and their associates, and the same shall be paid out of the balance found to be due said bands of Indians when an appropriation therefor shall have been made by Congress: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by the court amount in the aggregate to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered, and in no event shall the aggregate amount exceed $25,000: Provided further, That the court shall by its decree distribute such fees equitably between the attorneys who have been or may hereafter be employed by said bands of Indians in said cause."

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against the amendment beginning on line 17, page 34, and ending line 5, page 37. It is general legislation and subject to a point of order under Rule XVI.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish to suggest that this is a provision, as I understand it, to carry out a treaty stipulation, and if it is to carry out a treaty stipulation it removes it from the operation of the rule relating to general legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. This identical question has been raised upon two different occasions on amendments similar to this, and each time the point of order was sustained on the ground that it was general legislation. If the Senator desires, I can get those authorities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is inclined to believe that if it is to carry out a treaty stipulation, as suggested by the Senator from North Dakota, the point of order is not well taken under Rule XVI.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is simply a claim against the Government. It repeals a law which was passed, as I recollect it, in 1863, which repealed the treaty and took away from these Indians their rights to annuities and other rights under the treaty. That treaty was done away with in 1863; the right was taken away; and now by this bill it is proposed to give these Indians an opportunity to go into court to have their rights reestablished. It virtually repeals the act of 1863.

Furthermore, on page 36, line 8, it provides for the employment of attorneys which is not provided for in any treaty with any Indians, and it provides for fixing the fees of the attorneys, which are not provided for in any treaty with the Indians. As I said before, this same question was raised on an identical claim upon two former occasions in the Senate, and the point of order was sustained.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I think the Senator is a little in error about the amendment repealing any other law. This case grew out of the Indian massacre in Minnesota in 1862. Prior to that time a treaty had been entered into between the United States and the Wahpeton and Sisseton Bands of Sioux Indians. Under that agreement, as I now recall it, certain annuities were to be paid to those Indians. A provision was contained in the treaty requiring the Indians as a nation to keep peace with the United States, and, I think, with a provision in it for the abrogation of the annuity in case the tribe as a nation did not maintain peace with the United States.

In 1862, while the Civil War was in progress, a certain number of the Wahpeton and Sisseton Bands of Indians and of the bands mentioned here committed heinous depredations upon white settlers. The President of the United States then, as I remember, by an order, abrogated the treaty, and it was not done by a legislative act. I stand ready to be corrected in that respect if I am in error.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment itself says:

"With right of appeal as in other cases, for any annuities which may be due to said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands of Indians and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed."

In other words, this act repeals the act of 1863.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Let us suppose that that is all true and that an act was passed repealing another act. The original act was a treaty. The treaty was a contract between the Government of the United States and the Sioux Nation of Indians. The treaty took certain lands of the Indians and in consideration agreed to pay them certain annuities for a given number of years. There was a contract fully executed upon the part of the Sioux Nation and the United States. The Sioux Nation relinquished its claim to a very large section of the country. The annuities fell due. The annuities were paid for a given number of years. They were paid until this uprising by a number of the bands Then the question arose, and it was the only question, whether or not the act of the depredators was an act by the nation. Congress, acting rather hurriedly, and influenced undoubtedly by the atrocities of the Indians in that massacre, passed the act referred to, which abrogated the treaty.

Now, Mr. President, after these many years and the blood of the nation is allowed to cool, I think the country generally concedes that we were hasty and unjust in punishing the entire Sioux Nation for the acts of some of their followers who could not be controlled by the old leaders of the nation.

Therefore, the treaty itself in all moral law still exists, and the question before us is whether we shall, notwithstanding this abrogation, fulfill the treaty stipulation. It is based upon a treaty; it is to carry out the terms of a treaty; and the fact that we may have been hasty in passing a law abrogating that treaty would not take it without the rule.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the point that was raised in the Fifty-fourth Congress, second session:

"On motion by Mr. Allen to further amend the same bill by inserting, after line 6, page 34"—

And if the Chair will read the amendment he will see that the amendments are almost identical—

"That the Santee Sioux Indians of Nebraska and the Flandreau Sioux of South Dakota, formerly known as and being a confederacy of the Medawakanton and Wapakoota Sioux Indians, be, and they are hereby, restored to all rights, privileges, and benefits they and their ancestors had and enjoyed under the treaty entered into September 29, 1837, at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, between Joel R. Poinsett, on behalf of the Government of the United States, and the Medawakanton Sioux Indians, by certain of their chief men, proclaimed June 15, 1838, and the treaty entered into between the United States, through Luke Lea and Alexander Ramsey, as commissioners, and the Medawakanton and Wapakoota Sioux Indians, by certain of their chief men and proclaimed by Millard Fillmore as President of the United States, August 5, 1851, and all treaties and acts of Congress supplementary thereto and amending thereto, etc.

"Mr. Allison raised a question or order, viz: That the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill and was not in order under clause 3, Rule XVI.

"The Presiding Officer (Mr. Faulkner in the chair) sustained the point of order."

In another Congress the same amendment was offered and the point of order was again sustained, because it repealed the act of 1863, which took away from the Indians all their right under former treaties. The courts have held that a treaty with the Indians is nothing more than an act of Congress, and it may be repealed, and it was repealed by the act of 1863.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is true that the decisions referred to have been made, but the more one studies these acts the more he is inclined to think, with due deference to the presiding officers at the time, that the decisions were not correct. It is also true that Congress arbitrarily, in 1863, did pass an act purporting to forfeit the rights under a treaty between the Government and the Indians. The courts have gone a long ways toward holding that the United States Government can contract with an Indian, the Indian in the Constitution of the United States being recognized as competent to make contracts, because it is one of the functions of Congress to deal with foreign nations and Indian tribes; but the fact remains that without any act on the part of the Indians as a tribe consenting to the act of Congress of 1863 Congress passed that act.

Now, the outbreak of 1862 was perhaps one of the most atrocious in the history of this country, but the evidence was so overwhelming and the sense of gratitude to a part of those Indians who, against the rashness of the younger members of the band, protested and opposed the massacre, and the outbreak of the Indians was so recognized that almost 20 years ago an illustrious predecessor of mine, Senator Davis, on the floor of the Senate demonstrated the injustice of the act of 1863. That act was born of the passions that were engendered by that outbreak.

This measure is not in the nature of creating a claim. It is simply for the purpose of ascertaining what the value of those annuities thus sought to be forfeited by the act of 1863 amounted to. Those annuities were due and they are due to-day under the trems of that treaty.

The only difference between this amendment and an amendment appropriating the money for the annuities is that instead of Congress seeking without any further instrumentalities than they had an ascertainment of the value of the annuities it is proposed to send the matter to the court that the court may investigae the value of the annuities. The fact that it provides for procedure in court is none the less carrying out the terms of the agreement, because we ourselves have abandoned the other process of carrying out the terms of those treaties, which would be for Congress to directly appropriate the money.

That is all I care to say upon the subject. As I said, it engendered a great deal of passion at the time. The outbreak was one of the most diabolical ever known. Yet the people who had been part and parcel of those who suffered so recognized the debt that they owed some of these Indians who opposed the outbreak that 20 years ago, when the feeling had far less died out than it is to-day—and it took time for it to die out—the then senior Senator from that State not only urged this provision, but demonstrated the justice of settling the matter in some way, and surely no more just way can be found than to let the Court of Claims ascertain the value of the annuities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to the Chair that the amendment simply proposes to transfer to the courts the right to determine whether or not there are any annuities due under the treaty. The court can in that same proceeding determine whether the treaty provision has been repealed, as insisted by the Senator from Kansas. If it sustains the repeal there can be no claim and there would be no adjudication or determination.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President, the provision of the bill provides in so many words that that decision shall be made regardless of the act of Congress repealing the former treaty.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; that is true, Mr. President. I would not have the occupant of the chair labor under a false impression as to the terms of the amendment. It provides that the court shall entertain the case and act upon it "as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In other words, does the Senator think the amendment reinstates the act that was repealed?

Mr. CLAPP. It would amount to a legislative declaration that that act ought not to stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In view of that situation, the Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The Chair had not an opportunity to read the amendment, and supposed that it adjudicated the rights of the parties under the treaty if valid, and not to reinstate a treaty that had been repealed. Then it is not an appropriation made in pursuance of any treaty. The point of order is therefore sustained.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Mexico," on page 37, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "six"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "for addition to girls' dormitory, including heating plant, $10,000"; and in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "sixty-seven," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $51,900; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for addition to girls' dormitory, including heating plant, $10,000; in all, $67,900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "six," and in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "fifty-nine," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $51,900; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for water supply, $1,600; in all, $59,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 4, to strike out:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Navajo Indian Reservation at Shiprock, N. Mex., with respect to the necessity of constructing a bridge across the San Juan River at Shiprock on said reservation, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit cost for the construction of a suitable bridge at that place, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose herein authorized."

And insert:

"For the construction of a bridge across the San Juan River at Shiprock, N. Mex., on the Navajo Indian Reservation, to be immediately available, $16,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 20, to insert:

"For the pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, and for necessary traveling expenses of said attorney, $4,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New York," on page 39, after line 9, to strike out:

"For pay of one special agent, at $1,050; one physician, at $600; and one financial clerk, at $600 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the New York Agency; in all, $2,250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Carolina," on page 39, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert "for rebuilding employees' quarters destroyed by fire, $6,000," and in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "thirty-four," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 180 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., and for pay of superintendent, $26,650; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for rebuilding employees' quarters destroyed by fire, $6,000; in all, $34,650."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 23, to insert:

"For the purchase of a site at or near the town of Pembroke, Robeson County, N. C., and the erection thereon of a suitable building for a school for the Indians of Robeson County, N. C., the sum of $25,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Dakota," on page 40, after line 11, to insert:

"To assist members of Turtle Mountain Tribe of Indians in making settlement upon their nonreservation allotments, $100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the purchase of water and irrigation for the growing of trees, shrubs, and garden truck, $2,500"; and in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand two hundred" and insert "twenty-two thousand seven hundred," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Bismarck, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for the purchase of water and irrigation for the growing of trees, shrubs, and garden truck, $2,500; in all, $22,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "six"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "$2,000 of which shall be immediately available"; and in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "seventy-four," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at Fort Totten Indian School, Fort Totten, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $68,500; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $74,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 5, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty"; in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eighteen thousand two hundred" and insert "twenty-eight thousand five hundred"; in line 9, after the word "improvements," to insert "including fencing of building grounds"; in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "for erection of silo and purchase of ensilage cutter and other farm machinery, $2,000; for purchase of milch cows and other live stock and poultry, $2,000; for erection of hospital building and equipment of same, $25,000"; and in line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand two hundred" and insert "sixty thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $28,500; for general repairs and improvements, including fencing of building grounds, $3,000; for erection of silo and purchase of ensilage cutter and other farm machinery, $2,000; for purchase of milch cows and other live stock and poultry, $2,000; for erection of hospital building and equipment of same, $25,000; in all, $60,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 16, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Indians of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in the States of North Dakota and South Dakota, immediately after the passage and approval of this act, out of moneys derived from the sale of certain of their lands under the act of May 29, 1908, and now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, a $40 per capita cash payment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oklahoma," on page 42, line 12, after the word "benefit," to strike out: "and he is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the further sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the construction and equipment of an Indian hospital upon the Fort Sill Indian School Reservation in Oklahoma, to be used only for the benefit of Indians belonging to said tribes; in all, $65,000," so as to make the clause read:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the support of the agency and pay of employees maintained for their benefit."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 20, to insert:

"For the purpose of fitting up the old agency and other buildings of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Agency for hospital purposes and the construction of other hospitals, $20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 43, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the administrator of the estate of John W. West, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States, standing to the credit of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, the sum of $5,000 and interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from September 16, 1884, in full payment of the award made by the commission appointed pursuant to the authority contained in the seventh article of the treaty with the Cherokees promulgated August 17, 1846, and which award was approved by the Secretary September 16, 1884, and his action reaffirmed April 26, 1886."

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] asked a question about that item a few moments ago. I suggest that it be passed over until his return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Is there objection to that request?

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and civilization of the Ponca Indians in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $9,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "seven," and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ninety" and insert "ninety-one," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 500 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Chilocco, Okla., and for pay of superintendent, $83,500; for general repairs and improvements, $7,500; in all, $91,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 17, after the word "Shawnee," to strike out "Agency" and insert "Superintendency," so as to make the clause read:

"For pay of 1 stenographer and typewriter, $900 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Shawnee Superintendency."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 2, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to extend for a period of one year the time for the payment of the several annual installments due or hereafter to become due on the purchase price for lands sold under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1910, 'to open to settlement and entry under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes': Provided, That purchasers shall pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the deferred payments for the time of the extension herein granted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 46, after line 13, to strike out:

"SEC. 18. For expense of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $150,000: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no money shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, except for schools, without specific appropriation by Congress."

And insert:

"SEC. 18. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $174,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 47, to insert:

"For salaries and expenses of district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma and other employees connected with the work of such agents, $100,000: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no moneys shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes except for schools for the ensuing year and for the equalization of allotments, per capita or other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, and the salaries and contingent expenses of the governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and attorneys of said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, without specific appropriation by Congress, except as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue the tribal schools of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and to use funds arising from royalties on coal and asphalt for their maintenance."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 19, to insert:

"For payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertisement and sale in connection with the disposition of the unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes, to be paid from the proceeds of such sales when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by the act approved March 3, 1911, not exceeding $25,000, reimbursable from proceeds of sale."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 2, to insert:

"For expenses incident to and in connection with collection of tribal revenues, including rent of unallotted lands, such amount as may be necessary: Provided, however, That such expenditures shall not exceed in the aggregate 20 per cent of the amount collected."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 7, to insert:

"For traveling expenses of appraisers of the surface of the Choctaw and Chickasaw coal and asphalt segregated lands, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the houses and other valuable and permanent improvements placed upon the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in the State of Oklahoma, by private individuals and not purchased by the Indian nations shall be scheduled to the present owners thereof, and shall be appraised independently of the surface of the land on which they are located; and if the owners of such improvements fail to buy the surface of the lands on which their improvements are located at the highest bid, said improvements shall be sold with the lands at the appraised value with the surface of the land, and the owners of such improvements shall receive out of such purchase money the appraised value of said improvements."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 23, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept payment to the full amount of the purchase money due, including interest to date of payment, on any town lots originally sold as provided in agreements with any of the Five Civilized Tribes and declared forfeited by reason of nonpayment of amount due and not resold."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 16, after the date "1910," to strike out "to March 1, 1912," so as to make the clause read:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of the funds of the Chickasaw Indians now on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, to Douglas H. Johnston, governor of said nation, the sum of $3,000 per annum from March 1, 1910."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 17, to insert:

"For the construction of a sanitary sewer system in Platt National Park, Okla., to be immediately available and expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $35,000."

Mr. CLAPP. On page 50, line 19, in the amendment of the committee, I move to strike out the words "immediately available and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 19, after the words "to be," in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out the words "immediately available and," so as to read:

"To be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply want to call the attention of the acting chairman of the committee to the fact that while that item was estimated for in the sundry civil appropriation bill, I have no objection to it going into this bill; but I think that fact ought to be noted in the RECORD, so that it will be left out of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; that is true. The item ought not to go into the sundry civil bill.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 50, after line 21, to insert:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the heirs or legal representatives of John W. Noble and R. V. Belt the sum of $3,569.95, for legal services rendered to and expenses incurred on behalf of members of the Lyman family, Osage allottees, under contract made pursuant to section 2103 and the following of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and duly approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be paid as provided for in the contract out of individual funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the members of said Lyman family."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 9, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to satisfy of record the judgments rendered in the district court of Oklahoma, for the eighth judicial district, on December 15, 1911, in favor of Albert J. Lee and against Jack Postoak, in the sum of $1,448, by the payment thereof out of any funds that may now or hereafter be to the credit of the heirs of Bessie Postoak; against King Isaacs and others, in the sume of $1,449, by the payment thereof out of any funds that may now or hereafter be to the credit of the heirs of Roger Isaacs; against Thompson Peters, in the sum of $1,476, by the payment thereof out of any funds that may now or hereafter be to the credit of the heirs of Sookie Peters; and against Zeno Huff, in the sum of $732, by the payment thereof out of any funds that may now or hereafter be to the credit of said Zeno Huff."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 2, to insert:

"The fund of $390,257.92, placed to the credit of the Choctaw Indians by act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 1027), shall draw interest at 5 per cent per annum, and the accrued interest at this rate shall be placed to the credit of the Choctaw Nation."

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it proposes general legislation; but I should like to ask the acting chairman why the item was inserted? The existing agreements and treaties do not fix the rate of interest to be paid to these Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas I will say that the Office of Indian Affairs has asked for this appropriation on the following ground:

"The amendment on page 50, lines 4 to 10, inclusive, providing that the fund of $390,257.92 placed to the credit of the Choctaw Indians by the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 1037), shall draw interest at 5 per cent per annum and the accrued interest at this rate shall be placed to the credit of the Choctaw Nation, was reported on favorably to the chairman of the Senate committee in letter of April 23, 1912, on H. R. 20728."

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 52, after line 9, to insert:

"For incidental and necessary expenses of any suit heretofore brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior and now pending on behalf of any of the Five Civilized Tribes, the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, reimbursable from funds belonging to the tribe in whose interest such suit was brought, or now pending."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 16, to insert:

"That to carry into effect the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901 (31 Stats., p. 861), and the subsequent agreement of June 30, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 500), and laws providing for a minimum allotment to each Creek citizen whose name has been placed on the rolls by the Government of the United States under the authority of said agreements and laws, of the standard value of $1,040, the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to pay, out of the funds of the said nation now in the Treasury or that may hereafter come into the Treasury to their credit, to each of said Creek citizens placed on the rolls under said agreement and subsequent agreements, a sum sufficient to bring the allotment of land and money to each up to $800 as a part payment on the standard allotment of $1,040; and that jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear, determine, and render final judgment in the matter of the claim of all citizens of said nation who have received allotments of less than the standard value of $1,040, and to render judgment for a sum of money sufficient to equalize the allotments of each citizen who shall be found to be so entitled up to the standard amount of $1,040; and that the action herein authorized shall be brought in the name of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation against the United States by petition to be filed within six months after the passage of this act, which petition shall be verified by the national attorney of said nation or by the attorney or attorneys employed by said nation to conduct said suit, whose employment is approved by the Department of the Interior in accordance with section 2103 of the Revised Statutes, and the Attorney General shall appear and defend said action; and in rendering judgment in said cause the court shall fix the compensation to be paid to the attorneys upon a quantum meruit for all services rendered in behalf of said Indians in the matter of the claim of all of said citizens for the equalization of their allotments, including services rendered before the departments of the Government, the committees of Congress, and the courts, in and for their interest in this matter in any way rendered, said compensation to be based on a per cent of the amount of said judgment, less any money in the Treasury to the credit of the Creek Nation, not to exceed 10 per cent, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay said sum out of the amount of said judgment or out of any funds of the said nation in the Treasury, and all the remaining funds of said nation not appropriated by the council and approved by the President of the United States (except the sum of $50,000) shall be utilized and applied in any judgment that may be rendered under this act; and the said cause shall be advanced in hearing by the Court of Claims, and by the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is clearly legislation, in violation of Rule XVI. A point of order was sustained against the same provision a few years ago when it was offered as an amendment to the then pending Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon what ground is the point of order based?

Mr. CURTIS. On the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is a fact that the point of order has been heretofore sustained, and in view of the scant attendance this afternoon I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss it or suggest an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken, and it is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 54, after line 21, to insert:

"The sum of $300,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations in Oklahoma during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oregon," in section 19, page 55, line 13, after the word "thousand," to insert "six hundred," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and civilization of the Wallawalla, Cayuse, and Umatilla Tribes, Oregon, including pay of employees, $3,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 13, to insert:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to construct a bridge and the necessary approaches thereto across the Deschutes River, abutting on the Warm Springs Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, at a point to be agreed upon between him and the county court of Crook County, Oreg., the sum of $15,000."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I want to make a point of order against that amendment; but I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], the acting chairman of the committee, or the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], if the bridge is on a river that runs through an Indian reservation, and is it within the reservation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. A part of it runs through the reservation; but where the bridge is it abuts on the reservation. At the place where the bridge is to be built the bluffs are very precipitous, and the Indians, as they now travel from the reservation, have to go down with their teams to the stream and up these precipitous bluffs.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it to accommodate the Indians on the reservation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir; almost altogether. A recommendation was made by the department, and the estimates have also been made.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 56, after line 22, to insert:

"That there be paid to the Tillamook Tribe of Indians of Oregon the sum of $10,500, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Clatsop Tribe of Indians of Oregon the sum of $15,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Nuc-quee-clah-we-muck Tribe of Indians of Oregon the sum of $1,500, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Kathlamet Band of Chinook Indians of Oregon the sum of $7,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Waukikum Band of Chinook Indians of Washington the sum of $7,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Wheelappa Band of Chinook Indians of Washington the sum of $5,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; and that there be paid to the Lower Band of Chinook Indians of Washington the sum of $20,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear, and for this purpose there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $66,000: Provided, That said Indians shall accept said sum, or their respective portions thereof, in full satisfaction of all demands or claims against the United States for the lands described in the agreements or unratified treaties between the United States and said Indians dated, respectively, August 7, 1851; August 5, 1851; August 7, 1851; August 9, 1851; August 8, 1851; August 9, 1851; and August 9, 1851: Provided further, That if, after investigation by the Secretary, he shall find that all of the Indians of either of said tribes or bands and their lineal descendants are dead, then none of the money hereby appropriated for such tribe or band shall be paid to any person for any purpose: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall find and investigate what attorney or attorneys, if any, have rendered services for or on behalf of said Indians, and shall fix a reasonable compensation to be paid said attorney or attorneys for their services in prosecuting the claims of said Indians hereunder, which compensation, if any, shall be paid out of the sum hereby appropriated, in full payment of services rendered; and the decision of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the attorneys and their compensation shall be final and conclusive: Provided further, That before any money is paid to any attorney hereunder, he shall first execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a satisfaction and discharge of all claims and demands for services rendered such Indians in the matter of their claims."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against that amendment, but during the pendency of it I should like to have the Senator from Oregon explain that claim, for the purpose of getting the facts regarding it in the RECORD. As I understand, it is a claim to carry out the provisions of certain unratified treaties. Treaties made and sent to Congress were not ratified, but the Government proceeded to take possession of the lands without paying the Indians.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that is practically a statement of the facts with reference to the matter as briefly as it can be made. These cases are like numerous other cases of sharp practice that was indulged in against the Indians in the early days on the frontier. It is rather amusing to look back at some of the treaties that were attempted to be entered into. I was just reading one to my colleague on my left [Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama], where, instead of paying the Indians money, it was agreed to give them a silk dress or a calico dress or other such things in consideration for valuable tracts of land.

These particular unratified treaties were negotiated pursuant to the acts of 1850 and 1851, which authorized commissioners to treat with the Indians and to make treaties with them for the cession of valuable tracts of land in Oregon. It had been the purpose and desire of the Government for a great many years to try to get these nomadic tribes of Indians together on one reservation, and in pursuance of that policy these treaties were made with them.

Some of the treaties were ratified, but a great many of them were not ratified by the Senate, because it is supposed, although there is no record to show that fact, that the Indians refused to go on the reservations which had been designated by the Government. They did not care to go long distances from the places where they had been accustomed to live and where they had been accustomed to fish and hunt in times gone by.

To show you how the Government treated these people, Mr. President, I might say here that the claims under those treaties which were ratified by the Senate were paid a long while ago, and these are the only ones not paid. The Indians do not even ask interest on the amount of these claims, which I think are just. For instance, the Clatsop Indians ceded to the United States about 500,000 acres of land for a consideration of $15,000, and reserved to themselves only about 4,000 acres. The Government of the United States took that 500,000 acres of land and treated it exactly as they have treated other parts of the public domain. They have sold it, and have received the money for it; but, notwithstanding that fact, these claims have not been paid, because the Government says the Senate never ratified the treaties. That land is amongst the most valuable land in the State of Oregon; it is along the timber ridges of the Coast Range of mountains, and now, in private hands, is worth all the way from $50 to $500 an acre.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That same statement might be made with reference to all these claims. Mr. President, I am truly glad that the Senator has withdrawn the point of order, because these claims have been hung up here in the Senate for years, and ought to have been paid a long time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas withdraws the point of order, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Pennsylvania," in section 20, on page 59, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "nine" and insert "twenty"; and in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and forty-eight thousand five hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty-nine thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

"SEC. 20. For support and education of Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., and for pay of superintendent, $132,000; for general repairs and improvements, $20,000; for completing steam-heating plant, $7,500, to be immediately available; in all, $159,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "South Dakota," in section 21, on page 60, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the construction and equipment of a gymnasium building, $8,000"; and in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-six" and insert "seventy-four," so as to make the clause read:

"SEC. 21. For support and education of 365 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $61,500; for the construction and equipment of a gymnasium building, $8,000; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $74,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 10, before the word "thousand" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "six" and insert "seven"; and in the same line, before the word "thousand" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "thirty-eight" and insert "thirty-nine," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $32,000; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; in all, $39,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine"; in line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert "for a new school building, $35,000; for remodeling boys' building, $5,000"; and in line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty-one thousand five hundred" and insert "one hundred and two thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Rapid City, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $48,500; for general repairs and improvements, $9,000; for completion and extension of heating plant, $5,000; for a new school building, $35,000; for remodeling boys' building, $5,000; in all, $102,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "for general repairs and improvements of agency buildings, $10,000; in all, $24,000," so as to make the clause read:

"For subsistence and civilization of the Yankton Sioux, South Dakota, $14,000; for general repairs and improvements of agency buildings, $10,000; in all, $24,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendmen was, at the top of page 64, to insert:

"To complete the work of straightening the Duchesne River within the limits of the town site of Duchesne, in the State of Utah, $2,000, to be immediately available and to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of lands within the ceded Uinta Indian Reservation opened to entry under the act of May 27, 1902, including the sales of lots within the said town site of Duchesne."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the town of Duchesne, referred to in the amendment, is an Indian town or embraces Indian lands?

Mr. CLAPP. I understand it is within the reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. Is the land being sold for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. CLAPP. Well, some of the lands are being sold. They were taken by allotment. The item is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior as necessary in order to serve the interests of the Indians on that reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. I will not make a point of order, then, against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 64, after line 8, to insert:

"VIRGINIA.

"SEC. 23. For support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $20,040."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington," on page 64, line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and civilization of the Qui-nai-elts and Quil-leh-utes, including pay of employees, $1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "eighteen," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and civilization of Indians at Colville and Puyallup Agencies, Wash., for pay of employees, and for purchase of agricultural implements, and support and civilization of Joseph's Band of Nez Perce Indians in Washington, $18,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "seventy-five," so as to make the clause read:

"For extension and maintenance of the irrigation system on lands allotted to Yakima Indians in Washington, $75,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 15, to insert:

"For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Cushman Indian School, Tacoma, Wash., including repairs and improvements, and for pay of superintendent, $50,000, said appropriation being made to supplement the Puyallup School funds used for said school."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 21, to insert:

"That for the purpose of constructing storage reservoirs to impound flood waters of the Yakima River to provide 1,500 cubic feet of water per second of time at the reservation gates for the irrigation of 120,000 acres, more or less, on the Yakima Indian Reservation, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,600,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in said works by the Reclamation Service."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 65, line 23, in the committee amendment just stated, I offer an amendment which has been suggested by the department. I will say that the chairman of the committee requested me to look after the matter.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. We might as well close the matter up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 23, after the word "provide," it is proposed to strike out "1,500 cubic feet of water per second of time" and insert "for the total diversion of 516,000 acre-feet of stored water and natural flow during each irrigation season"; and on page 66, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so as to make the clause read:

"That for the purpose of constructing storage reservoirs to impound flood waters of the Yakima River to provide for the total diversion of 516,000 acre-feet of stored water and natural flow during each irrigation season at the reservation gates for the irrigation of 120,000 acres, more or less, on the Yakima Indian Reservation, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in said works by the Reclamation Service."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 66, after line 6, to insert:

"That the lands within the project on the Yakima Indian Reservation owned by Indians in fee or otherwise to the extent of 32,000 acres, estimated to be necessary for the support of Indians allotted within the project, for which a water supply of 400 cubic feet per second of time is required, shall receive water free of any and all cost or charge on account of said storage works."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 13, to insert:

"That other lands under Indian ownership to the extent of 70,000 acres additional, more or less, shall bear the proportionate acreage cost for providing said storage waters in the river, except that provided for in the preceding paragraph, which cost shall be a charge against said lands to be paid on such terms and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 2, to insert:

"That the claims for water of the owners of the remaining area of 18,000 acres, more or less, of irrigable Indian land, the Indian title to which has been extinguished, shall be equitably adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That any payments by owners of said lands on account of said storage works shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 2, to insert:

"That the owners of irrigable lands within the project shall pay the proportionate cost of the distribution and drainage systems upon such terms as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no water shall be furnished as herein provided for until the owners of deeded or sold lands and Indians holding lands in fee benefited thereby shall have agreed to pay such proportionate share, such payments when received to be a part of the tribal funds of the Yakima Indians."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wisconsin," on page 67, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two," and insert "three"; in the same line, after the word "building," to strike out "an addition" and insert "additions"; in line 18, after the word "to," to strike out "dormitory" and insert "dormitories"; in line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixteen," and insert "twenty"; and in line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-four" and insert "fifty-nine," so as to make the clause read:

"SEC. 25. For the support and education of 210 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Hayward, Wis., and pay of superintendent, $36,670; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for building additions to dormitories, $20,000; in all, $59,670."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "seven"; and in line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-eight" and insert "fifty-two," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., and for pay of superintendent, $43,450; for repairing and rebuilding barn, $2,500; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; in all, $52,950."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 4, to insert:

"For support, education, and civilization of the Pottawatomie Indians who reside in the State of Wisconsin, $9,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 7, to insert:

"The time provided for bringing suits under the fifth paragraph of section 26 of the act approved April 4, 1910, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 287),' be, and the same is hereby, extended to the 30th day of June, 1913."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 17, to insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the sum of $1,500,000 set aside and held in the Treasury of the United States for the use and benefit of the Colville Indians under the provisions of an act approved June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 337), the sum of $45,000 to Hugh H. Gordon for his individual services in behalf of said Indians, which sum of $45,000 is hereby appropriated for said Gordon's exclusive use and benefit out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same shall be charged against the funds set aside for the benefit of said Indians."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment, as being in violation of paragraph 3 of Rule XVI. It is general legislation on an Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I will ask the Presiding Officer to withhold his ruling in deference to the absence of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. With that understanding let the amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the point of order made by the Senator from Kansas will be entered and further action on the matter deferred until the Senator from Georgia is present.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 69, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-one thousand and twenty-five" and insert "thirty-two thousand five hundred"; in line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; and in line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-four thousand and twenty-five" and insert "thirty-six thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

"For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., and for pay of superintendent, $32,500; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $36,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 21, to insert:

"For continuing the work of road and bridge construction on the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., $20,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire, if I may be permitted to do so, to recur to page 17 of the bill where, commencing with line 14, there is an amendment reported by the committee which was discussed a few moments ago, and against which a point of order, made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], was sustained.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. If it can be done, I desire to withdraw the point of order and let the question come upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Arizona to ask unanimous consent to recur to the amendment on page 17, beginning with line 14. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order which he made against the amendment and which was sustained. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The point of order is withdrawn, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, under the heading "Utah," and after the items now in the bill under that heading, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To come after all the provisions in regard to Utah?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir. In support of the amendment I desire to make a short statement.

This matter was referred to the Court of Claims. The court entered a judgment. Prior to the matter going to the court the amount due the Indians was drawing interest payable annually and was paid annually, but when it was merged into a judgment the comptroller held that he could not any longer pay interest except by direct authority of the Congress. This amendment is in part to cover that.

In connection with that it appears that a great many of these Indians have allotments upon which irrigation rights attach, subject to forfeiture if the improvements are not carried on. In addition to that it appears that many Indians require help in the matter of making improvements, getting stock, and so forth. So the department recommended an appropriation to cover this whole matter, to be used in the judgment and discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

"That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,305,257.19, being the net amount of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911, exclusive of the amount awarded for attorney's fee, pursuant to the provisions of the jurisdictional act approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 788), the same to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after the date of said judgment, the amount thereof and the interest accruing thereon to be available for cash payments to the Indians or for expenditures for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior (Mar. 3, 1909)."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, under the heading "Oklahoma," at the end of the provisions already in the bill under that heading, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "Oklahoma," subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 55, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

"For the purpose of reimbursing the trust funds of the Kickapoo Community in Mexico, said fund having been created under the provisions of the act of Congress of April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 89), for legal expenses necessarily incurred in defending said community, its funds, lands, and members from fraud, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Okemah, who is now trustee of said community, the sum of $41,000, the same to be immediately available."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to hear that amendment explained. It is a private claim.

Mr. CLAPP. The explanation of the amendment is this: Some years ago these people had lands in Oklahoma. While it would take some time to go through the details of the litigation, these Indians were subjected to a great deal of expense that was unfair and unjust. They are now in Mexico, and in need not only of this item but the item of their lease money, which has not been paid them and which is due them. In order to clean up both matters, I have offered this amendment to reimburse them; and I desire to offer one directing the Indian Office to pay their lease money over to them.

Mr. LODGE. Does this money go to the Indians?

Mr. CLAPP. It goes to the Indians; yes, sir. I want to say that from all the information I have been able to get, those Indians, after they went down to Mexico, became a contented, satisfied band of Indians and, in the main, are doing well. I have made inquiries from time to time about them—of course, the evidence which I have is all hearsay—and I believe it was a blessing to those Indians that we allowed them to go down there. They have these two items left; and the purpose of this amendment is to clean up the matter, so that we may be through with it.

Mr. LODGE. I made the inquiry because of the statement I saw in one of the hearings—that of the $2,000 heretofore appropriated for the Kickapoos, I think, only $45 reached the Indians. The rest went in salaries.

Mr. CLAPP. That is too true with reference to their agency in Oklahoma. I have no hesitation in saying, from the evidence I have obtained in these matters, that those Indians are infinitely better off in Mexico and come much nearer getting a fair return for what is theirs and due them than they ever did while they were under the jurisdiction of our own Government.

Mr. LODGE. If this money goes to them, Mr. President, I have no objection to the appropriation; but I do think, in view of the appropriation of $2,690 for the benefit of the Kickapoo Indians, of which all but $45 was spent in the expense of distribution, that we ought to be careful to see that this money goes to the Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. So far as the law can safeguard it, this amendment provides that the money shall be paid over to them.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want it all absorbed in the salaries of agents.

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; I am as anxious to avoid that as is the Senator.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. In addition to that, I am going to ask for the adoption of an amendment to pay over their lease money to them. I send the proposed amendment to the Secretary's desk.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately cause to be deposited to the credit of the Indian owner in the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., all money known as lease money now on deposit with or in any manner under the control of the agents and officers of the Interior Department and all like money due or becoming due or collectible by them prior to the 1st day of January, 1914, and belonging to any of the Mexican Kickapoo Indians now resident in the Republic of Mexico. The receipt by such bank for any such money shall operate as the receipt of the Indian owner and as a complete release of all liability on the part of the officer paying the said money as herein directed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I regret I have no statement concerning it. It was handed me by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. Perhaps it may be well to offer it and let it lie on the table until he returns.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

"For the construction of buildings for agency headquarters on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation in Idaho, $30,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the amendment lie upon the table. Without objection, it will lie upon the table.

Mr. CLAPP. I now offer the amendment I send to the desk, and ask for the reading of the letter from the Interior Department in regard to it.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "South Dakota," on page 62, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to A. C. Brink, of Pierre, S. Dak., the sum of $128.68 on account of repairs to a gas engine made while said engine was rented by him to the superintendent of the Pierre Indian School, and being used during September and October, 1911, in digging a test well for the purpose of securing a water supply for that school, and to charge said amount to the appropriation for Indian school, Pierre, S. Dak., water supply."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In that connection, the Secretary will read the letter from the Secretary of the Interior in relation thereto.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 24, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Answering your letter of June 17, 1912, relative to claim in favor of A. C. Brink, I have the honor to advise you that the bill originally consisted of a charge of $50 for 10 days' rental of a gas engine, which amount was allowed by the Auditor for the Interior Department, and of $128.68 for repairs on the engine while it was being used by the Government. As the agreement for the rental of the engine did not expressly specify that the repairs should be made at the expense of the Government and as their necessity appears to have been due, in part, to the negligence of the Government employees, the auditor held, following the decision of the comptroller dated March 26, 1912, in case of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., that the damages were unliquidated and, therefore, were not of such a nature as the executive departments are authorized to settle. The amount of $128.68 was, therefore, disallowed by him.

Mr. Brink, the claimant, has a legal right to appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury at any time within one year from the date of settlement, which was April 24, 1912.

However, as the statutory authorization suggested by you would probably be more effective in the settlement of his claim, an item has been prepared as requested and is transmitted herewith so that you may take such action as you consider proper in the matter. The office deems the charge a just one and recommends its payment.

Respectfully,

F. H. ABBOTT,
Acting Commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 43, at the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis], we passed the item proposing to pay $5,000 to the estate of John W. West, beginning with line 1, going down to and including line 15. I desire to call up that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves to recur to page 43, lines 1 to 15, inclusive, the amendment which was temporarily passed over during the absence of the Senator from North Dakota. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment is before the Senate. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply asked that it be passed over because the Senator from North Dakota was not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has now been recurred to. Does the Senator still ask that it be passed over?

Mr. CLAPP. No; I move the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, owing to the absence of some Senators there was an understanding that the bill would not be reported out of the committee to-day. Unless some Senator has an amendment he desires to offer I ask that the bill be laid aside until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The message also informed the Senate that the House of Representatives had elected JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER, a Representative from the State of Missouri, Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE) laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand that is a request for the recall of the sundry civil appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. LODGE. That bill has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it is now under consideration by that committee. I should think the chairman of the committee should be consulted before any action is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by one of the clerks at the desk that word was sent to the Senator from Wyoming, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he said he had no objection to the granting of the request of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Then that is sufficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the House is complied with.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, which was, on page 1, line 6, after "Fairbanks," to insert "a citizen."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 2, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask that House bill 3321 be now laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is still pending before the Senate the resolution all this argument has hinged upon, and under the rules it is still before the Senate. I desire that there shall be some facts given to the Senate in reference to it, and as it is now in order, if the Chair will recognize me, I will present those facts.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from South Carolina will pardon me, all I desire to do now is to submit the report of the Finance Committee and to ask for an order, and then to lay the matter temporarily aside. The consideration of the resolution of the Senator from South Carolina can be resumed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. With that understanding, I will yield to the Senator from Missouri, but I should like to have it clearly understood that it is done by unanimous consent in order that the resolution may be disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that as soon as this matter is passed upon, then the resolution of the Senator from South Carolina is to be taken up. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STONE. Then I will move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. That will make it the unfinished business, which ought to be done.

Mr. STONE. I understand that automatically it makes it the unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it was the intention of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], to lay before the Senate to-day the report of the committee to accompany this bill, which was reported several days ago. I regret to say that an unexpected death in the family of the Senator from North Carolina has made his absence from the Senate to-day imperative. At his request I present now the report of the committee (No. 80), stating that I am advised there will be a minority report. I send the report to the desk. The report is somewhat lengthy, and I do not know but that every end will be served if it should be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask that the report be printed in the RECORD, because of the fact that it may take some time to have it printed in document form, and Senators will then have it before them to-morrow morning in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the report will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. And the formal reading of it will be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be dispensed with.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 80, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

TO REDUCE TARIFF DUTIES AND TO PROVIDE REVENUE FOR THE GOVERNMENT, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

Mr. STONE (for Mr. SIMMONS), from the Committee on Finance, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 3321:

On May 8, 1913, the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue passed the House of Representatives, and on May 12, 1913, it was referred to the Finance Committee. Since that date and up to the time it was reported to the Senate your committee has had this measure under careful scrutiny and analysis.

As a result of this examination and study your committee wishes to give its assent to the soundness of the general principles upon which this measure was originally constructed, as well as the theory upon which the revision of the tariff has proceeded. But while the principles of the proposed revision are conceded and while the general line of their application is believed to be beyond controversy, there have been other phases of the situation which in the judgment of the committee called for further analysis. On certain of these points the inquiries of the committee have confirmed the position taken by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, while on certain others it has been necessary on further inquiry to make additional modifications.

Following the lead of the House, your committee has sought in the amendments it now proposes to the House bill to further carry out and perfect the theory of establishing a revenue-producing tariff upon the basis of competitive rates as a just and fair interpretation in the light of existing conditions of the latest authoritative utterances of the party in power upon that subject, and now submits the result of its labors with the confident belief that the enactment into law of the House bill as amended will result in a more equitable distribution of the burdens and incidental benefits of our system of customs taxation; that it will tend to disintegrate the monopolies built up under the present system; that it will enlarge opportunity to individual effort, reduce the cost of living, and relieve the people from the burdens of the protective system strikingly exemplified in the so-called Payne-Aldrich bill, which this measure is intended to supersede. As reported to the Senate, the bill reflects the collective opinion of the Democratic Senators representing the party responsible for the proposed legislation.

SUMMARY COMPARISON OF HOUSE AND SENATE RATES.

Before beginning a discussion of the changes made by the proposed Senate amendments to the House bill, a summary table showing the changes proposed by the Finance Committee in the dutiable and free lists of the House bill will be helpful.

Table I gives the House rates of the dutiable list and the proposed Senate rates.

Table II gives the House rates on items transferred to the free list by the proposed Senate amendments.

DETAILED DISCUSSION OF CHANGES BY SCHEDULE.

While the preceding tables give in parallel columns a synoptic view of all the changes in rates made by the Committee on Finance in the House bill, a brief discussion of the reasons for the more significant alterations made in each schedule will perhaps contribute to a clearer understanding of those changes.

SCHEDULE A.—CHEMICALS, OILS, AND PAINTS.

It will be observed that the most important changes made by the Senate amendments in Schedule A are found in paragraph 1, dealing with acids; paragraph 6, dealing with alizarin; paragraph 25, dealing with celluloid; paragraph 31, dealing with vegetable dyes; paragraph 37, dealing with gums; paragraph 46, dealing with oils; and paragraph 62, dealing with zinc pigments.

Under the present law, alizarin and colors obtained from alizarin and anthracene are on the free list. The House bill placed a duty of 10 per cent on alizarin and 30 per cent on colors obtained from alizarin and anthracene. Under the present law colors obtained from carbazol and indigo pay a duty of 30 per cent and the House bill made no change.

The textile industries, the manufacture of leather, of pulp and paper, and of glass are among the heaviest consumers of chemicals and other products dealt with in Schedule A. In its glossary on the status of the chemical industry in this country, reprinted in House Report No. 326, Sixty-second Congress, second session, page 317, the Tariff Board gives the following table showing the value of chemicals and related products consumed in the industries mentioned, as ascertained by the census of 1905:

Textiles	$30,971,685
Leather	25,038,936
Pulp and paper	10,203,304
Glass	6,311,783

H. R. 3321 has made heavy reductions from the existing law in the rates on products of the industries enumerated above, and in a number of instances the Senate amendments have increased these reductions still further. On account of the extensive use of these colors in the textile industries and in the manufacture of leather and on account of the heavy reductions made in the bill in the duties on the products of these industries the committee thought it but just and fair that these dyeing materials should all be transferred to the free list, as provided in the Senate amendments.

The Committee on Finance has transferred creosote oil to the free list. Creosote oil is used on a very large scale for saturating wood for the purpose of its preservation. In the interest of conservation of our rapidly decreasing resources of woods the committee has deemed it advisable to place this preservative on the free list, the end in view being of more importance than the revenue which would be derived from the small House rate.

The Committee on Finance has transferred cyanide of potash and cyanide of soda to the free list. These products are dutiable respectively under the present law at 12½ per cent and 25 per cent ad valorem. The House rate is specific and equivalent in both cases to less than 10 per cent ad valorem. In the interest of the mining industry the committee decided to recommend their free admission.

A reduction was made by the committee in the rate on linseed oil. The present rate is 15 cents per gallon; the rate prescribed in the House bill is 12 cents per gallon, and the committee recommends a further reduction to 10 cents per gallon. Linseed oil is made from flaxseed. In the present law flaxseed is dutiable at 25 cents per bushel, H. R. 3321 reduces this duty to 20 cents per bushel, and the Committee on Finance has reduced it still further in the agricultural schedule to 15 cents per bushel to make the rate harmonize with the proposed reduction on linseed oil. Linseed oil is used in enormous quantities in making paints and varnishes, certain soaps used in the textile industries, for making linoleum, and in numberless other ways justifying the reduction proposed by the Senate committee.

A considerable reduction was made by the Committee on Finance in the rate on oxalic acid, viz, from 2 cents per pound to 1½ cents per pound. H. R. 3321 made no change in the rate on this acid from the existing law on account of the heavy revenue involved. Oxalic acid is used heavily in the textiles, the leather industries, laundries, and in households, and for this reason the committee deemed a reduction in rate of one-half cent per pound advisable.

In a number of instances the Senate committee has raised the rates in Schedule A of H. R. 3321; noticeably so in the rates on celluloid, calomel, alizarin assistants, lithopone, and zinc pigments. The reasons for recommending higher rates are partly to compensate for the losses in revenue to be expected owing to the changes made elsewhere, and partly because the rates established in H. R. 3321 seemed inconsistent with the rates on the raw materials entering into the manufacture of the products so affected.

The Committee on Finance recommends a rate of three-eighths of a cent per pound on extracts of nutgalls, Persian berries, and sumac. These articles are dutiable under the present law and were transferred to the free list in the House bill under the misapprehension that they are used in tanning leathers. They are used so only to a minimum extent, their principal consumption being in the textile industries. They belong logically with other dyewood extracts in paragraph 31, and for this reason the Senate committee placed them there.

SCHEDULE B.—EARTHS, EARTHENWARE, AND GLASSWARE.

A survey of the amendments made by the Committee on Finance to Schedule B shows that they relate principally to the following items:

(1) Cement, which is transferred to the free list.
(2) Asphalt, rock asphalt, and bitumen, which are made free.
(3) Mica, on which a new classification is introduced.
(4) Photographic cameras, upon which the duty has been reduced 50 per cent.

There were a number of minor changes made in this schedule, of which the reclassification of window glass is the most important.

Cement: The transfer of cement to the free list needs no justification. The cement industry has had in this country a phenomenal development, owing to the extensive and ever-increasing use of this material for building purposes and for paving. Applied originally only in connection with large building operations, cement is now rapidly becoming the foremost building material and an indispensable necessity on practically every farm. With the ever-widening demand for cement, the domestic supply has well kept step, and the production for 1912 is estimated to have exceeded in value the sum of $80,000,000. The law at present levies a duty on cement, equivalent to over 21 per cent ad valorem, on the basis of 1912, which rate was reduced in H. R. 3321 to 5 per cent ad valorem. The imports in 1912 were valued at less than $170,000, and under the radically reduced rates of the House bill imports are estimated to be $220,000. The exports of cement in 1912 were valued at over $5,000,000. Cement is manufactured in this country and at a cost no higher than anywhere else on this continent. It is characteristic of the competitive status of the cement industry of this country that, when some time ago the Panama Canal Commission asked for bids on 4,500,000 barrels of cement, with 12 foreign corporations bidding for the contract, the lowest bid submitted was that of a domestic corporation, whose bid was accepted. This, in connection with the heavy export, indicates that the cement industry of this country, when put on a free basis, need fear no serious competition from foreign imports as long as the domestic producers remain in competition and content themselves with reasonable profits, when it is considered that the bulky nature of the material entails heavy freight expenses, which in themselves act as a deterrent against too active foreign competition.

Asphalt: Asphalt, rock asphalt, and bitumen were put on the free list by the Committee on Finance largely on account of their heavy use in road building and for street paving. There are two classes of asphalt, namely, the natural asphalt found in lakes and imported mostly from Trinidad. Of this grade of asphalt practically none is produced in this country. The other kind of asphalt is of inferior quality and is obtained as a residual product from distillation of crude petroleum, the supply of which is chiefly controlled by the Standard Oil Co. and the manufacture of which is wholly above any competition from abroad. Petroleum products are on the free list, and asphalt obtained from petroleum logically belongs on the free list. To put a duty on asphalt is equivalent to placing a direct tax on communities desiring to improve the conditions of their roads and streets.

Mica: The Committee on Finance has reclassified the paragraph dealing with mica. Mica valued not above 15 cents per pound was put at a specific rate of 4 cents per pound, which rate will have the effect of raising slightly the House rate of 30 per cent on the low-grade product where the value does not exceed 13 cents per pound. The rates on mica of higher unit value have been reduced, and on mica valued above 75 cents per pound the reduction is one-third of the rate established by the House bill, namely, from 30 per cent to 20 per cent ad valorem. A straight 30 per cent rate on mica of all grades, as fixed in the House bill, would discriminate against the low-priced article.

Photographic cameras: The Committee on Finance has eliminated from this schedule photographic cameras, at present dutiable under this schedule in paragraph 95, and has transferred them to Schedule N. The rate on photographic cameras under the present law is 45 per cent ad valorem. In the House bill the rate is fixed at 30 per cent ad valorem, and the committee has made an additional radical cut to 15 per cent ad valorem, reducing the rate to one-third of the Payne bill.

Photographic cameras are produced in this country as cheaply as anywhere in the world, and their manufacture, as well as their distribution, is closely controlled. Photographic cameras are finding a steadily increasing use among the masses, and since this use affords one of the most legitimate and most educational means of recreation, it ought to be encouraged as far as possible.

SCHEDULE C.—METALS, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

The bill as amended by the Senate committee made extensive changes in Schedule C in addition to alterations already made by the House committee in this schedule.

The principal alterations made consist in placing pig iron, iron kentledge, spiegeleisen, iron and steel scrap, ferromanganese, iron in blooms, loops, and slabs, steel ingots, blanks, and billets, cast-iron pipes, and antimony ore on the free list, and in materially reducing the rates upon many of the heavy products of iron and steel as a result of transferring the foregoing basic materials to the free list.

All of the enumerated products thus transferred to the free list, with the exception of ferromanganese, are produced in large quantities here at a cost which does not exceed that in other countries. They are all articles of prime importance in the industries generally, and, owing to their heavy and bulky nature, the relatively high cost of transportation in itself constitutes an impediment to excessive importations. In addition to this, the industry is largely controlled by a few great corporations.

"Judged by all available tests, the American iron and steel industry is fully able to sustain itself without Government aid. It has unrivaled supplies of raw material well situated with reference to one another. It has the use of abundant capital and the best of business organization, as shown by the large profits earned and the large reinvestments made in the industry. It is able to export in competition with foreign countries, as is freely admitted by its chief officials and as is shown by the figures of the Government. Were the domestic demand not so extensive as it has been, exports might be increased, and the testimony of the officers of the United States Steel Corporation shows that the prices abroad are about as satisfactory as they are at home. The industry has the advantage of low costs and when estimated from a rigid accounting standpoint. For all these reasons it may be regarded as well fitted from every point of view in which to establish rates of duty upon a strictly revenue-producing basis."

The House bill places iron ore upon the free list mainly because it was found that the domestic supply of iron ore was largely controlled by the United States Steel Corporation and for the purpose of aiding the independent iron and steel manufacturers in their competition with this monopoly.

For similar reasons the Committee on Finance thought that ferromanganese should also be placed upon the free list. The United States Steel Corporation largely controls the domestic ore out of which ferromanganese, which is a necessary material in the manufacture of steel, is produced. This corporation is the only producer of ferromanganese in this country, but produces it only for its own use and consumption. It was thought under these conditions just that the independent competitors of this monopoly should be permitted to import this high-priced alloy free of duty, and that with iron ore and ferromanganese on the free list domestic competition would be strengthened and the price of the finished products of iron and steel would be eventually lowered.

The changes otherwise recommended by the Finance Committee in Schedule C are practically all in the direction of reductions from the House rate.

Having placed pig iron and allied products upon the free list, your committee felt justified in reducing the House rates upon many of the products of these raw and semi-raw materials, such as beams, girders, joints, car trucks, anchors, tin plate, etc. For this reason, as well as because the House rates were thought not sufficiently low to be competitive, further reductions were made in some of the more highly organized products of this industry.

The committee amendment as to automobiles provides for reclassification of that paragraph and reduces the rates on low-priced automobiles 33 per cent and 66 per cent, respectively, from the House rate, according to the value of the automobiles. The duty is likewise reduced on motor cycles, rail wheels and tires, and a number of other products used heavily in the industries.

The duty on aluminum is changed from an ad valorem to a specific rate and the House rate reduced about 1 cent per pound. It was thought by your committee that the circumstances justified a further reduction than that made by the House, and that owing to the great variation in the price of this product and the close alliance between the domestic and the foreign manufacturers, justified the substitution of a specific for an ad valorem rate.

Of the very few cases where the Senate committee has raised the rates on the items carried in the steel schedule, those of lead ores, zinc ores, and zinc may be mentioned. In the House bill the rate upon lead ore is fixed at one-half cent per pound, which is a reduction of 66⅔ per cent from the rate of the Payne-Aldrich bill.

The reductions made in the House bill on lead ore, zinc ore, and zinc appealed to the Finance Committee as too radical and below the point of competition. In the interest of the industry, a continuation of which is absolutely essential for the welfare of the mining interests, the Senate committee raised the duty from one-half cent per pound to three-fourths of 1 cent per pound on lead ores, which was also the rate of the Wilson law.

Zinc ores were first made dutiable under the present law, the rate being one-fourth of a cent per pound on ores carrying zinc in excess of 10 per cent and less than 20 per cent, one-half cent per pound in excess of 20 per cent and less than 25 per cent, and 1 cent per pound on all ores in excess of 25 per cent. Duties paid on importations of zinc-bearing ores for 1910 show an equivalent ad valorem rate of 55.64 per cent and for 1912 of 44.64 per cent.

The House fixed a common duty of 10 per cent ad valorem upon zinc ore and zinc in bars. The rates appear to be somewhat lower than those upon lead ore or lead in bars. The metals are frequently found in association with each other and are extracted by similar processes. The committee has therefore reported the duty on zinc in ores at 1½ per cent ad valorem and upon zinc in bars at 15 per cent ad valorem, which, though lower than the rate on lead, compares more favorably with it and will increase the revenue derived from importations.

Antimony ores, which were placed on the free list by the Committee on Finance, are produced in this country only to a very limited extent. A duty on this article is exclusively for revenue purposes, but considering the extended consumption of antimony for manufacturing purposes in many lines of industrial activities the revenue from imports of antimony ore are dispensed with.

The rate for the so-called basket paragraph of this schedule, imports under which are very heavy, is under the present law 45 per cent ad valorem; in the House bill it is reduced to 25 per cent, and in the bill as amended by the Senate committee a further reduction of 20 per cent is made, or below one-half of the present rate.

To sum up, the changes made by the Committee on Finance in Schedule C may be classified under two general heads—those relating to iron and steel and those relating to other metals.

(a) In general, the committee was of the opinion that the rates fixed by the House on iron and steel were too high. The evidence produced in recent investigations of the steel industry has conclusively shown that that branch of manufacture is making large returns and is amply able to hold its own in the world market, as well as against foreigners in the domestic trade. Iron and steel products are essentially necessaries, and a reduction of rates on them to the lowest possible point is in line with the principles laid down by the party in past years. Not only, therefore, has the committee thought best to carry the heavier products to the free list, but it has made a general cut upon all of the more immediate derivatives of these products.

(b) On the other metals, lead, zinc, etc., it has been thought that the rates established by the House were too low, and consequently moderate advances were made over the House bill.

SCHEDULE D.—WOOD, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

The Committee on Finance recommends no change in this schedule, except such as are of technical nature, involving merely a change in verbiage in paragraph 171, in order to bring out fully the intentions of the bill and to avoid possible litigation.

In paragraph 174 the provision giving certain concessions to box wood of American production reimported into the United States in the form of boxes filled with oranges and lemons has been enlarged, so that the concession will now apply to boxes made of American wood filled with all kinds of fruit.

SCHEDULE E.—SUGAR, MOLASSES, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

The Committee on Finance, after a careful study of the manufacturing and marketing conditions of sugar, deemed it advisable to recommend that the sugar duties now in force shall be extended up to and including the 28th day of February, 1914, after which date the provisions regulating such duties as established in H. R. 3321 shall become operative. The purpose of this extension was to permit the sugar already contracted for under the custom prevailing in this trade, and which contracts were made under tariff conditions now in existence, to be disposed of at the prevailing rates. In paragraph 182 the committee eliminated the House provisions with reference to sugars fractured, colored, or adulterated after being refined. This provision was taken over from the law now in force and is appropriate there on account of the rates provided in the Payne-Aldrich bill for sugar. The changed status of dutiability of sugar under H. R. 3321 would seem to make such a provision superfluous and might lead to unnecessary litigation.

In this paragraph chewing gum was made dutiable at 25 per cent ad valorem. Under the law now in force chewing gum, if imported, is classified as a manufactured product, not elsewhere enumerated, and dutiable at 20 per cent ad valorem, and if this classification were to continue, under H. R. 3321 the rate would be 15 per cent. In view of the fact, however, that the rate on gum chicle, which is the principal ingredient of chewing gum, has been doubled under the proposed law, such a rate seems insufficient. A rate of 25 per cent on an article of this character is legitimate and in harmony with the plan of H. R. 3321.

SCHEDULE F.—TOBACCO, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

No change whatever is recommended by the Committee on Finance in this section.

SCHEDULE G.—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND PROVISIONS.

In an effort to mitigate the high and rising cost of living, the House bill placed on the free list a number of agricultural commodities, many of which are not the direct product of farm labor but are the products of great industrial establishments carrying on their manufacture with the most improved methods known to modern industry. For the same reasons the rates on other items of this schedule have been reduced. The Committee on Finance has placed on the free list additionally live animals used for food purposes, wheat, eggs, lard compounds, and lard substitutes. In a number of instances it has recommended further reductions in the House rates, such as on butter, cheese, peas, meat extracts, cocoa, currants, and other articles of minor importance. It has made in this schedule only two important changes in rates in the other direction. It has restored a duty on oatmeal and rolled oats, making it 33 cents per hundredweight, or one-third of the existing rate, and has increased the duty on rice used for fermentation purposes from one-eighth of a cent, as provided in the House bill, to one-fourth of a cent per pound.

The Senate committee has placed for revenue purposes a duty of one-tenth of a cent per pound on bananas. Bananas are admitted free under the existing law, and were left on the free list in the House bill. A small revenue tax on this article was deemed justifiable, in view of the fact that the importation of bananas to this country is a practical monopoly of the United Fruit Co. On account of the perishable nature of bananas and the smallness of the tax, it is not believed it can be readily shifted to the ultimate consumer.

The House bill and amendments made by the Committee on Finance fully recognized the paramount interests of our agricultural population by placing agricultural implements of every kind and description, fence and baling wire, cotton bagging and ties, low-priced blankets, boots and shoes, cement, nails, lumber, coal, harness, saddles, cotton gins, wagons, carts, bagging for grain, wool and other bags, sewing machines, and many other products of daily utility on the free list. In common with the rest of our people, our agricultural population will share in the benefits brought about by the reduction of the duty on sugar and its eventual elimination. The substantial reductions made all along the line on cotton and woolen goods, wearing apparel of every description, on crockery, household furnishings, and utensils, hardware, and similar products of our factories, will remove a con siderable part of the burden of tariff taxation now borne by the farmer as well as the dweller in the city and the laborer in the factory, fields, and mines.

SCHEDULE H.—SPIRITS, WINES, AND OTHER BEVERAGES.

An important change made in this schedule, with reference to imports, was the elimination of the additional duty assessed on containers of mineral water of certain sizes. The duty on these being specific, there seems to be no valid reason to depart from the practice established over 70 years ago as an integral part of our tariff legislation and only infringed upon in exceptional cases, namely, not to assess duty on containers with contents dutiable at specific rates. Otherwise this schedule was left intact, as being, in connection with Schedule F, tobaccos, and the manufacture of tobacco, two of the heaviest and most legitimate revenue producers.

The Committee on Finance has added to this schedule a paragraph repealing the privilege of using wine spirits, or grape brandy, for the fortification of sweet wines, free of tax, and appropriate administrative machinery is provided. The amendment provides for the modification of the present statutes relating to the tax upon the wine spirits or grape brandy used in the fortification of pure sweet wine.

Section 42 of the act of October 1, 1890, relating to this subject, reads in part as follows:

"That any producer of pure sweet wines who is also a distiller * * * may use free of tax in the preparation of such wines * * * so much of such wine spirits so separated by him as may be necessary to fortify the wine for the preservation of the saccharine matter contained therein. * * * etc."

Section 45 of said act provides in part as follows:

"The use of wine spirits free of tax for the fortification of sweet wines under this act shall be begun and completed at the vineyard of the wine grower where the grapes are crushed and grape juice is expressed and fermented."

The tax for the manufacture and use of wine spirits for all other purposes is $1.10 per gallon. The statutes just referred to were later amended to provide for a charge of 3 cents per gallon for the wine spirits of grape brandy thus used to pay the expenses of the Government while attending and making the fortification of said sweet wines.

It will be noted that under this statute there are two classes of wine producers who are entitled to this privilege of 3 cents per gallon wine spirits. First, the wine producer "who is also a distiller." Secondly, the wine producer who has his winery "at the vineyard." All other manufacturers and users of these wine spirits must pay $1.10 per gallon. This discriminates, first, against all wine producers who are not distillers and who do not have their wineries at the vineyard, and, secondly, it discriminates against all other makers and users of wine spirits.

There is no sound reason for this legislative favoritism. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, there was used in the fortifying of sweet wines 6,322,303.9 gallons of this wine spirits or grape brandy. If this had been subject to the internal-revenue tax of $1.10 per gallon, the same as that paid by the users thereof, instead of paying 3 cents per gallon as provided for in this law, the revenue during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, would have been increased $6,954,534.29, and if these wine producers had to pay the tax which they ought to have paid, except for this special favoritism shown by the statutes above referred to, the revenue of the Government would have been increased since 1890 by $65,702,601.59. In other words, by this legislation, a bonus has been given to the producers of pure sweet wine of $65,702,601.69, nearly all of which has gone to the California wine producers.

A paragraph has been added to this schedule imposing upon wines known in the trade as "spurious or artificial" wines an internal-revenue tax of 25 cents per gallon, and requiring that all containers of wines or liquors which contain benzoic acid, benzoate of soda, salicylic acid, or fluorides shall be labeled with the per cent of such contents.

This was for the purpose of subjecting to taxation such wines as are made from the pomace of grapes, berries, or other fruits, where the alcohol strength of such wine does not exceed 24 per cent by volume.

In these low-class wines the chemicals above referred to are frequently added for the purpose of preservation and preventing fermentation.

SCHEDULE I.—COTTON MANUFACTURES.

The Senate committee has followed very closely the provisions of the House bill with reference to cotton manufactures. Most of the changes were made after consulting customhouse officials for the purpose of facilitating administration.

The House bill fixed the rate of duty on cotton yarns according to the number of the yarn and upon cotton cloth according to the number of the yarn contained in the cloth. The House bill provided a rate for cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, etc., at from 7½ per cent on cotton made from yarns of lowest number, increasing to 27½ per cent where the highest number of yarns in the cotton cloth exceeded 99. It also provided that cotton cloth when bleached, dyed, etc., shall be subject to a duty of 2½ per cent ad valorem in addition to these rates.

For the purpose of preventing any doubt as to whether the 2½ per cent duty would be added for each one of the processes, the Senate committee expressly designated the rates to attach to cotton cloth when bleached, dyed, etc., giving in each instance the 2½ per cent increase from the rate on cotton cloth in the gray and providing only for one increase of 2½ per cent, even though one or more processes are used on a single piece of cloth.

It will be observed that the 2½ per cent increase contained in the House bill applies to cloth when bleached, dyed, etc., whether the bleaching, dyeing, etc., takes place before or after the cloth was woven, but the House bill does not provide for an increase of the duty on yarns if the yarns are bleached, dyed, etc., before the process of weaving takes place. The bill as reported provides for an increase of 2½ per cent upon yarns when bleached, dyed, etc. This makes no increase upon the rate of duty upon the cloths. It was simply a question as to the place at which the 2½ per cent increase should be made. The House made it on the cloths whenever they were bleached, dyed, etc., and the Senate committee made the increase take place with the yarns instead of the cloths if the yarns used by the weaver had already been bleached, dyed, etc. The increase was intended to be placed on account of the processes of bleaching, dyeing, etc., and the Senate made the increase where the process takes place.

The Senate committee reduced the duty on cotton card laps, roping, sliver, or roving, from 10 per cent ad valorem to 5 per cent ad valorem. The House bill provided a duty upon hose and half hose and stockings, if valued at not more than 70 cents per dozen, of 40 per cent ad valorem. The Senate committee changed this so that hose valued at not more than $1.20 per dozen bear a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem.

The House provided for a duty on cotton gloves of 35 per cent ad valorem. These gloves are of a class not generally in use, and the Senate committee increased the duty to 45 per cent ad valorem.

The House made a duty on handkerchiefs and mufflers composed of cotton, 30 per cent ad valorem. The Senate committee reduced the duty upon handkerchiefs and mufflers, not hemmed, to 25 per cent ad valorem.

The Senate committee increased the duty on collars and cuffs from 25 per cent ad valorem, to conform to the duty provided on products manufactured from cotton cloth.

SCHEDULE J.—FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

The fundamental amendments proposed by the Senate committee to Schedule J consist in transferring hemp, tow of hemp, flax, and tow of flax, hackled, etc., to the free list. These amendments are strictly in line with the general purposes and objects of the revision, and bring hemp and flax into line with all other textile raw materials.

Burlaps, or fabrics of simple jute yarns, used for making bagging for grain, wool, and similar agricultural products are also transferred to the free list, thus giving the farmer generally, and especially the grain and wool producers, the same relief as is given the cotton growers by putting jute cotton bagging on the free list.

Corresponding reductions are also made in the duties on practically all manufactured products composed of flax and hemp.

SCHEDULE K.—WOOL, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

The essential changes in Schedule K and their significance may be reviewed as follows:

(a) The Senate committee, as a result of its investigations, thought that the rates on tops and yarns in the House bill, though materially lower than the rates in the present law, were still too high, and therefore reduced them from 15 per cent to 5 per cent.

(b) It was thought inconsistent to retain a schedule dealing with cotton hosiery and leave wool hosiery to be covered only in general language. Hence a wool hosiery schedule corresponding to the cotton hosiery grouping has been introduced.

(c) There was thought to be no good reason for the retention of a duty on goat hair when wool was free, hence the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals have likewise been relieved of duty.

(d) Reductions have been made in the derived products of goat hair, such as tops, yarns, etc., to adjust the schedule to the basis afforded by making goat hair free.

Essentially the plan of duties on wool and woolens devised by the House has been left unchanged in its basis, the changes being mostly in the direction of reductions. Wool blankets valued at less than 40 cents per pound were made free, and the duty on low-priced hosiery was reduced and the duty on the higher quality increased.

SCHEDULE L.—SILKS AND SILK GOODS.

Articles dutiable under this section are justly considered luxuries and subject to as high duties as purposes of revenue will permit. Consistent with this view, H. R. 3321 has made but very slight reductions in the ad valorem rates, and expected revenues to be derived from this schedule are practically the same as those obtained under the existing law. The House bill, however, substituted throughout this schedule ad valorem rates instead of specific rates as at present. The Finance Committee has not raised the rates provided in the House bill except in the instance of certain handkerchiefs, and in the rates on ribbons where the duty was raised from 40 per cent ad valorem to 45 per cent ad valorem. Inversely, it has reduced the rates on yarns, threads, etc., of artificial silks from 35 per cent ad valorem to 25 per cent ad valorem. With the view of protecting the expected revenues, the Finance Committee recommends the adoption of specific rates which are substantially the equivalent of the House rates in the first four paragraphs of this schedule dealing with partially manufactured silk, spun silk, silk in the gum, velvets, and chenilles. The adoption of such specific rates was most urgently recommended by importers, domestic manufacturers, and customs officials alike, all of whom have convincingly argued that it is practically impossible to ascertain the value of imports under these paragraphs; they believed the rates on an ad valorem basis would lead to much litigation and invite undervaluation to the serious impairment of revenues.

Specific rates, however, necessitated a wide differentiation in the rates established according to the weight or the width of the material, fineness of yarn, and degree of manufacture. Such a system of cumbersome rates may seem undesirable from a theoretical point of view, but for the purposes of practical administration of the law it was thought advisable.

SCHEDULE M.—PAPER, BOOKS, ETC.

The House bill made very heavy reductions in the rates in this schedule and transferred about 46 per cent of imports under this schedule on the basis of 1912 to the free list.

The average ad valorem rate was lowered from 21.42 per cent to 11.85 per cent, a reduction of approximately 45 per cent.

The Finance Committee has raised the average ad valorem rate to 12.35 per cent, and this slight raise is due principally to changing the ad valorem rate in the House bill to specific rates. The reasons for doing this are the same as given in connection with Schedule I. The verbiage of some of the principal paragraphs was changed and the scope somewhat enlarged, and in this way what is thought a more satisfactory arrangement was arrived at in accordance with the recommendations made by the trade.

SCHEDULE N.—SUNDRIES.

This schedule embraces a variety of manufactures with little or no generic relationship between them and not covered by any other schedule in the tariff law.

The plan of arrangement in this schedule called for the transfer of a number of items scattered among other schedules amounting to many millions of dollars in value, and also the transfer of certain items from the dutiable schedule to the free list, and vice versa. These changes brought about an apparent increase in the average ad valorem rate to 33.5 per cent as indicated in the report submitted with the House bill. The chief cause for this apparent increase is the transfer of $52,000,000 worth of laces and braids and similar articles of luxury, dutiable at 60 per cent ad valorem, which hitherto were dutiable under Schedule J. As an additional cause tending in the same direction may be mentioned that many million dollars of imports dutiable at comparatively low ad valorem rates or low ad valorem equivalents, such as coal, coke, and leather, were transferred to the free list in the proposed bill, while, on the other hand, the duty on cut diamonds and other luxuries was raised, and in some instances the raw materials used for these luxuries placed on the dutiable list, which indirectly increased the average ad valorem rate.

The Finance Committee made rather extensive changes in this schedule, not only as far as the rates are concerned, but also with a view to eliminating possible ambiguity and uncertainty as to rates applicable to the individual items. This necessitated a broadening of the language; in some instances, an entire reconstruction of the respective paragraphs.

The Senate committee has raised the rates on ramie hat braid and manufactures thereof, because they are in the nature of luxuries, coming into broad competition with corresponding articles made of silks, also because of the tax on the raw material.

For like reasons a minimum specific duty of 36 cents a gross on pencils is proposed for the House rate. Increased duties are also provided on toilet sets and leather gloves.

The paragraph relating to buttons was reconstructed, assessing a higher rate of duty than is provided for in the House on buttons where foreign competition is heaviest, and lowering the duty below the rate prescribed in the House bill on buttons in which a competitive basis has not yet been reached.

The duty on blasting caps was raised from 75 cents per 1,000 to $1 per 1,000, so as to put an impediment in the way of importers of blasting caps of low quality, the use of which might involve loss of life and limb to the consumers.

Crude marine corals and meerschaum were made dutiable by the Finance Committee for reasons needing no further explanation.

Against these and other instances where the duty has been raised, the Senate committee has gone equally as far, if not farther, in the opposite direction. It has put crude artificial abrasives, fulminates, gunpowder, etc., glaziers' and miners' diamonds, harness, saddlery, not specially provided for, surgical catgut, unexposed photographic films, on the free list. It also made heavy reductions on agate buttons, cheap fur wearing material, manufactures of mother-of-pearl, hard rubber, photographic cameras which were transferred to this schedule from Schedule B. The rates in some few instances, notably in the case of films for moving-picture exhibits, were changed from an ad valorem to a specific basis, for the purpose of protecting revenues and to prevent undervaluations.

The Senate committee has changed very materially the provisions of paragraph 358, furs, etc., both in substance and in rates. Raw furs, hitherto on the free list, were made dutiable in the House bill at 10 per cent ad valorem, being considered a legitimate revenue product, and in this view your committee concurred. They differed from the House, however, as to the ultimate result of such a transfer for the following reasons: In 1912 imports of raw furs into the United States were valued at $17,000,000, and the report accompanying the House bill estimates an import under the 10 per cent rate of $14,000,000 with a corresponding revenue of $1,400,000.

These last figures seem unwarranted in view of the fact that exports of raw furs for 1912 were valued at $14,360,000, leaving a net surplus of imports over exports of only a little over $3,000,000. To what extent the raw furs of animals of the United States enter as a factor into the exports can not be established, but reliable testimony from interested and disinterested parties forces the conclusion that an overwhelming part of the American trade in imported furs is for reexport. Under such conditions the eventual revenue would be very considerably below the estimates of the House if the dealers are to take advantage of the drawback provisions of the law. This, it seems, however, is rather problematical, owing to the fact that the sorting and other operations necessary to prepare the furs for export involve almost insurmountable difficulties in the way of their being carried out under strict governmental supervision, as is required by the Treasury Department for drawback purposes. It seems, also, obvious that with a 10 per cent duty, if the benefit of the drawback is unavailable, the American fur traders would have small opportunity to carry on their business in the world markets against merchants of other countries with raw furs on the free list. The net result of levying a duty of 10 per cent on raw furs would, therefore, in all probability be, first, an absolute loss of a large amount of exports, with all the international exchange of merchandise which this involves, and, second, only a comparatively small net revenue. For these reasons, and because furs have always been on the free list and are on the free list in other countries, it was thought best not to incur the risk of a heavy curtailment in our export trade in this commodity at this time, where other sources of revenue are open to the Government and an extension of our foreign trade is deemed so important. Proceeding from such considerations, the Senate committee has retransferred furs to the free list.

Paragraph 386 has been entirely remodeled in phraseology and extent. The rate, too, was changed. The committee has made all due allowance for the free entry of all kinds of legitimate objects of art accessible or eventually to be made accessible to the masses for their education, but it saw no reason why art objects purchased abroad by the possessors of wealth, intended to be stored away in private mansions for the delectation of the owners and some few privileged friends and often bought merely to gratify a desire for ostentation and irrespective of cost, should not pay a reasonable duty toward the support of the Government.

THE FREE LIST.

Changes in the free list have, for the most part, been treated with sufficient fulness in connection with the respective schedules from which they were transferred.

Table II gives a summary of the articles on the dutiable list of the House bill which have been transferred to the free list, and need not be enumerated again.

Crude marine corals, glass enamel, crude meerschaum, oatmeal and rolled oats, as also extracts of nutgalls, Persian berries, and sumac, on the free list in the House bill, have been transferred to the dutiable list. Crude marine corals used in the manufacture of ornamental articles and crude meerschaum used in making meerschaum pipes are regarded as luxuries and therefore proper objects of taxation.

In the House bill fusible enamel is on the dutiable list. As a result of its investigation the committee did not see any tenable reason why glass enamel should not be placed in the same category with fusible enamel and likewise subject to a revenue duty.

Extracts of nutgalls, Persian berries, and sumac were placed on the free list in the House bill under a misapprehension, as hereinbefore stated in the discussion of the changes in Schedule A, and they were restored to the dutiable list for the reason there given.

Oatmeal and rolled oats, while used as a human food, their use for this purpose is circumscribed and can not be regarded as one of the necessaries in the sense that bread and many other food products are necessaries. After consideration the Senate committee decided it was advisable to impose upon these products a small duty of 33 cents per hundredweight, that being a reduction of 66.6 per cent from the rate in the existing law.

The other alterations made in the free list are largely descriptive, and were made for the purpose of facilitating the administration of the law. This is notably the case in paragraph 647, dealing with barbed and baling wire, and in paragraphs 654 to 658, dealing with works of art, the scope of which last paragraphs has been somewhat restricted. In paragraph 585, dealing with potatoes, the same countervailing provision was used as is carried in paragraph 646 on wheat and wheat products, so that imports of potatoes, wheat, and products thereof from countries that levy no duty on corresponding exports from the United States will be admitted free.

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT OF IMPORTS AND REVENUES, BY SCHEDULES.

To arrive at a fair comparison of customs operations under the present law with those of the House bill and under the amendment proposed by the Senate committee, the same items must be considered under each respective schedule; that is, any item that is dutiable under either the present law, the House bill, or the Senate amendment must appear in the comparison throughout. For example, raw wool being dutiable under the present law, free under the House bill, as well as under the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance, the import value of raw wool and similar materials must appear in Schedule K throughout. Similarly, furs, which are free under the present law and were again transferred to the free list under the amendment proposed by the Senate committee, appear in Schedule N throughout the comparison.

The same process was followed all along the line in the construction of Table III herewith appended. The itemized imports under the respective schedules of this table are estimates only. They have all been recalculated and the results are therefore not comparable with the corresponding data furnished in the report on H. R. 3321.

[1] The rates in this schedule remaining the same as under the House bill and as in the existing law. The increase in the estimated duties as also the average ad valorem rate is due solely to variations in the value of importations.

[2] Though the rates are not increased, the estimated imports show an increase over 1912 because the latter was a year of abnormal importations due to the termination of the reciprocity agreements with countries producing commodities dutiable under Schedule H. In anticipation of the higher rates of duty effective after the termination of these agreements the importations were increased. Normal imports under existing rates of duty may now be expected since the overstock is practically consumed.

The predominant features of this table are the great reduction in average rates and the increase of imports to be admitted free under the amendments proposed by the Senate committee. The House bill has free listed imports valued, on the basis of 1912, at $103,000,000; this amount has been increased under the amendment proposed by the Senate committee to $147,367,000. Partly owing to this transfer, and also owing to the reduction in the House rates, the total revenues under H. R. 3321 as amended by the Senate Committee on Finance have been reduced from $257,583,000 to $247,780,000, a total reduction in revenues from imports of $9,600,000. The average ad valorem duty levied on imports for the year 1912 under the existing law, as shown by this table, was 36.86 per cent; based on estimated imports under the House bill, the ad valorem rate was 27.84 per cent; and under the amendment proposed by the Senate committee the average rate is reduced still further to 26.67 per cent.

Expressed in percentage, the reduction in the average ad valorem rate on all imports made by the amendments of the Senate committee is as follows:

	Per cent.

GOVERNMENT REVENUES.

Revenues for the current fiscal year, and especially those from customs receipts, though covering a period of transition from a policy of high protection to a policy of competitive tariff legislation, will be fully equal to the expenditures appropriated for the corresponding period.

The estimates were made by Treasury experts on lines usually adopted in such contingencies. Table IV, as below, gives a balance sheet for receipts and disbursements for the current fiscal year.

It will be seen from Table IV, as above, that according to expert computations the estimated receipts for the current fiscal year will exceed expenditures by about $2,000,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, during which period the House bill as amended by the Committee on Finance will have been in full operation, the additional customs revenues allowed for in the above estimate, owing to the continuation of the Payne rates for part of the year, will not be available. But the income tax, as well as the tax on spurious wines, wine and grape brandy used in the fortification of pure sweet wines, and the tax on cotton futures will have been operative for a full year, and the revenues so realized, together with the natural increase in customs receipts, will, it is confidently expected, more than equal the economical needs of the Government.

SECTION H.—THE INCOME TAX.

In ascertaining the taxable income of an individual the House provision of the bill allows an exemption of $4,000 and allows no additional exemption on account of wife or children, except in the case of a wife living permanently apart from her husband, in which case the wife may be independently taxed and would be entitled independently to an exemption. By paragraph C of the bill as reported, and which paragraph is amendatory of a portion of paragraph D of the bill as it passed the House, your committee reduces the amount of exemption of net income to $3,000 and allows on account of marriage an additional exemption of $1,000 to either the husband or wife where they are living together, but not to both. In the case of a minor child or children living with and dependent upon the parent such parent is allowed an additional exemption of $500 for one minor child and up to $1,000 on account of minor children, except where both parents are taxable, in which case no exemption is allowable on account of children. By the amendment the lowest possible exemption to any one person would be $3,000 and the highest possible exemption to any one person $5,000. While the amendment may make no wide difference in the volume of revenue derivable from the tax, it is deemed equitable as recognizing the added obligations on account of marriage and children and salutary as emphasizing the family as the unit in our social structure.

Paragraph D is further amended to obviate the constitutional objection to computing the tax on income accruing prior to the date on which the amendment to the Federal Constitution authorizing the tax went into effect. The proposed amendment is repeated in the text of the bill wherever necessary to secure uniformity and effectuate its intent and purpose. The practical effect of the amendment, in connection with other provisions of the bill, is to continue in force the present corporation tax to March 1, 1913, and to compute, assess, and collect the income tax for the remaining months of the calendar year, allowing for these 10 months five-sixths of the deductions authorized by this section of the bill. Thereafter the tax becomes computable, assessable, and payable on the income for each succeeding calendar year.

Your committee conceived that so much of the provision of paragraph E as requires lessees of real estate to make return of rents and withhold and pay the tax would prove, in many cases, impracticable of administration and propose to amend the paragraph in this respect by requiring the landlords to make their own returns, except in cases where the tenants, by the terms of the lease, are required to pay the State and municipal taxes, local assessments and cost of insurance, maintenance and repairs against the property, in which cases the tenants are authorized to deduct the tax from the gross rental and pay the same. The amendment further provides that where the owner is a corporation the tenant shall not be required to deduct the tax from the gross rental, but that the corporation shall be required to make the return and pay the tax.

The paragraph is further amended by requiring that when under a contract entered into before this act takes effect "the payment to which the taxable person is entitled is required to be made without any deduction by reason of any tax imposed, the obligor shall not be compelled to make such deduction or withhold the income tax," but shall be required to give notice to the collector of the payment made as a part of his return, which payment is thereupon required to "be computed as a part of the income of the taxable person." If the obligor fails to give such notice to the collector, then "he shall be personally liable for the tax if the same is not paid by the taxable person."

Paragraph F is amended so as to provide that nothing in this section of the bill shall apply to "business leagues, nor to chambers of commerce or boards of trade, not organized for profit of a private stockholder or individual; nor to any civic league or organization not organized for profit, but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare."

Immediately following the foregoing amendment a further provision is inserted to meet the cases of States, cities, towns, and other political subdivisions which are in receipt of income from sources other than that of taxation and about which question was raised that such incomes might be held subject to the tax. One State enjoys a revenue from the gross earnings of a railway company to which a land grant was made by the State years ago. A city under its contracts with the street railway companies is entitled to a certain per cent of the net earnings per annum. While it was regarded improbable under the provisions of the bill that these revenues to States and municipalities would be construed as taxable income, to foreclose all doubt the amendment is inserted expressly exempting such revenues from the operation of the act.

Paragraph F is further amended by the insertion of the following:

"That mutual life insurance companies shall not be required to return as a part of their income any portion of premium deposits actually returned to their policyholders within the year for which the income tax is paid, nor any portion actually credited to the policyholders by being applied as a deduction from the amount of the premium otherwise due the company within the year for which the income tax is returned."

The paragraph is also amended so that in ascertaining net income a corporation, joint-stock company, or association may deduct interest on an amount of indebtedness equal to the sum of one-half of its combined bonded indebtedness and paid-up capital stock, instead of on an amount equal to its capital stock, as provided in the bill as it passed the House, and the paragraph is further amended as follows:

"That in case of indebtedness wholly secured by collateral the subject of sale in ordinary business of such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, the total interest secured and paid by such company, corporation, or association within the year on any such indebtedness may be deducted as a part of its expense of doing business."

Attention is invited to an amendment proposed to paragraph H. A peculiar situation exists in Alaska. Under a Federal statute the railroads of that Territory are subject to a license tax of $100 per mile of track per annum. About all but one line of the railroads in the Territory are insolvent, and on portions of some of them operation has practically ceased. The Department of Justice, the railroad companies, the people of Alaska, and all others concerned seem to agree that the $100 a mile is a futile tax and should be superseded by some other form of taxation. To meet the situation an amendment is proposed which, in addition to the normal tax of 1 per cent, subjects the railway corporations doing business in Alaska to a 4 per cent tax on their net income from the business done in that Territory, and provides that this additional tax shall be in "lieu of the license tax of $100 per mile per annum now imposed by law."

Your committee have submitted other amendments to this section, but these go to administrative detail rather than to substance. The graduation of the income and the rate of tax imposed are unchanged, and other substantive provisions remain as they came from the House, save in the respects indicated in the foregoing.

SECTION III.—TAX ON CONTRACT FOR FUTURE DELIVERY OF COTTON.

In considering sources for raising necessary revenue the committee felt authorized to select for this purpose the business of dealing in what is known as "cotton futures" on the cotton exchanges of the country and other like places. This business has been the subject of thorough and protracted discussion, with the result of a divided public opinion as to whether the business is wholly pernicious and therefore to be suppressed, or is a real service in the distribution of one of our great agricultural products and therefore to be encouraged. Without assuming to dispose of this controverted issue, the committee adopted, as a justifiable course for present action, the imposition of a tax on such transactions on the cotton exchanges of the country as are not consummated by actual delivery of the cotton specified in such contracts. It is contended by persons related to the sale and consumption of cotton that there is a legitimate branch of the business of dealing in contracts for the future delivery of cotton on cotton exchanges in the way of hedging actual cotton for sale or manufacture. It is, however, admitted by all that there is a large volume of business done upon these exchanges nominally for the purchase and sale for future delivery of cotton where no delivery is ever made, and where there is no real intention to make any such delivery, and the transaction in its last analysis is one of gambling on the future price of one of the staple agricultural products of the country. This latter practice is universally recognized as an evil, and by none more emphatically than by those who claim to resort to the cotton exchanges of the country for protection by means of the so-called hedging system. The tax imposed by the committee is deemed to be sufficiently small to make its payment justifiable by those who resort to the exchanges for the purpose of hedging and sufficiently large to deter the activities of those who resort to such exchanges for the sole purpose of speculation and gambling in the differences of price created from time to time by fluctuations frequently artificially produced.

The committee believes the subject matter to be one fit for the imposition of a proper tax, not only because of its indirect influence in eliminating a parasite which has afflicted the business of dealing in purchases of cotton for future delivery, but because it will result in the collection of a considerable sum of revenue from a source which in its usual operation produced abnormal profits from a business that is not susceptible of just taxation in any other way. The committee is advised that since 1907 no official record of the extent of the dealings on the cotton exchanges in contracts for future delivery is accessible to the public, but reliable estimates fix these dealings at about 130,000,000 bales annually in recent years. It seems to be the consensus of opinion that about 10 per cent of the contracts of sale and purchase of cotton for future delivery is embraced in that branch of the business known as hedging, and that the other 90 per cent thereof is of a speculative or gambling character, where no delivery of the product is ever really intended to be made. If the effect of the proposed tax is to eliminate all of the latter class of business and to leave intact that part of the dealings resorted to for hedging purposes, the revenue derived from this tax should amount to about $7,000,000 a year, and if its imposition does not have the effect of eliminating the gambling or speculative end of the business the revenue derived therefrom will be enormously in excess of this amount.

SECTION IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

The committee deemed the amendments of the House entirely too drastic. We found the tax administration features of our Government were scattered back for half a century, here and there, chaotic, somewhat confusing, but, at any rate, with nearly all debatable points adjudicated, and we thought it better to leave the law for the present substantially as it is, making a provision for a joint committee of the two Houses to revise, simplify, and codify, and to report back to the House Ways and Means Committee by the 1st of January next.

It is believed that in nearly every case where we struck out a provision of the House bill it was new legislation. Some of the new legislation was so obviously right we have left it in.

We added some few amendments for statistical purposes. One of them will be found beginning on line 12, page 215, and going down to and including line 17 on same page, and others for the same purpose will be noted by the reader as he goes through the bill.

Another of these provisions will be found beginning on line 21, on page 219, going down to and including line 7, page 220. Every Senator will recognize there has been a great deal of trouble in determining the precise ad valorem equivalent of a specific duty where many articles are in the same paragraph and where the Government's statistical returns are made for the entire paragraph. This is especially true with regard to "jumping duties." We thought in this amendment to get a list or enumeration of articles in sufficient detail as to time and quantity and value to obviate the trouble which has been referred to.

We do not think that the new and extensive power of giving to the Secretary of the Treasury, without appeal, the right to determine the existence or nonexistence of a foreign market should be given. It was putting too much power into one man's hands, especially when it is remembered that the Secretary of the Treasury would not be the person to exercise the power, but some special agent of the Treasury would be, the Secretary acting, necessarily, upon his report without much personal knowledge of the facts.

The House bill required a fee of $1 with respect to each separate appraisement. We thought a fee of $1 with respect to the appraisement of an invoice would be sufficient.

The House required also a separate fee of $1 for each separate protest with regard to each article protested and did not permit the protest as to appraisal and the protest as to duty to be included in one document. We saw no more reason why the various grounds of objection to the action of an appraiser should not be included in one document and one fee to cover it all than why various counts should not be placed in a declaration as in a court of law, one fee including them all. At present there is no fee required to be paid at all.

On page 235, lines 3 to 9, inclusive, we struck out the language giving inquisitorial and judicial functions to an appraiser, and leaving it to the discretion of the general appraiser or Board of General Appraisers whether an importer could be present himself or by his attorney to examine and cross-examine witnesses. We substituted for that provision the language beginning on line 20, page 230, going down to and including the word "Appraisers," on line 6, page 231, and required reasonable notice to be given both to the importer and to the Government of the subjects and times of hearings, and permitting the attorneys representing both to be present, but admitting the use of affidavits as being necessary sometimes to take the place of oral testimony and as being simpler than depositions.

We adopted the House provision on line 17, same page, saying that the absence of samples would not invalidate an appraisement or reappraisement, but with an amendment that this should apply only to the cases where neither party in interest had demanded the inspection of the merchandise or sample.

We agreed with the House in its policy of doing away with the contingent-fee arrangements between lawyers and importers at the ports of entry, and we undertook, in the language beginning on line 7, down to and including line 13 on same page, to strengthen and clarify its purpose. We believed with the Ways and Means Committee that a great deal of unnecessary litigation had been brought about and perpetuated by the contingent-fee custom at the ports of entry.

We struck out the very drastic language of the House, line 3, down to and including line 9, page 235, giving to the report of a collector or chief officer of customs the whole force and effect of a judgment of a United States district court, without the right of appeal or any other right. We had doubts of the constitutionality of that provision, but no doubt at all that it was of very doubtful expediency.

You will note an amendment, beginning on line 9, down to and including the first word on line 12, page 236. We thought the decision of the Board of General Appraisers and of the appraisers ought to be published in full when either the board or the Secretary of the Treasury desired. Thus the reasons for the decision would appear to the enlightenment both of the officers and of the importers.

We struck out the language of the House, beginning with the words "and in," on line 13, page 236, down to and including the word "defendant," on line 17, which placed the burden of proof at all stages of litigation upon the defendant; that is, in court. Under the present law the burden of proof rests upon the Government as long as the goods are in the custody of the Government and before they are delivered; then the burden shifts to the importer.

We struck out paragraphs U, V, and W of the House bill, all being new, and, in our opinion, drastic and capable of abuse, if not certain of being abused. This was more especially true of paragraph U, where an innocent American importer could have been punished, and in some cases even perhaps bankrupted, because of the refusal of a firm in a foreign country to submit its books to our inspection. Paragraph V of House bill carried this principle very much further, and penalized not only those engaged in the importation of merchandise, but those "engaged in dealing with such imported merchandise," which might have been stretched to cover the case of a retail merchant in the heart of South Dakota to whom goods had been shipped without any knowledge upon his part of whence they were imported or how.

Paragraph W of the House bill provided for a registry of commissionaires or purchasing agents in each of the United States consulates abroad, and undertook to give our Government what was closely akin to extraterritorial jurisdiction in foreign countries. We thought that the United States Government and its people would not permit any such exercise of authority and jurisdiction by another Government in our own country and that we ought not to attempt to exercise it abroad.

Paragraphs U, V, and W were not only obnoxious to the objection that they were too drastic and would be subject to abuse, but were clearly violative of international equity and equality.

The committee struck out the language of the House on line 3, page 251, beginning with the words "or which," down to and including the words "allowed therein," on line 7. It is a general Democratic principle that the people living in any territory under the flag ought to be treated like people living in any other part of our common domain. As long as the Filipinos are under the flag of the United States they should be entitled to the same rights and privileges as residents of New York or California, and certainly not entitled to any greater rights or privileges than either. A man importing goods into the port of New York from New Orleans containing foreign materials which had not paid duty at New Orleans and which were taxable under the tariff law to the value of more than 50 per cent of the total value which the materials were subject to, or manufactures of tobacco containing 20 per cent of foreign tobacco subject to an import duty, would have to pay a tax upon the 50 per cent in the one case and the 20 per cent in the other. There was no reason why, therefore, the importations from the Philippine Islands should be permitted to contain 50 per cent and 20 per cent of the materials taxable under our import laws and yet allowed to come free into continental United States. The truth is that, the 10-year period prescribed by the treaty with Spain having expired, imports into the Philippines now ought to be subject to precisely the same duties as in the balance of the United States, although it might be well to let the revenues from importations into the Philippine territory go into the Philippine treasury.

Your committee struck out subsection 7 of paragraph J, page 263, giving a discount of 5 per cent on all duties upon goods imported in American bottoms. The provision was in contravention of some 19 or 20 treaties of the United States without having been preceded by the courtesy of a notice of revocation, and was very properly protested against by the high contracting parties with whom we had the treaties. In our opinion it would have led to no good result, as every other country could have retaliated, and all the countries at the end would have been just about where they started. Moreover the country which could use that principle with most force and effect in injuring other countries would be the country with the largest merchant marine, and the country which could least effectively use it would be the country with the smallest merchant marine. We were therefore not only inviting an endless retaliation but a retaliation where our opponents would have had in nearly every case the better of it, and in many cases infinitely the better.

The provision on page 267 providing for the withdrawal for home consumption of cigars manufactured entirely of tobacco imported from any one country, provided the manufacturing is done under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and provided that the United States Government shall put a stamp upon the box containing the cigars to indicate their character and the country of origin of tobacco of which made and place of manufacture, was adopted to meet a condition prevailing in this country and to enable the independent manufacturers of tobacco to have better chances with the Tobacco Trust. It was furthermore done because where cigars made out of Cuban tobacco are manufactured in Cuba the Cuban Government affixes its stamp, which attests the place of origin of the tobacco, and every cigar connoisseur is controlled by the presence or absence of that stamp.

There was no reason why cigars made of identically the same tobacco by American labor and American capital should not have an advantage of a Government stamp here, attesting the same purity of origin, etc., thus putting cigars made out of Cuban tobacco in the American market upon an equality of opportunity of sale with cigars made out of Cuban tobacco in the Cuban market, provided only that the manufacturing was done under such rules and regulations as to prevent any possibility of fraud in substituting other tobaccos for the ones attested by the Government to compose the cigars. It is believed that this proviso will very largely increase our revenue because it will encourage the importation of Cuban tobacco, paying a very high duty, by increasing the sales of cigars made out of Cuban tobacco upon American soil.

We struck out the dumping clause of the House provision, first, because it applied to only dutiable articles, and if to be applied to any articles at all it seemed to us it ought to apply to all; secondly, if it did apply to all it was capable, under an unfriendly administration, of being used as a means of increasing the duty upon dutiable articles 15 per cent, and of putting articles upon the free list under a duty of 15 per cent.

The provisions contained in the existing law with regard to undervaluations and the increasing tax because of it up to 70 per cent is a very good antidumping provision and, as we are informed and believe, immediately stopped dumping in the American market, and this, too, without making it discretionary with any executive officer (to be exercised in a broad way) to raise the duty.

On lines 11 to 17, inclusive, on page 273, we have given to the circuit courts of appeal in certain cases concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Customs Appeals. The Court of Customs Appeals sits in Washington. Frequently litigation may arise in Portland, Me., or in San Diego or San Francisco, Cal., and we thought the settlement of controversies ought to be nearer the place of residence of the citizen than the existing system permits them to be.

Finally, recognizing the chaotic, confused, and scattered nature of the tax administration laws of the United States, we provided in the amendment, beginning on line 18, page 273, and going down to and including line 14, page 274, for a joint committee consisting of four Members of the House and three Members of the Senate to investigate and consider the revenue administration laws—simplify, revise, harmonize, and codify them. We gave to this committee the power to subpœna and compel the attendance of witnesses, to record and print hearings and employ an expert clerk, a stenographer or stenographers, make a final report to the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and print it for the use of the Senate and the House, and required it to make this report not later than February 1, 1914. We make an appropriation for the purpose of the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment ending on line 18, page 276, has already been explained as having been intended to offset a possible constitutional objection to the retroactive power of Congress and to continue the old excise law in operation until the new income-tax law shall become operative.

RETALIATORY DUTIES.

The Committee on Finance calls special attention to the provision designated to furnish the President with power to impose tariff duties of a retaliatory character upon all articles comprised in a specified list. For some years there has been a development of maximum and minimum tariffs abroad, and in not a few instances the Government of the United States has been compelled to see its citizens subjected to harsh and discriminating tariff treatment abroad without being able under the law to afford relief. The tariff act of 1909 recognized this situation and established a general maximum schedule of duties 25 per cent higher than the general or minimum rates of the law. This maximum schedule has proved embarrassing, clumsy, and inadequate, and the situation under it has been less satisfactory than that which previously existed. No material advantages have been derived from it, but, on the contrary, it has stood in the way of successful commerce with other countries. The provision now recommended will, it is believed, place in the hands of the President powers which, though extensive in their sphere, are sufficiently circumscribed to permit of their being exerted within the limits assigned them without disturbing the general fiscal system of the United States. Wise use of the retaliatory power will, it is reasonably to be expected, bring about equitable arrangements with those countries which do not now afford us fair treatment, and it is probable that the weapon thus provided will be so available and effective as to render its actual use entirely unnecessary under any ordinary conditions.

Accordingly the bill H. R. 3321, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, is reported back with amendments, with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

Mr. STONE. In this connection I wish to send to the desk a concurrent resolution, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 6) was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the report (S. Rept. No. 80) of the Finance Committee of the Senate, accompanying the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 10,000 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I have polled the Committee on Printing on the concurrent resolution and I report it back and ask for its immediate consideration.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I desire to state to the Senate that the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from North Carolina, will to-morrow on the assembling of the Senate make the statement he had intended to make to-day, giving a general analysis of the bill and such observations as he thinks proper to add. He is not able to be here to-day, but he will be here to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before that is done——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to give notice that on Monday next, July 21, I will address the Senate, after the routine morning business, on the pending tariff bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that immediately following the statement by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], which is to be made to-morrow, I will address the Senate upon the tariff bill, not to interfere, of course, with the notice already given, although the Senator from Utah has known of my purpose for some time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks that the consideration of the tariff bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. STONE. That the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

COTTON TIES AND COTTON BAGGING.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 134, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and is hereby, directed to investigate the recent advance in price of bagging used in baling cotton; also the advance in price of ties used in banding or baling cotton; and to report to the Senate at the earliest possible time the cause or causes for said advances.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, some time in the early spring—about the usual time when the prices for covering and putting in marketable order the great commercial crop of the South were being considered—inquiries were coming in from the merchants and from different sources throughout the South as to just what would be the current price or what would be the status, so far as any legislation is concerned. I was unable to answer that, as I suppose other Senators interested were unable to answer it.

Subsequent to that there have come letters in great numbers calling attention to the fact that, without any reason, the price of this common article, the covering of the American cotton crop, has advanced 2 cents a yard, aggregating a cost to the producers of cotton of $1,800,000. The parties engaged in the manufacturing business, as I am informed from the Department of Commerce this morning, are only 14 in number. Those 14 are subsidiaries, according to my information, to the American Manufacturing Co., 63 Wall Street, New York.

I have attempted to investigate to find what is the reason for this rise in price from 8 cents a yard last year, on exactly the same covering, to 10 cents a yard this year, and I have been unable to find it. There is no report current that the jute crop has been short; there is no report that there has been any excess in the cost of labor; but at the arbitrary will of these few parties engaged in this industry, in the preparation of the article, $1,800,000 is to be added to the cost of marketing a great product.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is rather refreshing to me, because in the past I have always heard the Senator from South Carolina say that the reason for these extreme prices has been the tariff.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is the cause, in my opinion, now.

Mr. SMOOT. The pending bill provides that cotton bagging shall be free. So, I say, it is quite refreshing to me to hear the Senator now ask for reasons why there is an increase in the price of cotton bagging.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Utah well knows that those engaged in this business have been protected by a duty that forbade competition and importation. Realizing the danger which now threatens them and knowing that they have this one stroke at the American people, they are holding them up to get $1,800,000 before they are forced by the Democratic tariff to deal fairly.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator ought to know that the few manufacturers of this country of cotton bagging have not a million eight hundred thousand dollars on hand, nor any considerable portion of it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suspect that is one of the reasons why they want to get it.

Mr. SMOOT. All I wanted to call the Senate's attention to was that the rate on cotton bagging is only six-tenths of a cent a square yard. Now, the Senator from South Carolina rises in his seat and says the price has advanced 2 cents a pound.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. In the very face of free bagging. I say to the Senator that there is some other cause for increased prices besides the tariff, as I have told him in the past. Instead of being increases by American manufacturers in the future, he will find the foreign manufacturers dictating to the southern planters as to what they shall pay for their cotton bagging.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. All I have to say in reply to that is that on account of the duty existing previously the great arteries of trade through which the article passed were preempted by that duty, and it takes some time even with a smaller duty for trade to become accustomed to the fact that the markets of our country are open to competition. Now, with free bagging a thing that is possibly permanent—and which I hope will be permanent under the long stretch of Democratic rule that lies before us—they are getting ready to go out of business, and as a last stroke under their monopoly and under their protection they are exacting $1,800,000 from the people who are dependent upon them for this cover.

Mr. SMOOT. The manufacturers of cotton bagging have very little cotton bagging on hand to-day. There is no question about it, and I do not want the planter of the South to be misled, and I promise him foreign dictation in prices after the passage of this bill. After this tariff bill becomes law, the American manufacturers of cotton bagging will be wiped out of existence, and the Senator knows that that will be the case. He has admitted that they will cease making these goods. The southern planter will be the sufferer. I want the Senator to remember that I predict this day that the cotton planter of the South, as soon as the American manufacturer is destroyed, will pay more for his cotton bagging than last year, and it will be an advance of more than six-tenths of a cent a square yard, the present duty.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If this is a sample of their beneficence to the cotton planter I should like to contribute to their destruction, which I have consistently done up to the present. But I want to call attention to the fact, Mr. President, that there is some cause, and the people who produce this article are entitled to know what that cause is.

Mr. President, there are other Senators here who have received communications like my own, and there are Senators present who are not forgetful of the period of about 1898 that we went through, almost paralleling this very condition on the part of the growers of cotton throughout the South, when the price was put up arbitrarily so high as to cost the American cotton grower anywhere from 35 to 50 cents per bale at the arbitrary will of those who have a monopoly of this article.

My resolution instructs the Secretary of Commerce to investigate it. If it is a natural cause, the simple law of supply and demand that is producing this burden upon the American people, then there is nothing to be done; but if upon investigation it is found that this is done in spite of the law we have for the regulation of this kind of oppression, it should be known.

I think it is the duty of the Senate to pass this resolution and let the officers of the Government charged with it see that the facts shall be laid before the Senate. If the cotton growers of this country have got to pay $1,800,000, let them pay it legitimately along the line of supply and demand, and not at the sweet will of a combination who wish to raise the price and extract this stupendous sum from the cotton growers.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have not the slightest objection in the world to the passage of this resolution. If the Senator from South Carolina thinks that it will throw any light upon the situation, I am quite ready to join with him in having that light thrown.

I simply rose to ask him about the statement which he made a few minutes ago, of which I am not informed, in which he said that the factory or factories, I do not know which, making this cotton bagging, in consequence of the proposed tariff bill, were now preparing to close their industry and go out of business.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did not say that. I said, in contemplation of taking advantage of their monopoly and the protection that was thrown around them, they were putting up the price in order that they might take advantage of that they had been enjoying all these years. I did not say that they were about to go out of business, because I do not believe they will. I believe there is a legitimate profit in the business on the lines of competition. I believe there is illegitimate profit in it that they have been enjoying all these years or they would not be clamoring for protection.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am glad the Senator called it to my attention.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understood the Senator to make that assertion.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I made no such assertion.

Mr. LIPPITT. So far as the inquiry goes, I can see no objection to it at all. If any light can be thrown on the situation, there is no reason in the world why it should not be.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have received letters and communications from parties in my State who are interested in this question. I want to say that one communication which I have before me is not from a cotton grower, but from those who are known with us as cotton warehousemen, cotton factors, those who sell immediately the cotton bagging to the cotton grower. I have a letter here from a concern known as Peacock's Warehouse, in the town of Pavo, in my State, men who are entirely reputable and whose statements can be relied upon with perfect confidence, in which it is stated that now, as the cotton crop is about to be marketed, they are charged by the manufacturers 20 per cent higher for bagging than they have ever been charged before and 15 per cent higher for ties than they have ever been charged before.

The principal interest which these factors or cotton warehousemen have in this question of increased price is that they may not be misunderstood by their customers. They do not desire that it shall be thought by the grower of cotton that they are the parties who are imposing this additional burden upon them, and consequently these communications to us inquiring as to the cause of this enormous increase in the cost of these articles.

Now, Mr. President, I do not propose to be now misled into an argument on this subject of the tariff. I do not think that this particular situation is one where a discussion of the tariff is going to lead to any particular information on this subject or give any relief. I suppose, Mr. President, from what I have heard, though I am not informed fully, that the increase in price is due to the fact that a trust has gotten possession of this business and is controlling it and can put the price arbitrarily wherever it pleases. I presume that is the fact.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is speaking of the foreign trust? Of the foreign trust, that is true.

Mr. BACON. I do not know about there being a foreign trust. Those whom we deal with in this country are certainly those who are the immediate parties putting this into force and operation. Whether they have any relations with parties in a foreign country or not I do not know; but if my information is correct there are parties in this country who absolutely control the question of the production of bagging. The jute is imported into this country and the bagging is manufactured in this country. If my information is correct, the entire business of the manufacture of bagging has been absorbed by parties who have gone into a combination for this purpose. Of course there is no way by which we can say that they shall sell for less, but if there is anything in law, Mr. President, in this country there is a way by which those who seek thus to oppress the people shall be brought to judgment and punishment.

While this resolution has in contemplation the Department of Commerce, the department which I think should direct its activities particularly in this direction is the Department of Justice. If it be true, as I have no doubt from the letters which I have and which have been sent to the Senator from South Carolina and others, that there is a combination in this country of those who are manufacturing bagging, a combination by which they have absorbed to themselves all the manufacture of this product, and that they are arbitrarily levying a tax of from $1,000,000 to $1,800,000 in excess of legitimate profits upon the producers of cotton in this country as a result of this combination, then if the Department of Justice can not bring them to judgment it is of little use that we should have such a law upon the statute book.

I have heard, Mr. President, the expression of the desire that the antitrust law should be one that should "have teeth in it." That is a somewhat coarse expression, but it is one frequently used. If the statements now made are true, that this combination of bagging manufacturers have deliberately, without any justification and solely in the lust of extortion, deliberately set themselves to work through the power of their monopoly to levy a tax between $1,000,000 and $1,800,000 upon the cotton growers of this country, then, Mr. President, if the Sherman antitrust law is one which has any efficacy it is a time when not simply the penalties of fine should be imposed, but when the prison doors should be closed upon these men.

Mr. President, it is difficult to conceive of a thing more iniquitous than this. The most laborious, never-ceasing, hard-working people in this country are the agricultural classes, and chief among them are those who raise cotton. It takes 12 long months in the year, and there is in general very little direct profit in it to the men who grow it except when occasionally conditions are such that the price goes above the normal standard. When men have been engaged in this important industry, devoting to it during all the year all their time and their energies, and just at a time when there is a possibility of their reaping some small profit as the fruit of their labors to have a lot of men sit in an office and by this monopolistic combination in violation of law exact from these men nearly $2,000,000, certainly presents an occasion when the powers of the Department of Justice should be brought into play and practically demonstrated.

I think, Mr. President, that here is the place for the activities of the Department of Justice to manifest themselves. I trust that the resolution, whether it will accomplish anything or not through the Department of Commerce, will have the effect of calling the attention of the Department of Justice to a situation which requires immediate attention. I trust that it may result in securing such a judgment against them as will be a warning in the future to those who will flagrantly defy and violate the law of this country which prohibits such combinations and such extortionate exactions from the people of the land through combinations and monopolies.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to the passage of the resolution. I think that it is very proper indeed that the investigation should be made. I will watch with particular interest the report when made, because we shall have some reason given other than that the tariff has raised the price.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] says that these goods are made entirely in this country. There were 13,365,349 square yards of them imported in 1912.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Utah again state how many yards were imported?

Mr. SMOOT. There were imported 13,365,349 square yards.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is the total amount of consumption stated?

Mr. SMOOT. The total amount of production is stated in dollars and cents.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the tables do not give the number of yards consumed?

Mr. SMOOT. No; but the total amount of production is $3,507,000. To show the Senator the values they place upon these goods, I will say that I find that the unit of value of bagging is 4.7 cents per square yard.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I merely rose to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is used in this country for the covering of cotton alone something like 120,000,000 square yards.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was giving these figures——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, when merely 10 per cent is imported, it is not unreasonable, speaking generally, to say that the article is manufactured in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the figures of the department are right, the production in this country is $3,507,000, then, of course, there is not 120,000,000 square yards used, because it could not possibly be, considering the production at the price at which it is sold. But be that as it may, I simply want to say that it strikes me very forcibly, if Senators of the South expect to get any advantages at all from free bagging, that they will have to vote against House subsection 2, paragraph 1, which provides:

> I. That no goods, wares, articles, and merchandise—except immediate products of agriculture, forests, and fisheries—manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor, or principally by children under 14 years of age in countries where there are no laws regulating child labor, shall be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited.

Mr. President, these very goods, and particularly bags, sacks, and all fabrics that come in for the manufacture of bags and sacks, for grain bags, and so forth, used by the farmers all over the country, are made in Calcutta. I have in my office photographs showing children from 9 years up who are laboring in those mills. The only clothing the men, women, and children wear is the breech clout. The wages are from 8 to 10 cents a day, and their bodies show that they are almost starved to death. Pass this provision, and I want to say to every farmer in this country and to every cotton grower of the South, if the American manufacturer is destroyed that you will thereby prevent the importation of these goods that are needed by all farmers and all cotton growers in this country from Calcutta.

I simply call that now to the attention of the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah seems to have some doubt upon the estimate of the number of yards of bagging used in this country in the baling of cotton. It takes about seven yards to cover a bale of cotton. If the Senator will multiply 15 by that number, he will get a pretty accurate estimate of the amount of bagging used in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, what I am quoting from are the figures of the department.

Mr. BACON. The department may be wrong, but the estimate that I suggest is one that no one will dispute. We know how many bales of cotton have been made in the country; we know how many yards it takes to cover a bale of cotton; and we know how much 7 times 15 would be.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me ask the Senator, then, if there is not a great quantity of second-hand bagging used in the baling of cotton?

Mr. BACON. I am not myself engaged in the production of cotton. I am simply an observer. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is doubtless familiar with the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina if that is not a fact?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is a great deal of piece bagging, but that piece bagging is as nothing in proportion to the other. I will state to the Senator that, even the sale of that piece bagging is, through some manipulation of the market with which I am not familiar, controlled entirely by the same persons who sell the whole bagging. Just how they have obtained control I am unable to say, but I hope that the investigation will reveal that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no sympathy with the control, Mr. President, at all. I only suggested this to account for the difference between the report made by the department and the amount used as stated by the Senator from South Carolina. I think that that fully explains the matter, because I do know that there is a great deal of secondhand bagging used for the covering of cotton.

Mr. BACON. I do not want to delay this matter. I simply wish to say that I am not going to go into the subject of the tariff discussion now. I have no doubt that will be very fully discussed by those more competent than myself. Really, the principal object I have in saying anything at all is to try to incite the Department of Justice to action in reference to this matter and to get at it pretty quickly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. If it be true that this bagging is made in Calcutta under conditions such as the Senator has detailed, how does it happen that we have not much larger importations of it?

Mr. SMOOT. On account of the six-tenths of 1 cent per square yard under the present law; but this bill proposes——

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand; but can our manufacturers compete with this condition in Calcutta and be protected by the small duty now imposed on that foreign product?

Mr. SMOOT. That is a pretty fair duty on the square yard: in fact, I think the duty amounts to nearly 10 per cent on this very coarse article; but so far, in the past, it has allowed our manufacturers in this country to manufacture a great part of the cotton bagging that is used here.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I understand this resolution merely directs the Secretary of Commerce to make an inquiry and to report.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all.

Mr. STONE. If that is the full scope of the resolution, I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FOREIGN TARIFF SYSTEMS AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a report prepared by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the other House, entitled "Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions." This document was the subject of some pretty severe strictures at the hands of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] on June 21. Without referring in detail to the bill and to the speech that was at that time made, it was in substance charged that this report was prepared in support of the hobby of the Secretary of Commerce and that figures were manipulated to support certain conclusions. At the end of the speech these words were used:

> Whenever statistics are gathered from the realm of speculation, and with no other object in view than to demonstrate some pet idea, the information sought to be conveyed by them necessarily becomes misleading, and such a practice should be condemned, no matter by whom indulged in.

The subject is discussed under such subheads as "Bolstering up the Secretary's hobby," "Manipulating the figures," and so forth. If these statements were to go unchallenged, it would be doing a great injustice to the Secretary of Commerce, as well as to the bureau chief and his aids who prepared this document. The fact is that this document had its origin in a communication which was addressed by the honorable chairman of the Way and Means Committee of the other House to the then Secretary of Commerce, the Hon. Charles Nagel, under date of November 29, 1912, to which a certain reply was made, a portion of which is contained in the document referred to.

Later the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, on January 1, 1913, addressed another letter to Mr. A. H. Baldwin, the chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The work was immediately taken up by that bureau. It progressed very rapidly. It was completed, I believe, about April 5. The entire work of this report was made by a Republican bureau under the direction of a Republican Secretary of Commerce. That bureau has not been changed in any particular since the Democratic administration was installed on March 4, 1913. The collation of figures and the deductions therefrom are all the work of that bureau. It has not been since reorganized.

In the interest of truth and that the facts may exactly appear in the RECORD, so that they may be in the possession of Senators, I desire to send to the desk a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of Commerce, under date of July 2, 1913, with the request that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 2, 1913.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I note that Hon. REED SMOOT, Senator from Utah, made an address before the Senate on the 21st of June, which is printed on pages 2123–2127, inclusive, of the RECORD of that date, respecting the pamphlet entitled "Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions," to which reference is made somewhat in detail in the Senator's address. In particular this language was used by Senator SMOOT:

"* * * but some one in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce evidently thought it was wise to try and bolster up the Secretary's theories."

Perhaps I ought to add the following clause from the first sentence of the Senator's address:

"The work of any Government bureau should be free from anything akin to partisan bias."

I venture respectfully to suggest that the statements made in what is alleged to be serious debate by the distinguished Senator from Utah should have the merit of accuracy.

The pamphlet from which the Senator quotes was not published by or for this department or any bureau of it. It was prepared entirely by appointees of the past administration, and the whole matter was originated and developed almost to its final stages before the present administration entered office.

The department gave to the press on May 13, 1913, a brief summary prepared by the authors of the pamphlet and has utilized a portion of 150 copies kindly given it by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, for whom the document was prepared and by whose order it was printed and published.

The matter had its origin in a letter from Hon. O. W. UNDERWOOD, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, to Hon. Charles Nagel, dated November 29, 1912, pursuant to which there was furnished on February 19, 1913, to Mr. UNDERWOOD by Hon. B. S. Cable, Acting Secretary, certain data which now forms that portion of the pamphlet covered by pages 10 to 12, inclusive. Meanwhile, on January 1, 1913, Mr. UNDERWOOD, by letter direct to Mr. A. H. Baldwin, then and now Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, requested further information, the preparation of which was at once undertaken and, as the records of the department show, was well under way during the month of January. It reached its final form on April 5, and was then presented by me in the form of a report to Mr. UNDERWOOD with letter stating that it was "in compliance with your request of January 1, 1913."

Certain abstracts of foreign books and articles were on April 12 transmitted to Mr. UNDERWOOD, which form a portion of the publication made by the Ways and Means Committee.

On April 17 this department was advised by Mr. UNDERWOOD "that the material will be published in pamphlet form by the Ways and Means Committee."

The substance of the Senator's address has been examined by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, who advise as follows:

"Senator SMOOT states that the report 'contains statements that are not founded on fact and which should never have appeared in the report of any bureau.' His chief criticism of the report is twofold. He claims (1) that the statistical treatment on pages 29–42 is faulty, but fails to indicate in what respects the minor differences in census methods vitiate the results, and (2) that the smaller outlay for labor in comparison with the value added by manufacture in the United States, as compared with the United Kingdom, is 'ridiculous,' apparently on the assumption that the statistics show lower labor cost in comparison with quantity of output, while the comparison is really based on value, and three times at least in the report (pp. 34, 38, and 41) the effect of the difference in price level is emphasized.

"The most striking feature of Senator SMOOT'S speech is the fact that practically all the arguments against the use of the figures on which the bureau's report is based are quotations of some of the qualifying statements contained in the report itself. In the report the attempt was made to present, as fully as the facilities of the bureau permitted, the data deemed pertinent to the inquiries of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and all differences in statistical method were carefully explained. In the use of the statistics allowance should be made for such differences in method, but no reasons have been adduced by Senator SMOOT to show that these differences are sufficient to affect materially the comparisons made in the report.

"Special reference should be made to the following points in the speech of Senator SMOOT:

"1. That the report has a political bias.

"2. That the comparison of average ad valorem duties is unfair, because of differences in method of valuation and because of the absence of averages 'for France and some other countries' based on dutiable imports alone.

"3. That the inclusion in the British census of production of certain industries excluded by the census of the United States renders the results of the two censuses incomparable.

"4. That the omission from the British returns of the number of establishments and the amount of capital prevents comparison with the United States census.

"5. That differences exist between the census methods of the two countries in respect to engine capacity.

"6. That the data used for the wages paid in the United Kingdom 'are absolutely fraudulent.'

"A separate reply to each of these points of criticism is given below:

"1. The claim that the report shows a partisan bias on the part of the bureau is unfounded. The report was not prepared by the bureau on its own initiative. The subject matter was practically determined by the questions submitted for consideration, and the statistics presented were selected, without preconceived theory, as the most authoritative and the most comparable that were available within the field prescribed. The conclusions stated were merely the expression in text of the averages shown in the tables, and inferences that it was deemed were open to question were carefully avoided.

"2. France is the only country for which the dutiable imports were not given separately for at least one year, and the reason for the absence of such figures is indicated on page 10 of the report. It is hardly fair to suggest that separate figures for dutiable imports were omitted in the case of foreign countries for the purpose of emphasizing the high ad valorem rates in the United States, in view of the fact that no comparison is made in the report between the United States rates and those of foreign countries, and that in the United States statistics the average ad valorem duty is shown on the basis of both total imports and dutiable imports, so that a comparison with the rates for foreign countries may be made on either basis. In regard to the method of converting the specific rates of the French tariff into ad valorem rates by the use of the official figures for the value of imports it may be said that, while no high degree of accuracy can be claimed for the French figures, they could hardly be characterized as 'rankest kind of guesswork.' It may also be added that similar methods for ascertaining the value of the foreign trade are employed by a number of European countries, including Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy. A full discussion of the statistical methods of different countries, prepared by this bureau, is given in House Report No. 5, Sixty-third Congress, first session, pages 499 to 506, to which pages reference is made on page 10 of the report on 'Foreign tariff systems and industrial conditions.'

"3. The data for certain industries included in the census of the United Kingdom and not in the census of the United States have been deducted from the British returns and a separate column shown under the heading 'Manufactures proper,' which is fairly comparable with the returns of the United States. Most of the comparisons in respect to industrial efficiency of the two countries are, however, based on returns for separate industries which are obviously not affected by the total number of industries that are included in the British census.

"4. Similarly the absence from the British report of returns for the number of establishments and for the capital employed does not affect in any way the comparisons made, which have to do exclusively with

(a) Value added by manufacture; (b) capacity of engines; (c) number of wage earners; (d) amount of wages.

"5. As will be seen from the statement on page 31 of the report, there is no variation in the methods of compiling the figures for engine capacity in the United Kingdom and the United States, except in regard to the motors using purchased current. The amount of current used for other purposes than power is estimated at not more than one-fourth of the purchased current, and while it is not shown separately in the original returns and can not therefore be deducted, the amount is not sufficient to affect materially the comparison.

"6. The figures used in the report of the bureau for purposes of comparison with census returns were taken from the British Board of Trade report on earnings and hours of labor in 1906, as stated on page 58 of the report, and not, as inferred by Senator SMOOT, from the report of the board of trade on wages and cost of living. The British investigation of the subject of earnings and hours of labor was not so comprehensive as the United States census of manufactures, but the proportion of wage earners employed in the different industries covered by the British investigation is sufficient to indicate accurately the general level of wages in those industries. Senator SMOOT refers in particular to the comparative outlay for wages in the glove industry of the United States and the United Kingdom, apparently on the assumption that the outlay is larger in the United Kingdom. The figures which he quotes from the report show the contrary, and the importation of gloves into this country from the United Kingdom would therefore seem quite natural. The low wage cost for Canada, which Senator SMOOT declares 'unbelievable,' may be due, as suggested on page 38, to the fact that some of the Canadian industries are confined to finishing or assembling operations.

"In view of the amount of space devoted by Senator SMOOT to the question of low wages in the United Kingdom as compared with wages in the United States, there is reason to believe that there is a tendency on his part to confuse the rate of wages and the amount of wages paid. It was not the intention of the bureau to convey the impression that the industrial efficiency of the United States was due to cheaper labor; the figures given in the report show, on the contrary, that in spite of the higher rate of wages paid in the United States the outlay for wages in proportion to the value of the net output is less than in the United Kingdom, owing to the more economical employment of labor at high wages in combination with highly developed machinery. A striking illustration of that form of industrial efficiency is presented by the automobile industry, in which the supremacy of the United States, in regard to low and medium priced cars produced in large quantities by automatic machinery, is admitted generally and attested by the rapidly growing export trade."

The distinguished Senator from Utah, if he is to establish his contentions, must explain away our sales of manufactured goods of all kinds abroad in competition with the world to the extent during the fiscal year just closed of about $1,500,000,000. In particular he should show why the chief increase in our export trade is in the sales of fully finished manufactures, in which lines the increased sales for the first 11 months of the last fiscal year were $96,000,000.

I await with interest the Senator's explanation as to why, when we can not, as he is understood to believe, compete with the world we are as a matter of fact doing so increasingly. How is it that we sell if we are unable to sell, and if we are able to sell how is it that we need to be guarded against our customers?

Finally, let me add that the personnel and organization of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce remains to-day just as it was taken over from the preceding administration. In neither respect is it deemed fully satisfactory. Therefore the problem of reorganizing this important bureau so that it may more efficiently gather and publish commercial statistics and better promote the foreign and domestic commerce of the Nation has long been the subject of study. A tentative plan for the reorganization of the bureau has been prepared which it is intended soon to present to the President for his approval, and which will in due course be laid before Congress.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, of course it was not so intended, but the report itself points out the particulars—I am speaking generally now—wherein the tables are not mathematically correct. We all understand that when it comes to the collection of data to prove a given state of facts, a given condition, there may be modifications due to different conditions existing in different countries, and these facts are specifically pointed out in the report itself. I think that it was entirely unfair, though no doubt it was not so intended, that the criticism was made that this report was dictated by party bias.

In discussing the question of the efficiency of labor in the several countries, the Senator from Utah, in attempting to refute the position taken by the Secretary of Commerce, makes the statement that—

> The imports alone would demonstrate the falsity of the assertion that labor is more efficient here than abroad.

Assuming, for the sake of the argument, that that statement is true, by the inexorable force of his own logic, then, when the fact appears, as it does appear, that during the last year we exported to foreign countries $1,500,000,000 worth of goods, a large part of which were manufactured products, that must prove the superior efficiency of American labor over that which exists in any other country.

I do not care to take the time to now discuss this report further, but I thought that it was due to Senators that this letter should be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. It is rather a remarkable circumstance, Mr. President, that the Secretary of Commerce should write a letter to a Senator of the United States, being a defense of a report prepared by his department, and have it delivered immediately upon his answer to a resolution of the Senate of June 26, 1913, asking for certain information. I am glad the Senator has had that——

Mr. POMERENE. I did not hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I said it was a rather remarkable circumstance that the Secretary of Commerce should address a letter to a Senator of the United States upon the subject covered by the letter, and that it should be delivered at the same time he responds to a resolution of the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator the date of the resolution to which he refers?

Mr. SMOOT. The date of the resolution is June 26, 1913, and the communication of the Secretary of Commerce transmitted in response to that resolution only reached the Senate an hour or so ago.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not making any particular objection to that, but I prefer now to answer——

Mr. POMERENE. No; Mr. President, I insist upon the right to answer the insinuation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I have made no insinuation at all. I am simply stating the facts. I have the report here in my hand.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the fact is that that communication has been in my possession for nearly 10 days. I have had it here on several occasions with the intention of presenting it. The opportunity, in my judgment, did not present itself until to-day. If any fault lies in the fact that it was not presented, it is mine, and not that of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no criticism to offer on that point, either as to the Senator or as to the Secretary of Commerce. I thought, though, that it was rather a peculiar circumstance that it should be presented to the Senate at exactly the same time that the Senate received the communication from the Secretary of Commerce transmitting a response to the Senate resolution of June 26.

Mr. POMERENE. I am afraid the difficulty arises from the fact that my very distinguished friend from Utah is always suspicious of everything that does not accord with his own pet theory.

Mr. SMOOT. That remark, Mr. President, is uncalled for and unjust, and does not do credit to the Senator from Ohio.

There is sent to the Senate to-day a response to the Senate resolution of June 26, 1913, offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I want to call the Senate's attention to this report, to the admission that is made in this communication, and let them judge whether I was not justified in calling the country's attention to a document that has been issued by one of the departments of the Government upon request of the Ways and Means Committee. I felt when I read that report that it was time to call a halt upon issuing reports based upon the sort of information that this report contains.

The Secretary of Commerce says:

> The resolution speaks of "The Report of the Department of Commerce entitled 'Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions.'" The Department of Commerce took no initiative with respect to this report.

Of course it did not. Upon the very title-page it says that it was issued at the request of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and I so stated in my remarks.

The Secretary continues:

> The publication bearing this title is a committee document published by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, containing a report prepared at the request of that committee by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, as the title of the pamphlet shows. The Committee on Ways and Means kindly gave to the Department of Commerce 150 copies of the pamphlet. A brief summary, a single page prepared by the authors of the report, was given to the press by the department on May 13, 1913. No edition of the pamphlet was issued by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. President, after that pamphlet was issued, and after it was in the hands of the Ways and Means Committee, and after it no doubt had been examined by the members of the Department of Commerce, did a single person from that department call attention to the now admitted fact that the figures in the report were incorrect? Did anyone in Congress undertake to correct them? Did anyone even intimate that they were not to be put out to the public as absolute facts?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the report itself point out the particulars in which these tables are not complete?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to wait until I get through, and then I will answer him by this communication. I am not complaining of any figures that are in the report that are not incorrect, but I want to show the Senator that the Secretary of Commerce says some of them are not correct. I am calling his attention to the fact that their incorrectness was never called to the attention of Congress nor did Congress or anybody else ask for a reprint whereby the errors could be corrected.

I read from the Secretary's letter:

The resolution mentions "the statements that it takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value to cotton goods as 114 horsepower does in the United Kingdom."

This is the wording of the resolution, about which I had nothing whatever to say and with the preparation of which I had nothing to do.

I continue reading:

If reference is made to page 39 of the pamphlet, this language does not quite accurately represent what there appears. It is stated in the table on page 39 that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and that there are 114 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture. It is respectfully pointed out that the statement of the resolution that it "takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value" as 114 horsepower in the United Kingdom is another and very different thing from the statement that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for the same value of output for which there are 114 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom. It is one thing to have the horsepower capacity exist, it is another and different thing to state that its full use is required for a certain result.

What are the facts? Let us take them from what the Secretary says:

The corrected statement should therefore be that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture as compared with 571 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and that there are 147 wage earners in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture as compared with 255 wage earners in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture.

If a corrected statement had been made, I never should have addressed the Senate; but after May 23, when the report was issued, it was circulated through the country, and nobody asked for a correction of the figures. As the statement says, instead of 114 horsepower, the corrected statement ought to be 571 horsepower; and instead of 47 wage earners in the United States it ought to be 147.

Why should the Secretary of Commerce object to a Senator of the United States making a correction of a matter which, as I stated, was absurd on its face? It is, and I have nothing to withdraw.

Again quoting:

In view of the corrections thus brought to the attention of the department, a rigorous reexamination of all the statistics contained in the report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to the Committee on Ways and Means was ordered. Several other purely clerical errors have been discovered, the more significant ones being as follows:

Should not they have been corrected?

(1) Tin plate, capacity of engines in the United Kingdom 707 horsepower (instead of 105 horsepower) for every $100,000 added by manufacture: (2) butter, cheese, condensed milk, and oleomargarine, 112 (instead of 49) wage earners in Canada for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and $321 (instead of $141) as wages in Canada for every $1,000 added by manufacture.

Mr. President, has it come to this, that when a Senator knows figures are not correct he can not call attention to the fact?

I want to say to the Senate now that I do not remember the issuance of a document similar to this since I have been a Member of this body. Documents are generally issued by the departments of the Government or by the House or Senate. This report was requested by the Ways and Means Committee from the Secretary of Commerce, and was issued by that committee. No number was given to it. It was not made a public document. It was simply printed by the Ways and Means Committee and sent broadcast through the country. I have no doubt in my mind but that it was sent for the purpose I said it was—to bolster up the rates made in the tariff bill by the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

So that all of this information may be at hand and in the RECORD at once, I now ask that the communication from the Secretary of Commerce transmitting his response to the Senate resolution of June 26, 1913, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. LIPPITT addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I will be through in just a minute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to be acquainted with the character of that document.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], on June 26, offered a resolution in the Senate calling for certain information from the Secretary of Commerce. This is a communication from the Secretary of Commerce in answer to that resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the subject of it?

Mr. SMOOT. The subject was a document issued by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, prepared by the Department of Commerce at the request of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the nature of the reply?

Mr. SMOOT. I have just been reading from the reply, and a great deal of it is in the RECORD in my remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I happened not to be in the Chamber at the time. What is the substance of it?

Mr. SMOOT. It is in answer to a resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], in which certain information was requested as to statistics that were printed in this particular document.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely thought the matter might lead to some debate this afternoon. If so, it would be better for us to hear just what the reply was rather than to print it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I quoted a great deal of it. If there is any objection, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I have no objection to its being printed. I merely suggested that perhaps it would be better to have it read, so that we could all understand it, before it is printed.

Mr. SMOOT. We have been discussing it now for nearly three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know; but the Senator has been discussing it without reading it. I should like to have it read.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw the request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to have it read so that it will go out as a part of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me for just a minute, I think perhaps I can clear up the situation somewhat. The paper from which the Senator from Utah has just been reading is in reply to a resolution——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the Senator from Rhode Island does not understand me. I was not asking for an explanation. I thought this document ought to be read to the Senate as a part of the remarks of the Senator from Utah, so that it might go to the country and might go to Senators' minds at the same time with the criticism of it by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that it has already been arranged that this document, the reply of the Secretary, shall be printed in to-day's RECORD; so that all of this matter will appear where it can be plainly seen and criticized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, but it is not present in our minds with the criticism of it which the Senator from Utah is making.

Mr. SMOOT. I made no criticism of the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I heard some very violent criticisms of the statisticians, and a suggestion that they had made their figures purely to please the Ways and Means Committee, and various other things. My mind recurred to one Austin, a statistician, and how for years and years his figures simply pleased the Republicans, and I thought perhaps there might be some merit in this document.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I have offered no criticism of the Secretary's report. I was quoting from the Secretary's report to sustain the statement I made in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Secretary's report sustain or renege upon the other document that the Senator from Utah was criticizing?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will allow the report to go into the RECORD, it will be seen that it admits that many of the figures in the report are wrong.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did we ever have an investigation of Austin's statistical reports during the Senator's term of service?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether Mr. Austin prepared these figures or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say he made them. I do not think he did.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the Secretary of Commerce says some of the figures are wrong, and anybody that knew anything about this country and England, or had studied the question at all, knew they were wrong. My criticism is not a criticism of his report. It is a criticism of the pamphlet that was issued by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am somewhat accustomed to the quiet assumption of my friend, the Senator from Utah, that people who hold different views from his do not know anything about the subject under discussion, or much of anything else; but it has become such a habit of thought with him that I am not always inclined to believe that it is a conclusive thing. I shall not insist upon his reading the report now and shall make no objection to its going into the RECORD. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that the mental attitude of Senators might be different if they had heard the report together with the criticism.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I withdrew the request; so I shall not ask that the letter be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi does not seem to object to it. Some of the rest of us would like to see the letter or report.

Mr. SHIVELY. And the Senator from Utah ought to remember that thus far there has been no objection to his request.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask that the communication be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As part of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. I understand that it will appear as part of the Senator's remarks?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in connection with the remarks I have been making.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 134, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

COTTON STATISTICS.

Letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a response to a Senate resolution of June 26, 1913.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 11, 1913.

SIR: By direction of the President, I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of the following resolution of the Senate, under date of June 26, 1913:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 26, 1913.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be directed to furnish, for the use of the Senate, detailed information—

First. To show how the figures referring to cotton goods in the table on page 39 of the report of the Department of Commerce entitled "Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions" were obtained; and Second. To establish, if possible, the correctness of the statements that it takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value to cotton goods as 114 horsepower does in the United Kingdom, and that 47 wage earners in the United States add as much to the value of cotton goods as 255 do in the United Kingdom.

Attest:

JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary.

The resolution was referred to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and to the Division of Foreign Tariffs therein, in which division the data to which the resolution refers were prepared and their reply follows.

Before quoting it, however, permit me, in justice to my predecessors, by whom this work was authorized and by whose appointees the figures were gathered and the report prepared from beginning to end, to suggest what seems to be misapprehensions in the resolution itself adopted by the Senate. It may be stated also that the work was well advanced before the department came under my charge.

The resolution speaks of "the report of the Department of Commerce entitled 'Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions.'" The Department of Commerce took no initiative with respect to this report. The publication bearing this title is a committee document published by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, containing a report prepared at the request of that committee by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, as the title of the pamphlet shows. The Committee on Ways and Means kindly gave to the Department of Commerce 150 copies of the pamphlet; a brief summary, a single page prepared by the authors of the report, was given to the press by the department on May 13, 1913. No edition of the pamphlet was issued by the Department of Commerce.

The resolution mentions "the statements that it takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value to cotton goods as 114 horsepower does in the United Kingdom." If reference is made to page 39 of the pamphlet this language does not quite accurately represent what there appears. It is stated in the table on page 39 that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and that there are 114 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture. It is respectfully pointed out that the statement of the resolution that it "takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value" as 114 horsepower in the United Kingdom is another and very different thing from the statement that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for the same value of output for which there are 114 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom. It is one thing to have the horsepower capacity exist; it is another and different thing to state that its full use is required for a certain result.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Division of Foreign Tariffs, advises:

"First. The figures shown in the table on page 39 of the report, with the exception of the last column, are averages based on the statistics presented in the table on pages 36–37. The method adopted for calculating the amount of wages in the United Kingdom, shown in the last column, is fully explained in the third paragraph on page 38.

"Second. The averages for the engine capacity in the United Kingdom and the number of wage earners in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture in the case of cotton goods are incorrect. For the former the correct amount, derived from the returns on page 36, is 571 horsepower and for the latter 147 wage earners."

The corrected statement should therefore be that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture as compared with 571 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and that there are 147 wage earners in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture, as compared with 255 wage earners in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture. Justice to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce requires me to point out that the printing of the figure 47, clearly a typographical or clerical error, may perhaps be accounted for by the repetition of the figure 47 in the second line above of the same column of the same table.

In view of the corrections thus brought to the attention of the department a rigorous reexamination of all the statistics contained in the report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to the Committee on Ways and Means was ordered. Several other purely clerical errors have been discovered, the more significant ones being as follows: (1) Tin plate, capacity of engines in the United Kingdom 707 horsepower (instead of 105 horsepower) for every $100,000 added by manufacture; (2) butter, cheese, condensed milk, and oleomargarine, 112 (instead of 49) wage earners in Canada for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and $321 (instead of $141) as wages in Canada for every $1,000 added by manufacture. Neither has adverse bearing on the question of relative industrial efficiency in the United States.

As soon as the work of review is completed, such errata as exist will be communicated to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, by whose direction the report was printed. The general comparisons shown on pages 41 and 42, under the heading of "Relative industrial efficiency," are not appreciably affected by any of the changes. Neither are the comparisons by industries, on page 39, modified to the disadvantage of the United States in respect to industrial efficiency, save in the change in the relation of wage earners in the cotton industry from 47 to 255 in favor of the United States to 147 to 255, also in favor of the United States.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Ohio criticizes, indirectly at least, the statement I made in relation to the efficiency of American labor, and points out the great exportations of American goods as proof that my statement was incorrect.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a minute; then I will be through. If the Senator will read my remarks, he will find that I state that there are certain lines of manufacture where the machinery and the process of handling in great quantities are such that they do produce goods in this country which are exported; and it is true that it is the efficiency of labor, if that can be called "efficiency of labor," that allows the exportation of these goods, namely, the heavy steel products—not the light ones.

Mr. POMERENE. Did the Senator refer to that in his last speech?

Mr. SMOOT. I think if I had a copy of it here I could show the Senator where I referred to certain lines of goods that are manufactured here in great quantities by the use of machinery that is far advanced over some of that used in foreign countries.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have a very distinct recollection that the Senator, with his usual zeal to sustain himself, sought to point out the very great difference between the wages of bricklayers in this country and bricklayers in other countries, and between the wages of carpenters in this country and carpenters in other countries.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator deny those figures?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; but it would have been very much more instructive to the country at large if the Senator had pointed to the low wages that are paid in some of the very highly protected industries of the country, instead of referring to the wages which are paid in the unprotected industries of the country, such as those to which I have referred, and which the Senator knows are not even indirectly affected by the tariff.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not know any such thing. The Senator knows that the bricklayer in this country is protected above all other workers. His work in a foreign country can not be imported into this country. Of course he is directly benefited by the American tariff.

Mr. POMERENE. Is there anything on the statute books preventing a bricklayer from coming into this country?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; there is not.

Mr. POMERENE. Or preventing a carpenter from coming into this country?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not the point. The point is that when he comes into this country he receives a greater wage. The Senator is speaking of the low wage paid in many of the industries in this country. I defy the Senator to name a single, solitary industry in the United States that is not paid higher wages than are paid in any other country in the world.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, we have heard that argument time out of mind.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not make it as an argument now. I ask the Senator to point out one such instance.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will be a little patient, I will point out the truth about it. Our protectionist friends, time out of mind, have been accustomed to point to the daily wages that exist in this country and compare them wit the daily wages that exist in other countries; but they have always, or nearly always, failed to point to the wage cost per unit of production. That is the difference between the Senator and the Secretary of Commerce. The truth is that in very many of the industries of this country the wage cost per unit of production is much less than it is in Europe. For that reason many of the manufactured products of this country are sold abroad in competition with the pauper-paid labor of Europe. That is the fact which our friend the Senator from Utah is constantly trying to ignore.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator to name one industry in this country——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment. The distinguished Senator from Utah, since this debate began, referred to the fact that in Great Britain and Germany the cost of production is higher than it is in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator refers to.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will recall what he has stated, he will remember it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator said that in the manufacture of the heavier products of iron and steel in this country we could beat the foreign countries. That is the fact.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I did not say any such thing.

Mr. POMERENE. It is extremely fortunate that we have a reporter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am willing to let the notes speak for themselves. I simply said that it was the heavier products of the steel manufacturer of this country that were shipped abroad. That is what I said. I did not say anything in relation to the cost per unit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah pardon me just one more interruption. Then I think I shall try to let him finish his speech without further interruption.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has just apparently squelched the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] by asking him to name a single industry in the United States which pays lower wages at this time than the same industry in some other country. The sophism underlying it all is that he throws himself upon an undisputed and indisputable fact, and then assumes that the reason of it is that the particular industry has been protected. The trouble with his assumption is one which I will point out.

I shall now ask the Senator a question, and shall yield to him to answer it. My question will have reference to a time when we were Colonies, when we had no protective system, and when we were subject to industrial tyranny on the part of the mother country, at a time when, as the great Pitt said, "an American could not make a horseshoe."

I want to ask the Senator, and I want to give him six weeks in which to answer it, because I do not want to take any advantage of him right now, and I will give him a cheap two-dollar-and-a-half chromo if he can answer it in the affirmative, whether he knows during colonial times, when we were 13 Colonies of Great Britain, a single industry in the United States in which the laborers were on the average and as a rule not paid a higher wage than they were paid in Great Britain?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it will not take me six weeks or six minutes to answer that question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I know of a good many such industries; and I want to call attention to a report that was made to the Senate by the committee on the high cost of living. If the Senator will examine that report he will find out whether wages were not less in this country even at that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Prior to the Declaration of Independence?

Mr. SMOOT. Prior to the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Less than they were in Great Britain?

Mr. SMOOT. Less than they were in Great Britain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or any other European country?

Mr. SMOOT. A hod carrier was not receiving the amount here that he was in Great Britain. A bricklayer was not receiving the amount here that he was in Great Britain. I do not know as to the cotton planter, but I doubt it very much.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There were no cotton planters then.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean, the people of the South.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The United States exported, I believe, 20 bales of cotton some years after the War of Independence.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, perhaps, the Senator is old enough to remember the time when the wage of the laboring man in the South was no higher than it was in England.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The wage of the laboring man in the South at that time was the wage of a slave, as a rule; that is, no wage in money measure at all. I am talking about the wages of the laboring man in that part of the United States where wages were paid.

Then the Senator has just made the assertion that he can find somewhere, somehow, the proof of the fact that in Colonial days there were higher wages in Great Britain than in America. I put against it, without knowing what his sources are and what he proposes to rely upon for a basis, my statement that he can not find it and that he can not prove it, and that it never existed as a fact.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Every man who came to America as a traveler, whether from France or from Great Britain, dwelt in his diary and the report of his travels in those days upon one salient fact, the high amount of pay received by common workmen. Every historian of any standing has referred since to the same fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In one moment I shall yield. If any figures have been since originated by somebody or other for the purpose of proving the contrary, they were figures that did not exist at the time the conditions existed. It cost more in those days to hire a servant in an American household than it did in Great Britain. It cost more to hire a hostler. It cost more to hire a bricklayer. It cost more to hire a carpenter. Indeed, it is a well-known fact to everybody from the West that it costs more now in any comparatively unsettled new part of this country to hire a carpenter or bricklayer or house servant or farm laborer than it does in the well-settled parts of the country. Why? Because there is more work to be done and there are less skilled and unskilled laborers of that sort to do the work wanted.

What is the result, then, of the ratiocination along this line, as far as there is any? It is just simply this, that where you have a comparatively new country to compare with a comparatively old country the comparatively new country has more jobs to be done and less laborers to perform them, and the comparatively old country has more laborers to work and less work to be done. The former, therefore, by the law of demand and supply of work, pays higher and the latter lower wages for the work actually done.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he will not yield to me for just two or three minutes. I am anxious to leave the Chamber, and I should like to make a short statement, which I have been trying to make for nearly half an hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that the Senator is peculiarly unfortunate in that. Every now and then we are caught that way. I suppose he has got the habit as a manufacturer of thinking he ought to come in whenever he pleases; but I yield to him, anyhow, now.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will not delay the Senate more than two or three minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, there has been here under discussion the reply to a resolution which I introduced asking for information from the Department of Commerce in regard to the pamphlet upon tariff statistics which the Senator from Utah has discussed. In that pamphlet there were two very remarkable statements made. One was that it took five times as much horsepower to make American cotton goods as it did to make English cotton goods. The other was that it took five times as much labor in England to make American goods as it did in this country. One of those statements——

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator mean, to make American goods in England?

Mr. LIPPITT. One was that it took five times as much horsepower in this country as in England; the other was that it took five times as much labor in England as in America. One of those statements was highly complimentary to the textile industries of this country. One of those statements was highly critical of the textile industries of this country.

From my general knowledge on this subject I could not believe that either of those statements was even remotely true, and if there was any evidence in support of it, I knew my constituents engaged in the industry would want very much to know the reason for it, that they might investigate it.

I therefore introduced a resolution asking the Secretary of Commerce to state whether or not those statements of his were correct: and if so, upon what ground they were founded. He now sends in his reply, and the reply is that whereas there was in his original statement five times as much horsepower used in this country as in England, there is more horsepower used in England than there is in this country; and his reply in regard to the point that it takes five times as much labor in England as it does in this country to make the goods, is that the figure of 47 people, as used in connection with that statement, should have been 147; in other words, that it in reality takes nearly four times as many people to make these goods as he had originally stated.

Now, I am not disposed in any way to criticize the causes which led up to these misstatements. I simply wanted the facts stated as they should be, and not have this information sent broadcast over the country, to be used as it naturally would be.

I therefore merely wish to put on record the same day that the publication from the Secretary will be printed, and I ask that it be printed by itself and not in connection with anybody's remarks, as it has come to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall object to that for I am sure the Senator from Utah desires——

Mr. LIPPITT. Then I ask that it be printed in connection with my remarks, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall object to that. The Senator from Utah brought it up, and the main part of his speech was a criticism of it; and I want it to appear in that connection.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have no objection to its appearing with the remarks of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator wants it to appear additional, in connection with his remarks?

Mr. LIPPITT. Additional.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right; I have no objection to that.

Mr. LIPPITT. Therefore, I simply wanted to go on record with the report as now communicated to the Senate by the Secretary of Commerce, showing that it is entirely the opposite of the figures that appear in the pamphlet which gave rise to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island if he is aware of the fact that it is already ordered to be printed in the RECORD? Is it to appear three times?

Mr. LIPPITT. I suggested that it be so printed, and the Senator from Mississippi objected to its going into the RECORD as an independent document. If it is to go in as an independent document, I do not care to have it printed in connection with my remarks. If it is not to go in as an independent document I want it printed in connection with my remarks so that it may be clearly evident to anybody who peruses the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to printing it with the Senator's remarks.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 134, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

COTTON STATISTICS.

Letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a response to a Senate resolution of June 26, 1913:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 11, 1913.

SIR: By direction of the President, I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of the following resolution of the Senate, under date of June 26, 1913:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 26, 1913.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be directed to furnish, for the use of the Senate, detailed information—

First. To show how the figures referring to cotton goods in the table on page 39 of the report of the Department of Commerce entitled "Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions" were obtained; and Second. To establish, if possible, the correctness of the statements that it takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value to cotton goods as 114 horsepower does in the United Kingdom, and that 47 wage earners in the United States add as much to the value of cotton goods as 255 do in the United Kingdom.

Attest:

JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary.

The resolution was referred to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and to the Division of Foreign Tariffs therein, in which division the data to which the resolution refers were prepared, and their reply follows.

Before quoting it, however, permit me, in justice to my predecessors, by whom this work was authorized and by whose appointees the figures were gathered and the report prepared from beginning to end, to suggest what seems to be misapprehensions in the resolution itself adopted by the Senate. It may be stated also that the work was well advanced before the department came under my charge.

The resolution speaks of "the report of the Department of Commerce entitled 'Foreign Tariff Systems and Industrial Conditions.'" The Department of Commerce took no initiative with respect to this report. The publication bearing this title is a committee document published by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, containing a report prepared at the request of that committee by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, as the title of the pamphlet shows. The Committee on Ways and Means kindly gave to the Department of Commerce 150 copies of the pamphlet; a brief summary, a single page, prepared by the authors of the report, was given to the press by the department on May 13, 1913. No edition of the pamphlet was issued by the Department of Commerce.

The resolution mentions "the statements that it takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value to cotton goods as 114 horsepower does in the United Kingdom." If reference is made to page 39 of the pamphlet, this language does not quite accurately represent what there appears. It is stated in the table on page 39 that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and that there are 114 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture. It is respectfully pointed out that the statement of the resolution that it "takes 504 horsepower in the United States to add the same value" as 114 horsepower in the United Kingdom is another and very different thing from the statement that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for the same value of output for which there are 114 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom. It is one thing to have the horsepower capacity exist; it is another and different thing to state that its full use is required for a certain result.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Division of Foreign Tariffs, advises:

"First. The figures shown in the table on page 39 of the report, with the exception of the last column, are averages based on the statistics presented in the table on pages 36–37. The method adopted for calculating the amount of wages in the United Kingdom, shown in the last column, is fully explained in the third paragraph on page 38.

"Second. The averages for the engine capacity in the United Kingdom and the number of wage earners in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture in the case of cotton goods are incorrect. For the former the correct amount, derived from the returns on page 36, is 571 horsepower and for the latter 147 wage earners."

The corrected statement should therefore be that there are 504 horsepower capacity of engines in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture as compared with 571 horsepower capacity of engines in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and that there are 147 wage earners in the United States for every $100,000 added by manufacture, as compared with 255 wage earners in the United Kingdom for every $100,000 added by manufacture. Justice to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce requires me to point out that the printing of the figure 47, clearly a typographical or clerical error, may perhaps be accounted for by the repetition of the figure 47 in the second line above of the same column of the table.

In view of the corrections thus brought to the attention of the department a rigorous reexamination of all the statistics contained in the report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to the Committee on Ways and Means were ordered. Several other purely clerical errors have been discovered, the more significant one being as follows: (1) Tin plate, capacity of engines in the United Kingdom 707 horsepower (instead of 105 horsepower) for every $100,000 added by manufacture; (2) butter, cheese, condensed milk, and oleomargarine, 112 (instead of 49) wage earners in Canada for every $100,000 added by manufacture, and $321 (instead of $141) as wages in Canada for every $1,000 added by manufacture. Neither has adverse bearing on the question of relative industrial efficiency in the United States.

As soon as the work of review is completed, such errata as exist will be communicated to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, by whose direction the report was printed. The general comparisons shown on pages 41 and 42, under the heading of "Relative industrial efficiency," are not appreciably affected by any of the changes. Neither are the comparisons by industries, on page 39, modified to the disadvantage of the United States in respect to industrial efficiency, save in the change in the relation of wage earners in the cotton industry from 47 to 255 in favor of the United States to 147 to 255, also in favor of the United States.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not think there is anything in the world that poor, erring, fallible humanity has made so many mistakes about as in connection with the fact of mistaking a coincidence for cause and effect. Wages are higher in Australia than they are in Great Britain. Wages were for many years higher in New Zealand than they are in Great Britain. Wages for long years have been higher in Cape Colony than they have been in Great Britain. Yet New Zealand and Australia are protectionist colonies and Cape Colony was a free-trade colony and England is a free-trade country. Wages have been higher in England than they were in Germany, and yet Germany is next to the United States, and Russia, the most barbarous of all nations in connection with the prevalency of protectionism.

Now, then, when a man says that the reason why wages are higher in Great Britain than they are in Russia or Germany or France is because Great Britain is a free-trade country and Russia and Germany and France are protectionist, he simply makes a mistake or else he willfully makes a misstatement. The truth is that they are higher in England because the general standard of living of the English people is higher than of the people upon the Continent.

You frequently hear it said that high wages produce a high standard of living. The truth is that, as a rule, a higher standard of living—the people having once become accustomed to it—demands of necessity and obtains higher wages.

The next truth is that as a general proposition, although not always true, wages are high just in proportion as institutions are democratic. In using that word I do not mean democratic spelled with a big D of course, but with a little d. In other words, just in proportion as the will of the people is asserted in government itself, it is also proportionately asserted in industrial life, and as a majority of the people are laborers, their will is asserted and they always will strike for higher wages. Just in proportion as the people are suppressed the laboring man is suppressed, and his wage suppressed with him. Just in proportion as institutions are popular the laboring man has labor rights which he may assert by strike or otherwise, and in proportion as he may assert them he obtains a higher wage, and in proportion as he can not or dare not assert his rights by strike or by ballot or otherwise, he receives lower wages.

Then, in addition and in the next place, wages, as a rule, are in inverse proportion to the price of fertile lands. Agriculture is the basic, natural business of man. A man is not going to work for a low wage if he can go out and buy cheap land or rent land cheaply. You can not press him in a factory if he can do that. Consequently, as a rule, in countries with cheap fertile lands, wages in factories are high, because a man demands it and can get it. He must have it or he will not work in the factory. That is the next principle.

The next principle is this, and I have stated this once before: Wherever there are two jobs hunting one man there are high wages. Whenever there are two men hunting one job there are low wages. In a new country which is industrially not developed but developing there are generally two jobs, or more than one, at any rate, hunting one laborer; and in an old developed country, depressed and worn out, especially if it be overridden by a burden of militarism and navalism and everything else, there will be found two men hunting one job, or at least more than one man hunting one job, and so wages are low.

Now, let us try to be honest with one another. The God's truth is that free trade does not increase wages; protectionalism does not increase wages. The next truth is that either may, and the next truth is that either may not. It depends upon other conditions entirely.

Now, here is Mississippi and here is Utah. Here is Alabama and here is North Dakota. They are living exactly under the same tariff tax laws; they are subject to precisely the same fiscal arrangements; they have precisely the same rights of popular government; and yet wages in North Dakota are about double what they are in Alabama, and wages in Utah for the same sort of work are about double what they are in Mississippi.

Now, why? Because Alabama and Mississippi comparatively are developed up to the ability of their peculiar sort of labor to develop them.

Now, what is the character of the labor? An inefficient, ignorant, uninitiative negro labor. So it is paid half as much because it is worth half as much as the labor of Utah or North Dakota; in fact, it is not worth half as much, to be still more paradoxical. It is better paid in proportion to what it is worth to the man who employs it than the man in North Dakota and Utah is. The tariff has nothing to do with it in either case.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Tariff had nothing to do with American wages prior to the Revolution. Tariff had nothing to do with English wages prior to the Revolution. Tariff has nothing to do with the fact that English wages are higher now than wages in Germany or France. The tariff has nothing to do with the fact that wages in the Transvaal are higher than they are in various parts of Great Britain.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says that the tariff has nothing whatever to do with the wage that may be paid in Utah or with the wage that may be paid in Mississippi. I want to call his attention to the fact that as to the labor in Mississippi coming in contact with the labor in Utah, Mississippi does not produce what Utah produces; but the tariff has a great deal to do with the wage in Utah for this reason: Utah produces, we will say, lead.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about lead. I am going to leave the protected interests out.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the only point in answer to the Senator. If there was no protection whatever on lead and it could be shipped into this country free, we could not pay the wage that is paid a miner—$3.50 to $4.75 a day—as against the labor in Spain; that is, about 50 or 60 cents a day, or the labor in Mexico, if conditions in that country were such that mining could go on uninterrupted, where wages of about 50 cents a day are paid.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I only say to the Senator that it could not be done; we could not produce lead in this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have heard that so frequently that I almost believe it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator may not believe it, but I know——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have heard it so frequently that I almost believe it. You know the force of habit on the human mind. Now, Utah not only mines lead, but she mines copper, and copper is not protected, and the copper man receives the same wages as the lead man. But I was not talking about Utah's especial and protected industries.

Mr. SMOOT. Allow me——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment. I was not talking about your protected industries.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I am talking about.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am talking about industries as compared with men. I was not talking about any industry as alone peculiar to you. Of course, you can not effect any comparison—any 14-year-old schoolboy ought to know that—between Utah and Mississippi upon a lead basis, because Mississippi does not produce any lead. I could not say what the wages in Mississippi, if we had lead, would be; but I can say that we hire men as hostlers and herders to attend our horses, cattle, and sheep. We raise corn, like you do; we raise oats, like you do; we cut hay, like you do; we hire general farm labor, like you do. We have cotton factories. I do not know whether you have or not. Have you?

Mr. SMOOT. No; we have no cotton factories.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can not then compare that, but I bet if you had cotton factories your laborers in the cotton factories would be paid more highly than ours. In all the things where we can compare with one another, because of having like work, you pay a higher wage.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know——

Mr. WILLIAMS. You pay more for bricklayers; you pay more for carpenters; you pay more for farm laborers. As far as the farm laborers are concerned and various of these other people, the Senator will remember that I brought a lot of that out before the Finance Committee when we were sitting on the question of Cuban reciprocity.

Now, I am trying to reenforce this fact, that the next great reason for the difference in labor is the efficiency of the labor itself. Mississippi has a much more fertile soil on the average than Utah. Her white population is equal to that of Utah in every possible respect. Her climate is superior to that of Utah, so far that the angels in heaven would not undertake to compare them.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has never been in Utah, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I passed through it once and that was enough for me.

Mr. SMOOT. Then he is a good judge if he passed through the State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I passed through once and that was enough for me. We had to close down the windows most of the time to keep the alkali dust out of our throats; but up to that time there were a mighty few things that looked green to a Mississippian except a Mississippian himself, of course, in Utah. I suppose if I had gone among genuine Utah folks I would have felt green at any rate.

What is the only difference with regard to labor and wages between the two States? In Utah you have a live, wide-awake, intelligent, progressive, enterprising, initiative, and inventive white labor. In Mississippi we have an indolent, good-natured, careless, thriftless, happy-go-lucky negro labor. The white man spends 10 months thinking about his wife and children to where he spends 1 thinking about himself. He spends 10 minutes thinking about the future to where he spends 1 thinking about the present. He is building and building and building for wife and children and children's grandchildren. The negro is building for nothing except what he wants to eat to-day and some sort of an assurance of what he can eat during the balance of the month.

Do you want to know the real cause of American prosperity? It consists chiefly in these two things: First, hitherto in our history cheap, fertile land, in inverse ratio to which wages were fixed; and, in the second place, the fact that the most adventuresome, enterprising, and initiative people of all countries came here to make their homes—men who were not afraid to cut away from old ties; in the early days, men who were not afraid to carry a plowhandle in one hand and a rifle in the other while they worked at achieving what? Not happiness for themselves—a fool knew that he could be happier in an English or Middle States village—but in working out a future heritage for their children and their children's children.

Then, with the democratic institutions, which had their birth in the woods, where one man was another man's equal provided he could handle the rifle and the ax equally well, came the disappearance of all caste, all rank, all authority, everything except the authority of reason as between man and man. So they built themselves up in Albemarle County, Va., and out in Vermont; down in Tennessee, and in Kentucky, and Ohio, across the river from one another.

The only superiority we have over other people is the fact that our sires were the men who were willing to take great big risks for their children, and, being thrown out into the world by themselves, without the aid of an industrial society, had to do everything. So, they had to be inventive, not because of superior intelligence but because of superior necessity. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that just in proportion as this country is in that attitude to-day, wages are high in one section as compared with another.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator's conclusions as to wages being high and low just in proportion as we have fertile lands to be developed——

Mr. WILLIAMS. And cheap lands.

Mr. SMOOT. Fertile and cheap lands to be developed by the people will hardly be justified, in my opinion, by the facts, for this reason: Twenty years ago there were in the United States more lands subject to entry than there are to-day, and 20 years ago wages were not so high as they are to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; and wages have since increased.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. So the Senator's conclusions——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The answer to that is very simple. While men have increased in number and land has grown in value, yet owing to the great inventiveness and initiative of the American people jobs have grown faster than either; work has grown faster than either; and it was growing faster than either from 1850 to 1860 under the lowest tariff this country has ever seen. By the way, if you will take that decade from the beginning to the end of it, it will compare favorably with any decade in which this country ever existed in industrial activities, in increased banking power, in the increased percentage of railroad facilities—of course the mileage did not compare with that at present or during the last few years, but the percentage of increase was immensely larger—the number of new farms opened, the number of new mines developed, the number of new factories opened, and what may surprise some of you is the fact that during the last half of that decade the part of the country showing the greatest advance, as compared with itself previously, was the South, which since that time has lagged comparatively.

Mr. President, I did not intend to break into this discussion. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] just a moment ago asked me if I were going to take up a lot of time discussing the tariff instead of getting a vote as soon as we could, and I said "No"; but I simply could not resist when I saw the confidence, the aplomb, the nonchalance, the intellectual certainty of my friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. It reminds me a little of what Lord Mansfield said about Thomas Babington Macaulay. He said, "If I were as cocksure of one thing in the world as Thomas Babington Macaulay is of everything, I would be the happiest man of my acquaintance." The Senator must get over the idea that people who differ with him do not know anything. For the most part they do not, but it is not because they differ from him; it is because, for the most part, humanity does not know much anyway. Very few of us do, and I will frankly confess that after a study of this tariff question the more we study it the greater our consciousness of our ignorance grows. If the Senator from Utah is not prepared to confess that, I am so far as I am concerned. Let us not be too sure now of our intellectual superiority to one another.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to go unchallenged the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi, wherein he intimates that I have said at any time, here or elsewhere, that no one knows anything. That is a conclusion the Senator draws, but it is not what I have said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will tell the Senator why I said that, and then he may explain it. It was because, in attacking this report to which he has referred, he turned to some one—I forget to whom—and said: "Anybody who knew anything about anything, or about conditions in England, knew better than to believe the statements contained in that report." The men who prepared the report were sincere, men who were trying to arrive at the truth.

Mr. SMOOT. But they admit it is not correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They have admitted two errors in the report, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, there are more than that, as the Senator will see if he will read the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; I have heard of but two.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say, in explanation, that I am positive that if the Senator from Mississippi had picked up the report and read the statement there that 47 people in the United States could make $100,000 worth of cotton goods, which it required 255 people in England the same time to make, he would know that it was not true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would have known that it was a misprint, and I would not have required any information of anybody to inform me of that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is all I said.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have before me a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 13, 1913, which contains a quotation from the report of the British Board of Trade on the wage question in 1904, volume 1, page 280. Without stopping to read it, I ask permission of the Senate to incorporate it in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

At the outset it should be understood that the problem of comparing the average level of wages of the different countries is a very difficult and complex one, not only because of the defects of the data, but also because of the essential ambiguity of the problem itself.

1. We may approach the question of comparative wages from two entirely different points of view, leading to divergent and sometimes even to opposite conclusions. We may either seek to compare the material well-being of the wage earners or the wages cost of a given amount of work.

From the former point of view we are mainly interested in the average money income of the wage-earning population, modified, of course, by differences in cost of living, but irrespective of differences in the efficiency of labor. If a bricklayer in France earns half the wages of a bricklayer in America, we should say his money wages were half as great, although conceivably the American might lay so many more bricks per hour that his labor might be even cheaper to his employer. From the second point of view we are interested, not in the weekly income of the laborer, but in his wages regarded as an item in the cost of production, i. e., the wages cost of hewing a ton of coal, spinning a pound of yarn, or laying a hundred bricks, of course under identical conditions.

How entirely divergent are the above two methods of comparison will be realized from the fact that competent American economists are of the opinion that in the United States the average "labor cost" of a given volume of production is at least as low in Europe, if not lower, while the average income of the working classes is certainly higher in America than in any European country. However this may be, it is clear that the real cost of labor varies much less from country to country than the level of weekly wages or of yearly earnings, and that a high labor cost is compatible with low wages, and vice versa, owing to the variations in the efficiency of labor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I also desire to add as a part of my remarks merely a paragraph from the Census Report on Manufactures for the year 1902, part 1, page 61. I ask permission to have that inserted in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

He (Mulhall) estimated £107, or about $500, for Great Britain in 1894 and £270, or about $1,300, for the United States, the latter being nearly three times the English average. In 1900 the census shows an average product per wage earner of $2,450, nearly five times Mr. Mulhall's estimate for Great Britain.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That hereafter the daily sessions of the Senate be 12 o'clock noon until otherwise ordered.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 19, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 18, 1913.

MEMBER OF THE EXCISE BOARD OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Joseph C. Sheehy, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Excise Board for the District of Columbia for a term of one year from July 1, 1913.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 18, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O righteous God, in whom is all wisdom, power, and goodness, help us, we beseech Thee, to subdue the evil within us, to strengthen and accentuate the good, that we may increase the confidence of our fellows in our integrity and thus widen the sphere of our activities, and have a closer walk with Thee. That our ways may be ways of usefulness and all our paths be paths of peace, that we may praise and magnify Thy holy name, in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 15, 1913, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TUESDAY NEXT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I understand there are one or two little matters that may come up at that time under suspension of the rules, particularly one about the extension of time for buildings.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, why not make it Tuesday? That matter could be called up at any time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wanted particularly to accommodate the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY] about a public building, about which there is urgent necessity.

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to pass the bill now.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, if it would be possible to get unanimous consent to modify the special order that was made on Tuesday last, so that the call of committees could be taken up, I presume that my bill could come in in that way, and then the other matter could come in later.

Mr. MANN. The call of committees would be the regular order on Tuesday in any event. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he make Tuesday suspension day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Tuesday next may be suspension day, in lieu of Monday next, and that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next, and that Tuesday next be substituted in lieu of Monday for suspension day. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 58. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to loan the bell of the late U. S. S. Princeton to the borough of Princeton, N. J.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 58. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to loan the bell of the late U. S. S. Princeton to the borough of Princeton, N. J.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Monroe doctrine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, in asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to be of service to the Congress and to the people of the United States, by bringing to their attention a remarkably thoughtful and able essay on "The Monroe doctrine: An obsolete shibboleth," printed in the Atlantic Monthly, June, 1913.

The author, Hiram Bingham, Ph. D., professor of Latin-American history and curator of the collection on Latin America at Yale, is an archæologist of note, a man brought up in sympathetic association with different races of men, and whose great work in exploration has made him especially familiar with the people of the South American Continent and with their point of view. I commend a careful reading of his statement to all those who, as Members of the National Legislature, must soon face definite issues that concern this dictum, which is neither international law nor doctrine, but merely an expression of our own views, a statement of our intentions, which can only be enforced upon others by the power of arms.

The article is as follows:

"THE MONROE DOCTRINE: AN OBSOLETE SHIBBOLETH.

"(By Hiram Bingham.)

"I.

"'The American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by European powers. * * * We should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the Governments who have declared their independence, and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration, and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling, in any other manner, their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States. * * *'

"Thus, in 1823, did President James Monroe, acting under the influence of his able Secretary of State, John Quincy Adams, enunciate a doctrine which has been the most universally accepted foreign policy that we have ever had. No one questions the fact that the enunciation of this policy of 'America for Americans,' and our firm adherence to it for so many years has had a very decided effect upon the history of the Western Hemisphere.

"There have been times when ambitious European monarchs would have liked nothing better than to help themselves to poorly defended territory in what is now termed Latin America. When the doctrine was originated the Holy Alliance in Europe was contemplating the overthrow of republican government in Spain, and unquestionably looked with extreme aversion at the new Republics in South and Central America, whose independence we were hastily recognizing. Russia was reaching out beyond Alaska. The firm declaration of this policy of exclusion, backed up by England's attitude toward the Holy Alliance, undoubtedly operated to give the American Republics sufficient breathing space to enable them to get on their feet and begin the difficult process of working out their own salvation, a process which was rendered all the more difficult by reason of Hispanic racial tendencies, of centuries of autocratic colonial government, and of geographical conditions which made transportation and social intercourse extremely arduous.

"Journeys across Peru even to-day may be beset with more difficulties than were journeys from Mississippi to California 60 years ago—before the railroads. It still takes longer to go from Lima, the capital of Peru, to Iquitos, the capital of Peru's largest Province, and one which the Putumayo atrocities have recently brought vividly to our notice, than it does to go from London to Honolulu.

"Had it not been for the Monroe doctrine the American Republics would have found it very much more difficult to maintain their independence during the first three-quarters of a century of their career. And this notwithstanding the fact that the actual words 'Monroe doctrine' were rarely heard or seen.

"In 1845, without mentioning this shibboleth by name, President Polk declared that the United States would not permit any European intervention on the North American Continent. This, as Prof. Coolidge has brought out (see, for an able exposition of the Monroe doctrine, Prof. A. C. Coolidge's The United States as a World Power (Macmillan).—The Editors), pushed the theory further than it has been carried out in practice, although it restricted the original idea by leaving South America out of account.

"A few years later, while we were engaged in civil war, Napoleon III attempted to set up a European monarch in Mexico. Scarcely had we recovered, however, from the throes of our great conflict when Mr. Seward took up with the French Government the necessity for the withdrawal of the French troops from Maximilian's support. Here we were acting strongly in accordance with the best traditions of the Monroe doctrine, and yet the mysterious words were not employed in the correspondence.

"In fact, while it was generally understood that we would not countenance any European interference in the affairs of North and South America, it was not until 1895, during the second administration of President Cleveland, that a Secretary of State thought it expedient or necessary to restate the Monroe doctrine and to bring us to the verge of a European war by backing it up with an absolutely uncompromising attitude. Venezuela had had a long-standing boundary dispute with British Guiana. Nobody cared very much either way until it was discovered that in the disputed territory were rich gold fields. In the excitement which ensued the Venezuelans appealed to the United States, and Secretary Olney, invoking the Monroe doctrine, brought matters to a crisis.

"Our defiant attitude toward Great Britain astonished the world and greatly pleased the majority of American citizens. The very fact that we had not the slightest personal interest in the paltry 60,000 square miles of jungle southeast of the Orinoco added to our self-esteem. It raised our patriotism to the highest pitch when we realized that we were willing to go to war with the most powerful nation in Europe rather than see her refuse to arbitrate her right to her ancient possession of a little strip of tropical forest with a Government which was not in existence when England took British Guiana, but which was an 'American Republic.' Fortunately for us Lord Salisbury had a fairly good sense of humor and declined to take the matter too seriously. Instead of standing, in the proverbial British manner, strictly for his honor and his rights, he politely ignored the boundary commission which we had impetuously called into existence, and, dealing directly with his neighbor Venezuela, arranged for an international court of arbitration.

"In our exuberance over the success of Mr. Olney's bold and unselfish enunciation of the Monroe doctrine we failed to realize several aspects of this question.

"In the first place, we had proudly declared the Monroe doctrine to be a part of international law, failing to distinguish between law and policy.

"In the second place, we had assumed a new theorem. In the words of Mr. Olney: 'The States of America, South as well as North, by geographical proximity, by natural sympathy, by similarity of governmental constitutions, are friends and allies, commercially and politically, of the United States.'

"A few years earlier the then Secretary of State, Blaine, had brought into existence the International Union of American Republics and had enunciated the doctrine of pan-Americanism, which has glowed more or less cheerfully ever since.

"Mr. Olney's words recognized this doctrine. But when he gave 'geographical proximity' as one of the reasons for this pan-American alliance he overlooked the fact that the largest cities of South America are geographically nearer to Spain and Portugal than to New York and New England. He failed to consider that the rich east coast of South America is no farther from Europe than it is from Florida, and that so far as the west coast is concerned, it actually takes longer to travel from Valparaiso, the chief South American west coast port, to San Francisco, the chief North American west coast port, than it does to go from Valparaiso to London. Peru is as far from Puget Sound as it is from Labrador.

"Most of our statesmen studied geography when they were in the grammar school and have rarely looked at a world atlas since. In other words, we began the new development of the Monroe doctrine with a false idea of the geographical basis of the pan-American alliance.

"Furthermore, the new Monroe doctrine was established on another false idea, the existence of 'natural sympathy' between South and North America. As a matter of fact, instances might easily be multiplied to show that our South American neighbors have far more natural sympathy for, and regard themselves as much more nearly akin to, the Latin races of Europe than to the cosmopolitan people of the United States.

"How Spain feels was shown recently in the case of a distinguished Spanish professor who was able to find time to make an extended journey through Latin America, urging pan-Hispanism, but could find no time to make an extended journey through the cities of the United States, although offered lavish hospitality and considerable honorariums. How Brazil feels was seen a few years ago in Rio de Janeiro, when Brazil was holding a national exposition. Each State of that great Republic had a building of its own, but no foreign nations were represented except Portugal, the mother country, which had her own building.

"Of the difficulties of establishing any kind of an alliance between ourselves and the South American Republics no one who has traveled in South America can be ignorant. As has been well said by a recent Peruvian writer: 'Essential points of difference separate the two Americas—differences of language, and therefore of spirit; the difference between Spanish Catholicism and the multiform Protestantism of the Anglo-Saxons; between the Yankee individualism and the omnipotence of the state natural to the South. In their origin, as in their race, we find fundamental antagonisms. The evolution of the north is slow and obedient to the lessons of time, to the influences of custom; the history of the southern peoples is full of revolution, rich with dreams of an unattainable perfection.'

"One of the things which make it, and will continue to make it, difficult for us to treat fairly with our southern neighbors is our racial prejudice against the half-breed. As Señor Calderon bluntly says, 'Half-breeds and their descendants govern the Latin-American Republics'; and it is a well-known fact that this leads to contempt on the part of the average Anglo-Saxon. Such a state of affairs shows the difficulty of assuming that pan-Americanism is axiomatic, and of basing the logical growth of the Monroe doctrine on 'natural sympathy.'

"In the third place, the new form of the Monroe doctrine declared, in the words of Secretary Olney, that the 'United States is practically sovereign on this continent.' This at once aroused the antagonism and the fear of those very southern neighbors who, in another sentence, he had endeavored to prove were 'friends and allies, commercially and politically, of the United States.'

"Less than three years after the enunciation of the new Monroe doctrine we were at war with Spain. The progress of the war in Cuba and the Spanish colonies was followed in South America with the keenest interest. How profoundly it would have surprised the great American public to realize that while we were spending blood and treasure to secure the independence of another American Republic, our neighbors in Buenos Aires were indulging in the most severe and caustic criticism of our motives! This attitude can be appreciated only by those who have compared the cartoons published week after week during the progress of the war in this country and in Argentina. In the one, Uncle Sam is pictured as a benevolent giant saving the poor maid Cuba from the jaws of the ferocious dragon, Gen. Weyler, and his cruel mistress in Spain. In the other, Uncle Sam, in the guise of a fat hog, is engaged in besmirching the fair garments of the Queen of Spain in his violent efforts to gobble up her few American possessions. Representations of our actions in the Philippines are in such disgusting form that it would not be desirable to attempt to describe some of the Argentine cartoons touching upon that subject.

"Our neighbors felt that a decided change had come over the Monroe doctrine. In 1823 we had declared that 'with the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere' (so runs the original Monroe doctrine). In 1898 we not only interfered, but actually took away all of Spain's colonies and dependencies, freeing Cuba and retaining for ourselves Porto Rico, Guam, and the Philippines.

"Without for a moment wishing to enter into a discussion of the wisdom of our actions, I desire to emphasize the tremendous difference between the old and the new Monroe doctrine. This is not a case of theories and arguments, but of deeds. What are the facts?

"In 1895 we declare that we are practically sovereign on this continent; in 1898 we take a rich American island from a European power; and in 1903 we go through the form of preventing a South American Republic from subduing a revolution in one of her distant Provinces, and eventually take a strip of that Province because we believe we owe it to the world to build the Panama Canal. Again, let it be clear that I am not interested at this point in defending or attacking our actions in any of these cases; I merely desire to state what has happened and to show some of the fruits of the new Monroe doctrine. 'By their fruits ye shall know them.'

"Another one of the 'fruits' which has not escaped the attention of our neighbors in South America is our intervention in Santo Domingo, which, although it may be an excellent thing for the people of that island, has undoubtedly interfered with their right to do as they please with their own money.

"Furthermore, within the past three years we have twice landed troops in Central America and taken an active part by way of interfering in local politics. We believed that the conditions were so bad as to justify us in carrying out the new Monroe doctrine by aiding one side in a local revolution.

"Of our armed intervention in Cuba it is scarcely necessary to speak, except to refer in passing to the newspaper story, credited and believed in Cuba, that if American troops are again obliged to intervene in the political life of that country they will not be withdrawn, as has been the practice in the past.

"The menace of intervention, armed intervention, the threatened presence of machine guns and American marines have repeatedly been used by Latin-American politicians in their endeavors to keep the peace in their own countries. And we have done enough of that sort of thing to make it evident to disinterested observers that the new Monroe doctrine, our present policy, is to act as international policeman, or at least as an elder brother with a big stick, whenever the little fellows get too fresh.

"Is this doctrine worth while?

"Let us see what it involves, first, from the European; second, from the Latin-American point of view.

"II.

"By letting it be known in Europe that we shall not tolerate any European intervention or the landing of European troops on the sacred soil of the American Republics, we assume all responsibility. We have declared, in the words of Secretary Olney, that the United States is 'practically sovereign on this continent, and that its fiat is law upon the subject to which it confines its interposition.' Therefore European countries have the right to look to us to do that which we prevent them from doing. A curious result of this is that some of the American Republics float loans in Europe, believing that the United States will not allow the Governments of their European creditors forcibly to collect these loans.

"Personally I believe that it ought to be an adopted principle of international law that the armed intervention of creditor nations to collect bad debts on behalf of their bankers and bondholders is forbidden. If this principle were clearly understood and accepted, these bankers and underwriters would be far more particular to whom they lent any great amount of money and under what conditions. They would not be willing to take the risks which they now take, and many unfortunate financial tangles would never have a beginning. It is natural for a Republic which has great undeveloped resources, much optimism, and a disregard of existing human handicaps, to desire to borrow large amounts of money in order to build expensive railroads and carry out desirable public improvements. It is equally natural that capitalists seeking good interest rates and secure investments, should depend on the fact that if the debtor country attempts to default on its national loans, the Government of the creditors will intervene with a strong arm. It is natural that the money should be forthcoming, even though a thorough, businesslike, and scientific investigation of the possessions and resources of the borrowing nation might show that the chances of her being able to pay interest, and eventually to return the capital, were highly problematical and to be reckoned as very high risks.

"Millions of dollars of such loans have been made in the past. It is perfectly evident that many of these loans can not be repaid; that the time is coming when the creditor nations will look to us as the policeman or 'elder brother' of the Western Hemisphere to see to it that the little boys pay for the candy and sweetmeats they have eaten. Is it worth while that we should do this?

"One can not dodge the truth that the continuation of our support of this doctrine implies that we will undertake to be responsible for the good behavior of all of the American nations. If we are the big brother with the club, who will not permit any outsider to spank our irritating or troublesome younger brothers, we must accept the natural corollary of keeping them in order ourselves, for we can not allow the American family to become a nuisance, and some members of it have a decided tendency in that direction. Is this task worth while? Will it not cost more than it is worth? Is there not a better way out of the difficulty?

"Furthermore Europe knows that in order to continue to execute our self-imposed and responsible mission we must run counter to the most approved principles of the law of nations.

"The right of independence is so fundamental and so well established a principle of international law, and respect for it is so essential to the existence of national self-restraint, that armed intervention, or any other action or policy tending to place that right in a subordinate position, is properly looked upon with disfavor, not only in Latin America, but by all the family of civilized nations. The grounds upon which intervention is permitted in international law differ according to the authority one consults, but in general they are limited to the right of self-preservation, to averting danger to the intervening State, and to the duty of fulfilling engagements. When, however, the danger against which intervention is directed is the consequence of the prevalence of ideas which are opposed to the views held by the intervening State, most authorities believe that intervention ceases to be legitimate. To say that we have the right to intervene in order to modify another State's attitude toward revolutions is to ignore the fundamental principle that the right of every State to live its life in a given way is precisely equal to that of another State to live its life in another way.

"In the last analysis no intervention is legal except for the purpose of self-preservation, unless a breach of international law has taken place or unless the family of civilized States concur in authorizing it.

"If, then, our adherence to the Monroe doctrine means practically disregard of the principles of the accepted law of nations, is it worth while to continue? Why should we not abandon the Monroe doctrine, and publicly disclaim any desire on our part to interfere in the domestic quarrels of our neighbors? Why should we not publicly state to Europe that we shall not intervene except at the request of a Pan American Congress, and then only in case we are one of the members which such a Congress selects for the specific purpose of quieting a certain troublesome neighbor?

"III.

"From the Latin-American point of view, the continuance of the Monroe doctrine is insulting, and is bound to involve us in serious difficulties with our neighbors. We seem to be blind to actual conditions in the largest and most important parts of Latin America, such as Brazil, Argentina, and Chile. We need to arouse the average citizen to study the commercial situation and the recent history of those three Republics. Let him ponder on the meaning of Brazil's $100,000,000 of balance of trade in her favor. Let him realize the enormous extent of Argentina's recent growth and her ability to supply the world with wheat, corn, beef, and mutton. (In 1912 Argentina's exports amounted to $480,000,000, of which $200,000,000 represented wheat and corn and $188,000,000 pastoral products.—The Author.) Let him examine Chile's political and economic stability. Let him ponder whether or not these nations are fit to take care of themselves, and are worthy of being included in an alliance to preserve America for the Americans, if that is worth while, and if there is any danger from Europe. Let him ask himself whether or not the A B C powers—that is, the Argentine, Brazilian, and Chilean Governments—deserve our patronizing, we-will-protect-you-from-Europe attitude.

"The fact is we are woefully ignorant of the actual conditions in the leading American Republics. To the inhabitants of those countries the very idea of the existence of the Monroe doctrine is not only distasteful but positively insulting. It is leading them on the road toward what is known as the 'A B C' policy, a kind of triple alliance between Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, with the definite object of opposing the encroachments of the United States. They feel that they must do something to counteract that well-known willingness of the American people to find good and sufficient reasons for interfering and intervening; for example, for taking Porto Rico from Spain, for sending armies into Cuba, for handling the customs receipts of Santo Domingo, for taking a strip of territory which (South Americans believe) belongs to the Republic of Colombia, for sending troops into Nicaragua, and for mobilizing an army on the Mexican frontier. (In regard to the latter point it may be stated, in passing, that it is not the custom for South American nations to mobilize an army on a neighbor's frontier merely because that country is engaged in civil war or revolution.)

"To the 'A B C' powers even the original Monroe doctrine is regarded as long since outgrown and as being at present merely a display of insolence and conceit on our part. With Brazil now owning the largest dreadnoughts in the world; with Argentina and Chile building equally good ones; with the fact that the European nations have long since lost their tendency toward monarchical despotism and are in fact quite as democratic as many American Republics, it does seem a bit ridiculous for us to pretend that the Monroe doctrine is a necessary element in our foreign policy.

"If we still fear European aggression and desire to prevent a partition of South America on the lines of the partition of Africa, let us bury the Monroe doctrine and declare an entirely new policy—a policy that is based on intelligent appreciation of the present status of the leading American powers; let us declare our desire to join with the 'A B C' powers in protecting the weaker parts of America against any imaginable aggressions on the part of European or Asiatic nations.

"Some people think that the most natural outlet for the crowded Asiatic nations is to be found in South America, and that Japan and China will soon be knocking most loudly for the admission which is at present denied them. If we decide that they should enter, well and good; but if we decide against such a policy, we shall be in a much stronger position to carry out that plan if we have united with the 'A B C' powers.

"If these 'A B C' powers dislike and despise our maintenance of the old Monroe doctrine, it is not difficult to conceive how much more they must resent the new one. The very thought that we, proud in the consciousness of our own self-righteousness, sit here with a smile on our faces and a big stick in our hands, ready to chastise any of the American Republics that do not behave, fairly makes their blood boil. It may be denied that this is our attitude. Grant that it is not, still our neighbors believe that it is, and if we desire to convince them of the contrary we must definitely and publicly abandon the Monroe doctrine and enunciate a new kind of foreign policy.

"We ought not to be blind to the fact that there are clever authors residing in Europe who take the utmost pains to make the Latin Americans believe—what they are unfortunately only too willing to believe—that we desire to be not only practically but actually sovereign on the Western Hemisphere. A recent French writer, Maurice de Waleffe, writing on The Fair Land of Central America, begins his book with this startling announcement of a discovery he has made:

"'The United States have made up their mind to conquer South America. Washington aspires to become the capital of an enormous empire, comprising, with the exception of Canada, the whole of the New World. Eighty million Yankees want to annex not only 40,000,000 Spanish-Americans but such mines, forests, and agricultural riches as can be found nowhere else on the face of the globe.'

"Most of us, when we read those words, smile, knowing that they are not true; yet that does not affect the fact that the Latin American, when he reads them, gnashes his teeth and believes that they are only too true. If he belongs to one of the larger Republics, it makes him toss his head angrily and increases his hatred toward those 'Yankis,' whose manners he despises. If he belongs to one of the smaller Republics, his soul is filled with fear mingled with hatred, and he sullenly awaits the day when he shall have to defend his State against the Yankee invaders. In every case the effect produced is contrary to the spirit of peace and harmony.

"In another book, which is attracting wide attention and was written by a young Peruvian diplomatist, there is a chapter entitled 'The North American Peril,' and it begins with these significant words: 'To save themselves from Yankee imperialism, the American democracies would almost accept a German alliance or the aid of Japanese arms; everywhere the Americans of the north are feared. In the Antilles and in Central America hostility against the Anglo-Saxon invaders assumes the character of a Latin crusade.' This is a statement not of a theory, but of a condition set forth by a man who, while somewhat severe in his criticism of North American culture, is not unfriendly to the United States, and who remembers what his country owes to us. Yet he asserts that in the United States 'against the policy of respect for Latin liberties are ranged the instincts of a triumphant plutocracy.'

"The strident protest in this book has not gone out without finding a ready echo in South America. Even in Peru, long our best friend on the southern continent, the leading daily papers have during the past year shown an increasing tendency to criticize our actions and suspect our motives. Their suspicion goes so far as actually to turn friendly words against us. Last September a successful American diplomat, addressing a distinguished gathering of manufacturers in New York, was quoted all over South America as stating that the United States did not desire territorial expansion, but only commercial, and that the association should combat all idea of territorial expansion if any statesman proposed it, as this was the only way to gain the confidence of South America. This remark was treated as evidence of Machiavelian politics. One journalist excitedly exclaimed, 'Who does not see in this paternal interest a brutal and cynical sarcasm? Who talks of confidence when one of the most thoughtful South American authorities, Francisco Garcia Calderon, gives us once more the cry, no longer premature, "Let us be alert and on our guard against Yankeeism."'

"Even the agitation against the Putumayo atrocities is misunderstood. 'To no one is it a secret,' says one Latin-American writer, 'that all these scandalous accusations only serve to conceal the vehement desire to impress American and English influence on the politics of the small countries of South America; and they can scarcely cover the shame of the utilitarian end that lies behind it all.'

"Another instance of the attitude of the Latin-American press is shown in a recent article in one of the leading daily papers in Lima, the Government organ. In the middle of its front page in a two-column space is an article with these headlines: 'North American excesses—The terrible lynchings—And they talk of the Putumayo!' The gist of the article may easily be imagined. It begins with these words: 'While the Saxons of the world are producing a deafening cry over the crimes of the Putumayo, imagining them to be like a dance of death, and giving free rein to such imaginings; while the American Government resolves to send a commission that may investigate what atrocities are committed in those regions, there was published, as regards the United States, in La Razón, of Buenos Aires, a fortnight ago the following note, significant of the "lofty civilization and high justice" of the great Republic of the north.' Here follows a press dispatch describing one of the terrible lynchings which only too often happen in the United States. Then the Peruvian editor goes on to say, 'Do we realize that in the full twentieth century, when there is not left a single country in the world whose inhabitants are permitted to supersede justice by summary punishment, there are repeatedly taking place, almost daily, in the United States lynchings like that of which we are told in the telegraphic dispatch?'

"IV.

"Is it worth our while to heed the 'writing on the wall'?

"Is it not true that it is the present tendency of the Monroe doctrine to claim that the United States is to do whatever seems to the United States good and proper so far as the Western Hemisphere is concerned? Is there not a dangerous tendency in our country to believe so far in our own rectitude that we may be excused from any restrictions, either in the law of nations or in our treaty obligations, that seem unjust, trivial, or inconvenient, notwithstanding the established practices of civilized nations? Our attitude on the Panama tolls question, our former disregard of treaty rights with China, and our willingness to read into or read out of existing treaties whatever seems to us right and proper have aroused deep-seated suspicion in our southern neighbors, which, it seems to me, we should endeavor to eradicate if we have our own highest good at heart.

"Are we not too much in the state of mind of Citizen Fix-it, who was more concerned with suppressing the noisy quarrels of his neighbors than with quietly solving his own domestic difficulties? Could we see ourselves as our southern neighbors see us in the columns of their daily press, where the emphasis is still on the prevalence of murder in the United States, the astonishing continuance of lynching, the freedom from punishment of the vast majority of those who commit murder, our growing disregard of the rights of others, bomb outrages, strikes, riots, labor difficulties—could we see these things with their eyes, we should realize how bitterly they resent our assumed right to intervene when they misbehave themselves or when a local revolution becomes particularly noisy.

"So firmly fixed in the Latin-American mind is the idea that our foreign policy to-day means intervention and interference that comments on the splendid sanitary work being done at Panama by Col. Gorgas are tainted with this idea.

"On the west coast of South America there is a pesthole called Guayaquil, which, as Ambassador Bryce says, 'enjoys the reputation of being the pesthouse of the continent, rivaling for the prevalence and malignity of its malarial fevers such dens of disease as Fontesvilla on the Pungwe River in South Africa and the Guinea coast itself, and adding to these the more swift and deadly yellow fever, which has now been practically extirpated from every other part of South America except the banks of the Amazon. * * * It seems to be high time that efforts should be made to improve conditions at a place whose development is so essential to the development of Ecuador itself.' Recent efforts on the part of far-sighted Ecuadorian statesmen to remedy these conditions by employing American sanitary engineers and taking advantage of the offers of American capital were received by the Ecuadorian populace so ill as to cause the fall of the cabinet and the disgrace of the minister who favored such an experiment in modern sanitation.

"Peru suffers from the conditions of bad health among her northern neighbors, and yet the leading newspapers in Peru, instead of realizing how much they had to gain by having Guayaquil cleaned up, united in protesting against this symptom of 'Yanki' imperialism, and applauded the action of the Ecuadorian mob.

"Is it worth while to continue a foreign policy which makes it so difficult for things to be done, things of whose real advantage to our neighbors there is no question?

"The old adage that actions speak louder than words is perhaps more true in Latin America than in the United States. A racial custom of saying pleasant things tends toward a suspicion of the sincerity of pleasant things when said. But there can be no doubt about actions. Latin-American statesmen smiled and applauded when Secretary Root, in the Pan-American Congress at Rio Janeiro, said, 'We consider that the independence and the equal rights of the smallest and weakest members of the family of nations deserve as much respect as those of the great empires. We pretend to no right, privilege, or power that we do not freely concede to each one of the American Republics.' But they felt that their suspicions of us were more than warranted by our subsequent actions in Cuba, Santo Domingo, and Nicaragua. Our ultimatum to Chile on account of the long-standing Alsop claim seemed to them an unmistakably unfriendly act and was regarded as a virtual abandonment by Secretary Knox of the policy enunciated by Secretary Root.

"Another unfriendly act was the neglect of our Congress to provide a suitable appropriation for the Second Pan-American Scientific Congress.

"Before 1908 Latin-American scientific congresses had been held in Argentina (Buenos Aires), Brazil (Rio Janeiro), and Uruguay (Montevideo). When it came Chile's turn, so kind was her feeling toward Secretary Root that the United States was asked to join in making the Fourth Latin-American Scientific Congress become the first Pan-American. Every one of the four countries where the international scientists met had made a suitable, generous appropriation to cover the expenses of the meeting. Chile had felt that it was worth while to make a very large appropriation in order suitably to entertain the delegates, to publish the results of the congress, and to increase American friendships. This First Pan-American Scientific Congress selected Washington as the place for the second congress, and named October, 1912, as the appointed time for the meetings. But when our State Department asked Congress for a modest appropriation of $50,000 to meet our international obligations for this Pan-American gathering, our billion-dollar Congress decided to economize and denied the appropriation. When the matter came up again during the Congress that has just finished its sessions, the appropriation was recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but was thrown out on a technical point of order.

"Now, you can not make a Latin-American believe that the United States is so poor that it can not afford to entertain international scientific congresses as Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay, and Chile have done. They argue that there must be some other reason underlying this lack of courtesy. No pleasant words or profuse professions of friendship and regard can make the leading statesmen and scientists throughout Latin America forget that it was not possible to hold the Second Pan-American Scientific Congress because the United States did not care to assume her international obligations. Nor will they forget that Chile spent $100,000 in entertaining the First Pan-American Scientific Congress and that the 10 official delegates from the United States Government enjoyed the bounteous Chilean hospitality and were shown every attention that was befitting and proper for the accredited representatives of the United States.

"In short, here is a concrete case of how our present policy toward Latin America justifies the Latin-American attitude toward the country that has been maintaining the Monroe doctrine.

"V.

"Finally, there is another side to the question.

"Some of the defenders of the Monroe doctrine state quite frankly that they are selfish, and that from the selfish point of view the Monroe doctrine should at all costs be maintained. They argue that our foreign commerce would suffer were Europe permitted to have a free hand in South America. Even on this very point it seems to me that they make a serious mistake.

"You can seldom sell goods to a man who dislikes you, except when you have something which is far better or cheaper than he can get anywhere else. Furthermore, if he distrusts you, he is not going to judge your goods fairly or view the world's market with an unprejudiced eye. This can scarcely be denied. Everyone knows that a friendly smile or cordial greeting and the maintenance of friendly relations are essential to 'holding one's customers.' Accordingly, it seems that even from this selfish point of view, which some Americans are willing to take, it is absolutely against our own interests to maintain this elder-brother-with-the-stick policy, which typifies the new Monroe doctrine.

"Furthermore, Germany is getting around the Monroe doctrine, and is actually making a peaceful conquest of South America which will injure us just as much as if we had allowed her to make a military conquest of the southern Republics. She is winning South American friendship. She has planted colonies, one of which, in southern Brazil, has 350,000 people in it, as large a population as that of Vermont and nearly as large as that of Montana. Germany is taking pains to educate her young business men in the Spanish language, and to send them out equipped to capture Spanish-American trade. We have a saying that 'Trade follows the flag.' Germany has magnificent steamers, flying the German flag, giving fortnightly service to every important port in South America—ports where the American flag is practically never seen. She has her banks and business houses which have branches in the interior cities. By their means she is able to keep track of American commerce, to know what we are doing, and at what rates. Laughing in her sleeve at the Monroe doctrine as an antiquated policy, which only makes it easier for her to do a safe business, Germany is engaged in the peaceful conquest of Spanish America.

"To be sure, we are not standing still, and we are fighting for the same trade that she is, but our soldiers are handicapped by the presence of the very doctrine that was intended to strengthen our position in the New World. Is this worth while?

"At all events let us face clearly and frankly the fact that the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine is going to cost the United States an immense amount of trouble, money, and men.

"Carried out to its logical conclusion, it means a policy of suzerainty and interference which will earn us the increasing hatred of our neighbors, the dissatisfaction of Europe, the loss of commercial opportunities, and the forfeiture of time and attention which would much better be given to settling our own difficult internal problems. The continuance of adherence to the Monroe doctrine offers opportunities to scheming statesmen to distract public opinion from the necessity of concentrated attention at home by arousing mingled feelings of jingoism and self-importance in attempting to correct the errors of our neighbors.

"If we persist in maintaining the Monroe doctrine, we shall find that its legitimate, rational, and logical growth will lead us to an increasing number of large expenditures, where American treasure and American blood will be sacrificed in efforts to remove the mote from our neighbor's eye while overlooking the beam in our own.

"The character of the people who inhabit the tropical American Republics is such, the percentage of Indian blood is so great, the little understood difficulties of life in those countries are so far-reaching, and the psychological tendencies of the people so different from our own, that opportunities will continually arise which will convince us that they require our intervention if we continue to hold to the tenets of the Monroe doctrine.

"It is for us to face the question fairly and to determine whether it is worth while to continue any longer on a road which leads to such great expenditures and which means the loss of international friendships.

"That international good will is a desideratum it needs no words of mine to prove to anyone. Looked at from every point of view, selfishly and unselfishly, ethically, morally, commercially, and diplomatically, we desire to live at peace with our neighbors and to promote international friendship. Can this be done by continuing our adherence to the Monroe doctrine?

"From the unselfish point of view and from the point of view of the world's peace and happiness, there seems to be no question that the Monroe doctrine is no longer worth while. Mr. Bryce, in an able exposition in his recent 'South America,' has clearly pointed out that the Spanish-American's regard for the United States and his confidence in its purposes have never even recovered from the blow given by the Mexican War of 1846 and the annexation of California. For many years a political tie between ourselves and the other American Republics was found, says Mr. Bryce, in our declared intention 'to resist any attempt by European powers either to overthrow republican government in any American State or to attempt annexation of its territory. So long as any such action was feared from Europe the protection thus promised was welcome, and the United States felt a corresponding interest in their clients; but circumstances alter cases. To-day, when apprehensions of the old kind have vanished and when some of the South American States feel themselves already powerful, one is told that they have begun to regard the situation with different eyes. "Since there are no longer rain clouds coming up from the east, why should a friend, however well intentioned, insist on holding an umbrella over us? We are quite able to do that for ourselves if necessary."' Mr. Bryce continues: 'It is as the disinterested, the absolutely disinterested and unselfish, advocate of peace and good will that the United States will have most influence in the Western Hemisphere, and that influence, gently and tactfully used, may be of incalculable service to mankind.'

"Old ideas, proverbs, catchwords, national shibboleths, die hard. No part of our foreign policy has ever been so continuously held and so popularly accepted as the Monroe doctrine. Hoary with age, it has defied the advance of commerce, the increase of transportation facilities, and the subjugation of the yellow-fever mosquito. Based on a condition that has long since disappeared, owing its later growth and development to mistaken ideas, it appears to our South American neighbors to be neither disinterested nor unselfish, but rather an indisputable evidence of our overweening national conceit. The very words 'Monroe doctrine' are fraught with a disagreeable significance from our neighbors' point of view. There is no one single thing nor any group of things that we could do to increase the chances of peace and harmony in the Western Hemisphere comparable with the definite statement that we have outgrown the Monroe doctrine, that we realize that our neighbors in the New World are well able to take care of themselves, and that we shall not interfere in their politics or send arms into their territory unless cordially invited to do so, and then only in connection with and by the cooperation of other members of the family.

"If it is necessary to maintain order in some of the weaker and more restless Republics, why not let the decision be made not by ourselves, but by a congress of the leading American powers? If it is found necessary to send armed forces into Central America to quell rebellions that are proving too much for the recognized Governments, why not let those forces consist not solely of American marines, but of the marines of Argentina, Brazil, and Chile as well? In some such way as this we can convince 'the other Americans' of our good faith and of the fact that we have not 'made up our minds to conquer South America.' By adopting a foreign policy along these lines we can establish on a broad and solid foundation the relations of international peace and good will for which the time is ripe, but which can not arrive till we are convinced that the Monroe doctrine is not worth while."

APPLIANCES FOR ENGINES IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know the subject upon which the gentleman desires to speak.

Mr. RAKER. It is upon the subject of headlights for engines engaged in interstate commerce, upon the subject of proper engines and appliances for engines engaged in interstate commerce, and one or two other matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith some resolutions by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, adopted at their twenty-sixth convention, held in the city of Washington, D. C., during the month of June, 1913, in which they urge legislation by Congress upon the following subjects:

1. Placing some restrictions upon immigration into the United States.

2. That a proper headlight law be enacted, embodying the provisions of H. R. 103, Sixty-third Congress, first session.

3. That common carriers engaged in interstate commerce be compelled to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances.

4. That Senate bill No. 4, Sixty-third Congress, first session, relating to our merchant marine, etc., be speedily enacted into law.

All of these are important matters and demand immediate attention and consideration by this Congress. I am in full accord with the purpose to be accomplished by each of these resolutions.

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
Peoria, Ill., July 12, 1913.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By instructions of the twenty-sixth convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, held in the city of Washington, D. C., during the month of June, 1913, the following resolution is transmitted for your information:

"Whereas for many years representatives of labor organizations have urged upon Congress the necessity of the placing of some restriction upon the immigration of millions of foreign people to the United States, by which unrestricted immigration American labor has been displaced, wages reduced, labor unions destroyed, and the American standard of living seriously affected: Be it

"Resolved, That the national legislative representative at Washington is hereby instructed to join with representatives of all other labor organizations in an endeavor to induce the United States Congress to adopt laws that will restrict any immigration that tends to lower the standard of living of the American working people: Be it further

"Resolved, That the international president and the general secretary and treasurer be, and are hereby, instructed to file a copy of these resolutions with the President of the United States and the Members of both Houses of Congress."

Yours, respectfully,

W. S. CARTER,
President.

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
Peoria, Ill., July 12, 1913.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By instructions of the twenty-sixth convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, held in the city of Washington, D. C., in the month of June, 1913, the following resolution adopted by that convention is transmitted to you for your information:

"Careful perusal of the report rendered by the Bureau of Standards convinces us that the electric headlight alone will afford adequate protection to the lives of our members, the traveling public, and the property of the railroads, but to overcome the claims of class legislation made by manufacturers of other lights, it was deemed advisable that a clause be inserted in the bill providing for other lights if the required candlepower could be furnished.

"We have ascertained that laws have been passed in 20 States, namely, Alabama, Arizona, Mississippi, Montana, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Texas, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Ohio, South Carolina, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, providing for headlights to meet certain requirements. In the first 11 States mentioned laws have been passed requiring locomotives to be equipped with electric headlights, and 1,500 candlepower, measured without the aid of a reflector, is specified. The other 9 States have laws requiring a headlight which will enable the engine crew to clearly discern an object the size of a man at distances varying from 500 feet in Ohio to 800 feet in Kansas, South Carolina, and Wisconsin.

"We find that, in addition to these States in which laws have been enacted, the railroads in the State of California have agreed to equip all locomotives used in road service with electric headlights of not less than 1,500 candlepower, with the addition of a 60-candlepower incandescent light to be placed in the headlight and controlled with a switch in the cab, making it possible to operate or cut out either light independent of the other. This latter improvement for the purpose of overcoming the objections interposed by certain officials of these railroads that headlights of this power are dazzling in their brightness and have a tendency to blind the engineer, preventing him from properly observing signals, etc.

"After giving careful consideration to the foregoing, we recommend that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, in convention assembled, indorse House bill No. 103, introduced by Congressman JOHN E. RAKER, of California, at the first session of the Sixty-third Congress.

"That the international president, acting in the capacity of national legislative representative, be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to use all honorable means to secure the passage of this bill.

"That he issue a circular letter to all lodges in the United States calling upon them to furnish him with specific cases where wrecks have occurred (giving dates, casualties, and such information as will properly identify same) that could have been averted had the locomotives been equipped with headlights of sufficient power; also specific instances where such accidents were averted because of the locomotives having been equipped with proper headlights.

"That we furnish each lodge in each State with the name and addresses of their Congressmen and request them to write a suitable letter to each urging them to support this headlight bill.

"That we address a suitable letter to W. S. Stone, grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, requesting that he take similar action through the divisions of that organization.

"That a copy of this indorsement of House bill No. 103 be forwarded to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and to Congressman JOHN E. RAKER."

Yours, truly,

W. S. CARTER,
President.

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
Peoria, Ill., July 12, 1913.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, Washington D. C.

DEAR SIR: By instructions of the twenty-sixth convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, held in the city of Washington, D. C., during the month of June, 1913, the following resolution is transmitted for your information:

"Whereas the law to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto, was passed by Congress as a result of long and vigorous efforts on the part of this and kindred organizations whose members were being killed or injured by boiler accidents; and

"Whereas the passage and enforcement of this law has greatly added to the safety and comfort of locomotive firemen and enginemen, and has facilitated train movement and reduced engine failures by bringing about improved conditions of the motive power to which the provisions of the law apply; and

"Whereas it is a well-known fact that accidents and derailments are frequently due to the defective condition of locomotive machinery, which is not covered by the law, and that additional protection to locomotive firemen and enginemen, and to the traveling public, would result from an extension of its provisions to cover all parts of the locomotive as well as the boiler and its appurtenances: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this convention indorse the present locomotive-boiler inspection law and commend the efficient and practical manner in which it has been enforced by the Locomotive Boiler Inspection Division of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and be it further

"Resolved, That this convention earnestly urge Congress to enact, and the President to approve, such additional legislation as may be necessary to extend the authority of the Locomotive Boiler Inspection Division of the Interstate Commerce Commission to cover all parts of the locomotives and tenders, so that when locomotives are operated with any defect which makes them in an unsafe or improper condition for service, the same action may be taken and penalties applied that now apply to 'locomotive boilers and their appurtenances'; and be it further

"Resolved, That a special committee be appointed to deliver this resolution to the President."

Yours, respectfully,

W. S. CARTER,
President.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By instructions of the twenty-sixth convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, held in the city of Washington, D. C., during the month of June, 1913, the following resolutions adopted by that convention are hereby transmitted for your information and consideration:

"Whereas the absence of native Americans in our merchant marine is conclusive evidence that the living conditions of our seamen are so far below the usual standards as to cause our men and boys to shun this calling; and

"Whereas the increase in wrecks of vessels and the increase in the loss of life proves that the standard of skill of the men employed is continually deteriorating, the dangers to life at sea increasing; and

"Whereas the official investigation of wrecks all point to and demand some real and effective remedy; and

"Whereas congressional committees have had hearings during the sessions of Congress for the last dozen years, and there has finally passed the House a measure which has since had the unqualified approval of the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor: Therefore be it

"Resolved by this the Twenty-sixth Convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, That we indorse Senate bill No. 4 and urge its adoption as recommended by the departments above referred to at this session of Congress; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, to the President of the United States, and to Senator LA FOLLETTE, the author of the bill in the Senate."

Yours, respectfully,

W. S. CARTER, President.

Attest:

A. H. HAWLEY,
General Secretary and Treasurer.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I hold no brief to speak for the present Democratic administration in relation to the Caminetti-McNab controversy. But I can not remain idly by and permit stand-pat Republican politicians to traduce—and in my judgment willfully misrepresent and misinterpret—the actions of Secretary Wilson and Attorney General McReynolds in this matter. I do not believe that the Attorney General, as the head of the Department of Justice in this city, should have the power to control Federal court prosecutions in distant States. This power should be vested in the local courts and attorneys alone. However, for many years the Attorney General has directed at will such prosecutions. Indeed, they have ordered the local attorneys to dismiss prosecutions, and in the noted case of the prosecution of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, in the southern district of Oklahoma, in the year 1905, the Attorney General peremptorily ordered the local attorney to dismiss said indictment before the creation of the new State. This order was made and these men were never tried, though it is well known that they were guilty, as charged, with defrauding the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma out of the sum of $28,876.90. Now, in this Caminetti case, a short continuance was all that was asked. Why did not these valorous defenders of justice criticize President Roosevelt and Taft for dismissing many prosecutions? Mr. Speaker, the editorials of several of the leading papers of the United States will answer my question more fully than I have time to do, and suffice it for me to say that I fully concur in their statements and conclusions.

These editorials are as follows, viz:

[From the Washington Post.]

THE DIGGS-CAMINETTI CASE.

The political twist that has been given the Diggs-Caminetti case was well illustrated at San Francisco Tuesday, when United States Judge Van Fleet was compelled to rebuke the grand jury for filing a report in which the jury assailed Attorney General McReynolds and President Wilson. The offensive report was returned to the jury with the sharp reminder that it had better attend to its own business and not set itself up as a critic of national officers.

There has been altogether too much buncombe and hysteria in this case—buncombe on the part of the politicians who are using it for their own advantage, and hysteria on the part of ill-informed persons who have been misled into thinking that "white slavers" guilty of an atrocious crime have been protected by the Government.

The evidence against Diggs and Caminetti is conclusive. The outcome of the trial, whether conducted immediately or whether it be postponed, is a foregone conclusion. There was no palliation in Washington of the hideous offense, and no evidence has been adduced to show that the Government was derelict in any respect in working up the case against the defendants. It was cunningly made to appear, however, that the Government was willing, and even anxious, to defeat the ends of justice by postponing the case a couple of months. If there had been any such monstrous motive in the hearts of the Government chiefs there would have been justification for the indignation that has been expressed. But the remote danger in delay was grossly exaggerated in order to cast discredit upon the President and his Attorney General. The natural tendency of the public to resent interference with the course of justice was fomented into hysterical indignation by politicians for their own purposes.

The Diggs-Caminetti case in itself is shocking enough, but it is made much worse by muckraking politicians who use it for the purpose of imputing base motives to the heads of the Government.

[From the Dallas Morning News, Dallas, Tex., June 28, 1913.]

"Frightened rabbits never got away quicker than the President and the Attorney General when this matter was brought up," exclaims Mr. MANN, the minority leader in the House, in referring to the California white-slave episode. And yet we may be sure that if the President had faltered with this situation for as long as a day Mr. MANN would have been even more indignant and have declared, when finally the President had acted, that he had been reluctantly driven to act by outraged public opinion. All which is merely illustrative of the petty and demagogic motives that make up so large a part of our party politics. The action of Secretary Wilson and of Attorney General McReynolds was a gross and inexcusable blunder, but there has not been disclosed one fact or circumstance to suggest that either of them was actuated by unworthy motive. As for the course of the President, both the precise action that he took and the promptness with which he took it deserve the applause of the whole country, and if there were more sincerity in our political controversies and a greater regard for the truth, Republicans would be as ready as Democrats to applaud him. Not the least regrettable consequence of such episodes as this is the exhibition of hypocrisy which they usually occasion.

ON DRESS PARADE.

The process of extracting political buncombe out of the Caminetti-McNab episode continues.

Never before were so many gentlemen shocked at a white-slave case. Never before were so many alleged virtuous persons thundering in the index. More apostles of virtue are on dress parade now than at any time in a century. From the racket raised one would think there never was a white-slave case before. Gentlemen are holding up their hands in holy horror, and many of them are gentlemen who have probably been helping to perpetuate vice, who have been extracting profits from vice and have helped to furnish recruits for vice.

Young Caminetti is vile. No postponement of his case should have been requested by the Secretary of Labor. Attorney General McReynolds ought not to have postponed the cases at the request of the Secretary of Labor. The whole incident has been blundering.

But thousands of other cases have been postponed by order of the Attorney General. The case against the Chicago beef packers was postponed by order of the Attorney General until the packers finally escaped conviction by pleading the statute of limitation in court. Not one of the gentlemen now yelling their heads off was up protesting against the order of postponement then. Mr. McNab was not then so outraged by a postponement that freed men who have indirectly extorted millions from their countrymen. Congressman MANN, who was virtuously vociferous on the floor, attacking the President, never lifted his voice then.

The Sherman law has been a law more than 20 years, and its provisions for sending trust magnates to jail have been postponed by Republican Attorney Generals so consistently and so studiously that not one captain of industry has ever been jailed.

But no McNab has ever resigned before; no Congressman KAHN, of California, has ever protested; no Congressman MANN has ever been shocked.

But they are all whooping it up now, whooping it up as though young Caminetti were the original white slaver and they the cleanest, most virtuous persons outside of paradise.

Young Caminetti will be thoroughly prosecuted, and he ought to be. But for the itch of some gentlemen for office and but for their desire to do something by which to exploit themselves for office, he could have been tried, convicted, and punished and the country been spared the hideous details of his crime.

The main feature of the whole hullabaloo is the willingness of the McNabs and others to capitalize the nasty facts of a white-slave case as a means of getting official position.

M'NAB AND HIS PEARS.

One Mr. McNab, of San Francisco, who happened to have held over as United States district attorney for California, worked up a violent wrath a few days ago and forthwith telegraphed his resignation to the President for immediate action. The McNab grievance was that a couple of criminal cases which he had a palpitating ambition to try at once were postponed for a few months, and immediately he concluded that there was a dark and deep-laid conspiracy hatching somewhere in the Department of Justice at Washington. Whereupon the President, harking to the McNab anxiety, investigated, found that the California lawyer was wrong, and let Mr. McNab out of a job precisely as the lawyer had requested in various kinds of language, following rather voluminous intimation and suggestion.

Now it appears to the satisfaction of everyone save McNab and a few of his cronies close to the singing waves of the Golden Gate that there never was any intention of deferring the trial of the cases indefinitely and that everything was done in legal fashion, just as is agreed every day in law courts to meet fair and reasonable conveniences. The accused will be tried in the near future, but the prosecutor will not be McNab. This will likely displease the gentleman with the distended and vociferous vocabulary, but it will hardly hurt the administration of justice much.

The McNab idea was to besmirch the character of United States Attorney General McReynolds and incidentally to play a little game of small politics, which might inure to the standing of the stand-pat wing of the Republican Party, of which he is a stern and inflexible pillar. But between the President and the Attorney General they have effectually punctured the scheme. McNab says the incident is now closed. So is McNab, glory be!

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, volumes have been written upon the Panama Canal project, but because of the lack of knowledge of many of the authors, there has been consequent inaccuracy in the statements of those dealing with the subject, and I am constrained to the belief that a vast majority of the people to-day are as ignorant of the facts upon this subject as I confess myself to have been previous to my recent semiofficial visit to the Canal Zone.

Undoubtedly many have spoken or written with earnest desire to properly portray the wonders of this stupendous undertaking. Few possess sufficient knowledge of this particular kind of work to enable them to properly describe the active operations of the canal commission.

That the work of building the canal requires high-class mechanical skill and ingenuity, none can gainsay. Our able commission has perfected an organization of men who are peers in their respective professions. They have resolutely and diligently pursued the policy laid down with the beginning of this gigantic task in 1904, have surmounted innumerable unforeseen obstacles, and are now nearing the completion of the work which, when completed, will stand a perpetual monument to American skill, courage, and ingenuity.

The following facts, prepared by William M. Baxter, jr., official guide and lecturer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, will be found a descriptive, instructive, and interesting story from an absolutely reliable and authoritative source.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

THE CANAL ZONE.

"The Canal Zone is a strip of land 10 miles wide, 5 miles each side of the center line of the canal, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. All told, it contains 436 square miles, of which the United States now owns about 363 square miles. The remainder is privately owned and was not acquired by the Government, as it was not needed for the construction of the canal. If, however, this land should ever be needed, the United States can by its treaty right acquire, either by purchase or by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, any lands, buildings, water rights, or other properties necessary for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of the canal.

"The two cities of Panama and Colon, although within the boundaries of the Canal Zone, are excluded from it and are under the Government of Panama. They have no outlet, however, except through the zone. The United States reserves the right to enforce sanitary ordinances in those two cities, and also to maintain public order in the event that the Republic of Panama is unable to do so.

ROUTE OF CANAL.

"The canal traverses this zone from Colon to Panama in a general southeasterly direction, Panama being located 22 miles east of a line running due south from Colon.

"In passing through the canal from the Atlantic vessels enter a sea-level channel extending from deep water in the Atlantic to the foot of the locks at Gatun. This channel is 7 miles in length, 500 feet wide, and 41 feet deep.

"At Gatun, vessels are lifted from sea level to 85 feet above through a flight of three locks, passing directly into the waters of Gatun Lake.

"Gatun Lake is an artificial body of water with an area of approximately 164 square miles. This lake is formed by impounding the waters of the River Chagres and its tributaries by means of a large dam at Gatun, where there is a break in the range of hills which surround the basin of the Chagres. By building a dam a mile and a half long across this gap, it is possible to back up the waters of the Chagres and form the Gatun Lake. The surface of this lake stands 85 feet above sea level, the summit level of the canal, and extends from Gatun clear through the Culebra Cut to the southern end at Pedro Miguel, a distance of 32 miles. From the foregoing it can be clearly seen that the Culebra Cut is merely a spur of the Gatun

Lake, the same water level existing in the cut as in the balance of the lake.

"Vessels after entering the lake may go at practically full speed for a distance of 23 miles from Gatun to the mouth of the cut. The first 16 miles of the channel through the lake is to be 1,000 feet wide, and is marked by buoys on the surface of the lake; then for 4 miles the channel is to be 800 feet wide, narrowing to 500 feet for 3 miles before entering the cut. Through the Culebra Cut, which is 9 miles in length, the channel is to be 300 feet in width at the bottom. Passing through this cut at a reduced speed, vessels arrive at the Pedro Miguel Lock at the south end, through which they are lowered in one step from 85 feet above sea level to 55 feet above, a drop of 30 feet, passing out into Miraflores Lake, a small artificial lake covering an area of about 2 square miles. This lake is formed by impounding the waters of the Cocoli, the Rio Grande, and the Pedro Miguel Rivers by means of the dam, locks, and spillway at Miraflores. The dam at this point runs practically parallel to the locks on their west side instead of at right angles to them. This is done in order to take in the Cocoli River, which comes in from the west, striking midway of the locks, which makes it necessary either to divert this stream or else to build a dam so as to throw it back into the lake. The latter plan gives additional water for the lake and avoids the silting up of the sea-level portion of the canal at the point at which the diverted Cocoli would enter it. The spillway is located on the east side of the locks between the side wall and a rocky point, and is of sufficient size to discharge all the water that might flow through one of the twin locks at Pedro Miguel in the event that an accident should establish free communication between Gatun and Miraflores Lakes. In this way an accident at Pedro Miguel does not necessarily endanger the locks at Miraflores.

"Passing through the Miraflores Lake, a distance of a mile and a half, through a channel 500 feet in width, the vessels arrive at the Miraflores Locks and pass down through two locks in flight from 55 feet above sea level to the sea-level channel on the Pacific side, steaming out through this channel from the foot of the locks at Miraflores to deep water in the Pacific, a distance of 8 miles.

"The total length of the canal is 50½ miles and the time for passing through from one ocean to the other will be from 10 to 12 hours, according to the speed a vessel maintains in the lake area. Three hours of this time are taken up in passing through the six locks. Of the total length of the canal, 40 miles will be of sufficient width to allow vessels to go at practically full speed, there being 15 miles of sea-level channel, 7 on one side and 8 on the other, and 25 miles of open lake navigation in the two lakes, in all of which the minimum channel width is to be 500 feet, and the maximum 1,000 feet. This leaves only 10½ miles which is at all narrow, 9 miles being in the cut where the bottom width is to be 300 feet and through which vessels will go at a reduced rate of speed, and the remainder being through the locks, where the vessel will be towed by means of electric towing engines. Everywhere except through the locks vessels will go under their own power.

OCEAN LEVELS.

"The general conception seems to be that the Pacific Ocean is higher than the Atlantic; this, however, is not the case. Mean sea level, the point midway between extreme high and low tide, is exactly the same in both the Atlantic and the Pacific. The difference is all in the tides. There is an average tide on the Pacific of 20 feet, while there are approximately but 20 inches of tide on the Atlantic side.

"This excessively high tide on the Pacific side is apparently due to the shape of the Bay of Panama, which, being shaped like a funnel, tends to exaggerate the action of the tide. The same thing occurs at several other points throughout the world, the most remarkable case being the Bay of Fundy in Nova Scotia, where the tide sometimes rises and falls 60 feet.

BREAKWATERS.

"Breakwaters are being constructed on both the Pacific and the Atlantic sides. The one on the Pacific end is simply an extension of a large dump at East Balboa of material excavated from the Culebra Cut, connecting Naos Island with the mainland, and designed to cut off a cross current which comes in at right angles to the line of the canal. This current, although moving slowly, carries an enormous amount of silt and sand, and it was to prevent the filling in of the sea-level portion of the canal that this breakwater was constructed.

"The Toro Point breakwater on the Atlantic side extends northeast from Toro Point a distance of 11,000 feet, and is designed to protect the Bay of Limon from heavy storms which occur during the winter months and are commonly known as 'northers.' These storms are of such violence that when one occurs vessels can not lie at the docks at Cristobal and Colon, but are forced to move out into deep water to seek shelter farther down the coast in the land-locked harbor of Porto Bello. In addition to this breakwater a mole is being built in connection with the dock-improvement work at Cristobal, behind which the docks will be constructed. If it should be found, after this mole is completed, that still further protection is required, then a second breakwater will be extended from the headland opposite Toro Point.

FRENCH WORK.

"Active work was started by the French on their canal in 1881, and this first French company, which was organized by De Lesseps, failed during the latter part of 1888, after spending $260,000,000. For five years the company remained in the hands of a receiver, and in 1894 the new French company was organized and kept up the work on a very small scale until 1904, when the United States took over the construction.

"The plan of this last French company was to build a lock-type canal with a total of eight locks and a summit level through the Culebra Cut at 97 feet above sea level. Starting just behind Cristobal Point, in order to secure the protection of that point against the northers, and extending for 16 miles inland to Bohio, the canal was to be a sea-level type. At Bohio a dam and two locks were to be located, forming the Bohio Lake, with a surface level of 65 feet above sea level. Passing through this lake a distance of 14 miles the vessels would arrive at Bas Obispo, at the northern end of the cut, where it was intended to locate two more locks with a combined lift of 32 feet. In order to secure water for the summit level through the cut it would have been necessary to build an additional reservoir at Alhajuela, farther up the valley of the Chagres, bringing a ditch line along the hillsides from this lake down and into the cut. Passing through the cut, vessels were to be lowered to the Pacific through four locks, one at Paraiso, two at Pedro Miguel, and one at Miraflores, from which point a sea-level canal 8 miles long led out into deep water in the Pacific.

FRENCH PURCHASE.

"The rights and property of this French company were purchased by the United States for $40,000,000, and up to date our country has realized on this purchase, on a very conservative estimate, over $42,000,000.

"Out of 80,000,000 cubic yards of excavation work which the French company had done only 30,000,000 yards were useful in the construction of the present type of canal, and in estimating the value of the French purchase an allowance of $25,380,240 was made for this excavation work. It had cost approximately $120,000,000.

"The value of the Panama Railroad was estimated at $9,000,000. This railroad was acquired by the French at a cost of $18,000,000. In addition to these two main items, the purchase included a great deal of machinery, and the commission is to-day using 85 French locomotives and 7 ladder dredges included in the property purchased. The French also turned over a great many buildings, maps, and scientific data, including records of the flow of the Chagres River through a period of 15 years. On these records it is impossible to place any cash value, as they would not have been available at any price had not the French kept these records, and with the present type of canal it is a matter of vital importance to be able to estimate accurately the volume of the flow of the Chagres, as it is the Chagres that supplies the water to fill the Gatun Lake and make the lockages through the canal. Now, due to the fact that we have secured these French records, we have a complete record of the flow of the Chagres extending through a period of 23 years.

RELOCATION OF PANAMA RAILROAD.

"As the construction of the canal progressed, it became necessary from time to time to abandon small sections of the original Panama Railroad line, which was built in 1850 by three Americans—Aspinwall, Stephens, and Chauncey. In 1908 the section between Mindi and Tiger Hill was relocated, as the old line passed right through the site of the Gatun Dam and Locks. In 1910 the section between Pedro Miguel and Corozal was relocated, establishing the line permanently at an elevation sufficiently high to be above the level of Miraflores Lake, and on February 15, 1912, the relocated line between Gatun and Matachin was put into service, as the rising water of the Gatun Lake, due to the closing up of the Chagres at Gatun on February 9, soon flooded most of the old line between these points.

"The Gatun Lake now stands 50 feet above sea level, at which elevation it floods the old railroad right of way to about Tabernilla and covers an area of over 90 square miles.

"Finally, with the canal completed, a new railroad will have been constructed, running from Colon to Panama entirely on the east side of the canal. The new road after leaving Gatun swings east along the hillsides, and crossing through the lake on high earth fills, follows the borders of the lake to Gamboa, where it crosses the Chagres on a steel-girder bridge a quarter of a mile long. From here it swings away from the cut and, passing around back of Gold Hill, follows the Pedro Miguel Valley to Pedro Miguel. Originally it was intended to carry the railroad through the cut on a bench 10 feet above the water, but the slides in the cut made that impracticable.

GATUN DAM AND LAKE.

"The Gatun Dam is a huge earth structure and is, in fact, more of a mountain than a dam. It is so constructed as to complete the natural range of mountains which, excepting at this one point, entirely surround the low-lying basin of the Chagres. By completing this basin it is possible to retain the waters of the Chagres and thereby form the Gatun Lake.

"The dam is constructed of two outer walls of dry fill, a large part of which was excavated from the Culebra Cut. These two walls, or toes, as they are usually called, were constructed so as to be 1,200 feet apart (inside measurement) and this space in between the two walls was filled with a mixture of sand and clay which was sucked up from the river bed of the Chagres, both above and below the dam, by means of large suction dredges, and then pumped through long pipe lines into the space between the two walls of dry-earth fill. About 20 per cent of the material passing through these pipe lines was solid matter, the balance water. After the solid matter settled the surplus water was drained off and in that way the inner portion of the dam was built up. This inner core is usually known as the hydraulic core and forms the water-tight portion of the dam. After the hydraulic core had been carried a short way above the water level it was discontinued, and the outer walls were then carried higher and closer together until they entirely encased and capped over the inner core.

"The Gatun Dam at the base is 2,100 feet, or about a half mile, thick—400 feet thick at the water surface and 100 feet wide across the crest. The crest of the dam stands 105 feet above sea level and 20 feet above the surface of the water of the lake. The length of the dam measured along the crest is 7,500 feet, but of this length only 500 feet will be subject to the full pressure of 85 feet of water, due to the natural rise of the ground along the inner slopes of the dam.

"In connection with this dam it is interesting to know that a Frenchman named Lepinay was the first to propose the plan of constructing a dam at Gatun. He proposed this plan in 1879 to the International Scientific Congress which had been convened at Paris to determine upon the general route of the proposed canal, but De Lesseps, who was the leading spirit of this Congress, was so strong an advocate of the sea-level canal that Lepinay's plan was hardly discussed, and is simply a matter of record.

SPILLWAY.

"The spillway, which is located about midway of the dam, is built right into a natural hill which stood at an elevation of 110 feet above sea level. This hill was practically solid rock, so it was only necessary to cut a channel 300 feet wide through this hill and line it with concrete, building a dam across the head of this channel to form the spillway or regulating works for Gatun Lake. This dam forms nearly a semicircle across the head of the spillway channel and will be constructed of solid concrete up to elevation 69. At this level piers rise 45 feet apart on the crest of the solid portion of the dam, and in between these piers come the steel gates 19 feet high which control the level of the lake.

"With these gates closed the crest of the dam would be 88 feet above sea level, so that it would be possible to store up water in the Gatun Lake up to about 87 feet above sea level. The normal level of the lake is to be 85 feet, and it will be maintained at that level during most of the year; just at the last of the rainy season, however, the lake level will be brought up to 87 in order to supply the water for lockages during the dry season. This will give an additional 2 feet of water over an area of 164 square miles, which would be sufficient to make 58 lockages a day during the dry season; that is 10 more than could possibly be made with vessels following one another at intervals of one hour.

"With the lake at 85 the spillway will be capable of discharging 154,000 cubic feet per second, which is more than the greatest momentary discharge on the Chagres River at Gatun.

"If the Gatun Lake should ever go to elevation 92 the spillway would be capable of discharging over 200,000 cubic feet of water per second, which is very nearly equal to the discharge of the Horseshoe Falls at Niagara. In addition to the control of the Chagres effected by means of the spillway, there is the great reservoiring effect of the Gatun Lake, it being of such great area that it would take the greatest known flood of the Chagres River nine hours to raise the level of the lake 1 foot, even though no water was discharging through the spillway at Gatun.

WATER SUPPLY.

"To those who are skeptical as to the supply of water which will be available to fill the Gatun Lake the following figures may be of interest:

"The rainy season on the Isthmus usually extends through the last eight months of the year and the remaining four months make up the dry season.

"At Colon the average annual rainfall amounts to 130 inches a year and, as one comes across the Isthmus from Colon to Panama, the rainfall decreases gradually until at Panama the rainfall averages 70 inches per annum. Now, as one goes east and west from the zone, one gets into sections that are more mountainous in which it rains almost every day in the year, so that at Porto Bello one finds an annual average rainfall of 173 inches. In 1909 Porto Bello had 237 inches of rain; during one month of that year it had 58 inches, or more than the average annual rainfall around New York or Boston, which is 40 to 45 inches.

"Porto Bello also holds the record for 24 hours' rainfall, which amounted to 10.86 inches. The greatest recorded rainfall for one hour is 5.86 inches at Balboa in June, 1905. The heaviest rainfall of short duration occurred at Porto Bello in December, 1911, amounting to 2.46 inches in three minutes.

"The area drained by the Chagres and its tributaries is 1,320 square miles, and in 1910 the volume of the discharge of that river at Gatun equaled once and a half the volume of water that will be contained in the Gatun Lake. At Gamboa the river has been known to rise 40 feet in 24 hours and to discharge one hundred times the water that it does in the dry season, amounting during one flood to a flow of 170,000 cubic feet per second, which equals two-thirds of the volume of water which passes over the Horseshoe Falls at Niagara.

POWER PLANTS.

"On the east side of the spillway will be located a large hydroelectric plant. This plant will take water from the Gatun Lake, pass it through turbines, and discharge it through openings in the side wall of the spillway channel, thereby generating all the power necessary to operate the lock machinery throughout the entire length of the canal. This plant consists of three 2,000-kilowatt generators, one of which is a reserve, producing ordinarily over 5,000 horsepower, with a reserve of 2,500 horsepower.

"The fall from the level of Gatun Lake to the level of the spillway floor being 75 feet, the supply of water for operating this plant will be ample at all times of the year.

"As an extra precaution, however, the present 6,000-horsepower construction plant at Miraflores, which is an oil-burning steam plant, will be retained as an auxiliary to the Gatun plant should it ever be needed.

CULEBRA CUT.

"The Culebra Cut, from which it was necessary to excavate over 105,000,000 cubic yards of rock and earth, representing nearly half of the excavation work on the entire canal, begins at the point where the canal leaves the valley of the Chagres, near Bas Obispo, and follows the winding valley of the Rio Obispo until it reaches the Continental Divide, near Culebra. After cutting through the divide it follows the valley of the Rio Grande to Pedro Miguel.

"The cut is 9 miles long and will be 300 feet wide on the bottom. At all the angles it is widened out sufficiently to allow a vessel 1,000 feet long to make the turn with perfect ease. The average depth to which it was necessary to excavate below the natural surface was approximately 120 feet through the entire length of the cut. At the point where the Continental Divide was severed, between Gold Hill and Contractor's Hill, the cutting will average 375 feet.

EXCAVATION.

"On January 1, 1913, there remained to be excavated throughout the cut 5,501,419 cubic yards of material. In the year 1911, 16,600,000 cubic yards were excavated; so that at this time there remains to be taken out less material than was excavated in the past 12 months. The 5,501,419 cubic yards which are still to be excavated lie in the cut in the shape of a mound 4 miles long at the base and 25 feet high. At the highest point this summit is located just opposite Culebra, and the mound slopes both ways from that level, so that on either end of the cut a point is reached where the excavation work has been carried down to the final grade. Thirty-eight steam shovels are at work excavating this material, each one taking out on an average 1,500 cubic yards of rock and earth each day. Records have been made, however, of over 4,000 cubic yards in eight hours. As a matter of fact, the number of hours that a steam shovel is generally employed in loading cars amounts to only about six, as the problem in the cut is more one of transportation than of excavation, and it is not possible to keep trains standing under the shovels more than six hours out of the eight. All told, there are now about 75 miles of track in the cut, of which it is necessary to move about a mile each day. At the present time about 150 loaded trains of earth are passing out of the cut daily, but at the time when the excavation work was at its maximum 175 trains were leaving each day, which amounted to about one train every two and one-half minutes. The monthly output from the cut reaches close to 1,500,000 cubic yards.

"The buckets used on most of the shovels in the cut load 4 and 5 cubic yards at a time, which by weight means from 6 to 7½ tons to the bucketful.

DRILLING AND BLASTING.

"All of the material which is excavated by the shovels is first drilled and then blasted before it can be handled, and in the length of the cut a great number of drills are constantly working. All of these drills, of which there are two styles, churn and tripod, are operated by compressed air supplied from one long air main which parallels the line of the cut. Three compressor plants are pumping into this line, one located near the middle and one near each end of the line. The average depth to which the holes are drilled is 24 feet, and after drilling to this depth a small charge of dynamite is placed in the hole and discharged by means of the magneto battery, enlarging in that way the size of the hole at the bottom. Then, after the hole has cooled off it is ready to receive the large charge of dynamite varying from 75 to 200 pounds to each hole. This charge is exploded by means of the regular electric-light current, the ordinary magneto battery having been found too unreliable and its use resulted in too many misfired shots, which had to be subsequently excavated, thereby greatly endangering the lives of the workmen.

"Each month an average of 75 miles of drill holes are sunk, and if all the drill holes which have been put down since the United States has been at work were placed end to end the hole would pass entirely through the earth, coming out in the Indian Ocean south of the island of Sumatra. Five hundred thousand pounds of dynamite are used each month in the cut, and on the entire canal 800,000 pounds are consumed.

SLIDES.

"At the present time, there are in the length of the cut 19 slides varying greatly in size, the total area involved amounting to 210 acres. One of the largest is the Cucaracha slide just south of Gold Hill, which started during the French time and now covers an area of 47 acres, and is broken back a distance of 1,800 feet from the center line of the cut. A great number of smaller slides have occurred throughout the cut, the worst section for slides being right around the town of Culebra. From time to time small slides have occurred here on both the east and west banks, which have gradually combined, forming two large slides, until they have become more difficult to handle than the Cucaracha slide.

"Two general characters of slides are found in the cut. One is the true slide, which is a mass of earth that is sliding from a hard surface that pitches toward the cut, and this slide is glacial in its action. There are no means of overcoming or correcting this character of slide; the only thing that can be done is to take the material out as it slides in and continue to do so until the sliding material reaches an angle flat enough to stand. The other is a slide that is caused by the great weight of the banks on either side of the cut weighting down and squeezing out the soft underlying strata, which in giving away bulge up at the bottom of the cut, allowing the banks on either side to settle. These banks in settling break loose and begin to move toward the cut. The first movement of the banks in this kind of slide is downward and then the lateral motion follows. The slides near Culebra are of this type. In order to correct this character of slide steam shovels are working on top of the banks, taking material off the top, thereby reducing the weight of the banks and to a certain extent preventing further sliding.

DIVERSION CHANNELS.

"As the cut follows the valleys of the Rio Obispo and Rio Grande, it was necessary to divert these streams and their main tributaries to prevent the cut from being flooded during the rainy season. So that paralleling the line of the cut on the west side we have the Rio Grande and Comacho diversions, and on the east side the Obispo diversion. These diversion channels parallel the line of the cut and carry off the water of these small streams, as well as a large part of the surface drainage-water, thus preventing the flooding of the cut itself. These channels were all started by the French, but were enlarged after the United States began work on the canal.

LOCKS.

"There are six locks in the canal, three in flight at Gatun, one at Pedro Miguel, and two in flight at Miraflores. All locks are constructed in pairs, so that vessels can go in opposite directions at the same time. Each lock or flight of locks is in general to be reserved for ships going in one direction, the twin lock or flight being used for vessels going in the opposite direction.

"The length of the lock chamber is 1,000 feet, the width 110 feet, and the depth of water over the sills 41½ feet in fresh water and 40 feet in salt water.

"The Pedro Miguel Lock is the same in all the essential features as the other locks, and as there is only one lift at this point it is the best one to describe.

"A simple definition of a lock is a walled chamber between two bodies of water of different levels having gates at either end, in which it is possible to confine vessels while they are being raised or lowered from one level to another by allowing water to flow in or out of the lock chamber.

"The method of raising or lowering the level of the water in the lock chamber varies on different lock canals. The lock chambers on most of the old canals are emptied or filled through sluice gates that slide up and down in the lock gates themselves. This system, however, caused a great deal of surging of the water at that end of the lock at which it was flowing in or out, and the system that has been adopted on the Panama Canal was designed with the idea of avoiding this disturbance of the water in the lock.

"All the locks on the Panama Canal have two parallel lock chambers, separated by a center wall. The water is brought in or out of these chambers through huge tunnels 18 feet in diameter passing lengthwise of the lock through the center and side walls. Branching out from these tunnels at right angles and running out under the lock floor are laterals, and these laterals communicate with the lock chamber through openings in the lock floor. The flow of water in or out of the lock is controlled by the gate valves located at both the upper and lower ends of the feed tunnels. In order to raise the water in the lock chamber the valves at the lower end are closed and the ones at the upper end opened. The water then flows from the upper level into the lock, passing down the tunnel in the side wall, and out through the laterals under the floor, coming up through the openings in the floor. It continues to flow in this way until the elevation of the water in the lock chamber is the same as that of the water above. To lower the water in the lock the process is simply reversed. The upper valves are closed and the lower ones opened. The water then flows out from the lock chamber and, passing back through the same tunnels that brought it in, seeks the level of the water below. So that in order to raise a vessel from one level to another the level of the water in the lock chamber is brought to the same level as that at which the vessel stands.

"The lock gates are then opened, the vessel passes into the chamber, and the gates are closed. Water is then allowed to flow into the lock until the vessel is raised to the level of the upper body of water, and with the same level on both sides of the upper gates those gates are thrown open, the vessel passing out at a greater elevation than that at which it entered the lock.

"The big tunnels passing through the side walls are the main operating tunnels, the one through the center wall being an auxiliary used to assist in filling the lock during the latter part of the operation, thereby increasing the volume of the inflow at the time when the velocity of the water entering the lock from the side wall tunnels is decreasing, keeping up in that way an average rate of filling which would amount to about 2 feet per minute. So that at Pedro Miguel, where the lift is 30 feet, a vessel would be raised from one level to the other in 15 minutes. The desired rate of filling can be kept up for the 600-foot and 400-foot locks by the side culvert only. It is probable that the center wall tunnel will be used only in case of the 1,000-foot lockages.

"From the center wall tunnel laterals, which alternate with laterals from the side walls, lead out under the floors of both lock chambers. They are controlled, independent of the main tunnel, by cylindrical valves located at the head of each tunnel, so that it is possible to close the laterals all the way down on one side, opening those on the other side, and feed water to one lock chamber; or, by reversing the process, feed water to the other chamber. By opening the valves to the laterals on both sides it is possible to pass water through from one chamber to the other, in that way effecting a saving of water whenever vessels are going in opposite directions at the same time.

"Another means of economizing water is by using the intermediate lock gate which divides the 1,000-foot lock into two sections of 600 and 400 feet, respectively; so that in putting through small vessels it is not necessary to fill or empty the entire chamber.

ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVES.

"The protective devices are one of the most interesting features of the lock construction, and of these the electric locomotives are the most important. About 90 per cent of all accidents to other locks have been due to misunderstanding in signals between the captain and engineer of the vessel, and all accidents of that kind will be eliminated by requiring vessels to go through the locks in tow of electric locomotives operating on the center and side walls of the locks. A vessel comes in and ties up to the center wall, which is extended beyond the side walls at both the upper and lower ends of the lock simply to act as a wharf or mooring wall. The vessel waits here until the locomotives come down and tow it up to a point where the locomotives on the side walls make fast their lines. The vessel then goes into the lock chamber with two locomotives in front towing, one on either side, and two others behind to retard when she gets into proper position.

"These towing locomotives operate on tracks close to the edge of the wall and engage in a center cog rail. While running on this cog rail the maximum speed at which they can operate will be 2 miles per hour. When they have completed a tow, however, they switch over to a track farther back from the edge of the wall and here the cog rail is omitted, so that they can return at a greater speed.

PROTECTIVE CHAIN.

"Should a vessel not obey the order to stop out alongside the center wall, but come ahead, it first would encounter a chain stretched across the entrance to the lock chamber. This chain connects on either side with large hydraulic cylinders located in shafts in the lock walls. The pressure from these cylinders causes the chain as it plays out to offer more and more resistance to the motion of the vessel. The chain is capable of stopping in 70 feet a 10,000-ton vessel running 4 miles per hour. The stock from which it is to be forged is three inches in diameter.

"When not in use the cylinders are forced up and the weight of the chain carries it down into the groove in the bottom of the lock floor and the vessel passes over it.

GUARD GATES.

"If a vessel should break through the fender chain, it would then ram the lock gate; but with this contingency in view two gates instead of one have been provided at the upper and lower ends of the highest lock in each flight, the upper or guard gate of each pair serving to protect the lower gate from ramming. Both gates would have to be broken down to put the lock out of commission.

LOWER GUARD GATE.

"At the lower end of all the sets of locks a small guard gate has been put in, mitering the other way from the main lock gates, which miter toward the high level, and it has been designed to serve two purposes: First, as a coffer gate or dam if at any time it is necessary to pump the water from the lower lock chamber; second, as a guard gate to the lower lock gate, for, mitering as it does, it will stand a heavier blow from the lower side than the lock gate itself.

EMERGENCY DAM.

"If all of these devices should fail and there should be an accident which would establish free communication between the two levels above and below a lock, a most destructive accident would be the result, for the velocity of the water flowing through the lock chamber would be 24 feet per second and the discharge would amount to 90,000 cubic feet per second. In order to shut off this water and prevent it from tearing out the lock floor it is necessary to employ a device known as an emergency dam, of which there are two installed at the upper end of each set of locks, one for either side. These resemble a swing bridge, and when put into use they are swung out across the lock and from their lower side a set of openwork wickets are lowered, engaging in a grooved sill on the lock floor. When these wickets are down and in place, small plates resembling little flat cars are allowed to run down, one on each wicket, building up a row of plates across the bottom, one joining the other. When the first complete set has been let down 9 feet of water will be shut off, and then another set of plates will be let down, until finally the water rushing through the lock will be entirely shut off. Of course, there will be some seepage through the plates, but the water above this temporary dam will be still water and the electric locomotives will go down and take in tow a floating caisson, or hollow steel float, and towing it around seat it against a sill at the upper end of the lock chamber. Then by filling water into the caisson it is sunk, entirely shutting off the water flowing through the lock. The emergency dam is then raised and the necessary repairs made to the locks.

LOCK GATES.

"The construction of the lock gates is also interesting. They were built up of big horizontal girders weighing from 12 to 18 tons each, with vertical framework in between and sheathing plate both on the inside and outside of this frame. They are cellular in construction and the lower half of the gate is an air chamber which supports about three-quarters of the weight of the gate when submerged. The upper half of the gate is arranged with openings in the plates on the upstream side, so that water can flow in or out of the upper half of the gate at the same time that it flows in and out of the lock, increasing the weight of the gate as the height of the water on the outside increases, overcoming in that way the lifting effect of the air chamber in the bottom of the gate as it is placed deeper and deeper under water.

"These gates vary in height from 47 to 82 feet, and in weight from 300 to 700 tons to each half gate. If each half gate were laid flat one on top of the other they would build up a tower containing 58,000 tons of steel standing 32 feet higher than the Singer Building in New York. There are 92 half gates and each is 7 feet in thickness.

"Another interesting comparative figure is one pertaining to the excavated material. All of the excavated material which will have been taken out when the canal is completed, including the 30,000,000 cubic yards of useful French excavation, if loaded on one train of flat cars similar to the wooden cars one sees commonly on the work, would make a train over 110,000 miles long, reaching more than four times around the earth.

SANITATION.

"Not one single factor has been more important in making the construction of this canal a possibility than that of sanitation. One of the worst snags that the French ran against was this very question of sanitation. Unfortunately there are no accurate figures obtainable on the lives lost during the French time; the only figures available are for the mortality in Ancon Hospital, which for the eight years between 1881 and 1888 amounted to 5,527. But the French were at this time doing their work by contract, and each contractor was charged a dollar per day for each man he had in hospital. It will readily be understood, therefore, that if the French contractor were anything like the ordinary contractor, not a very large proportion of the sick would go to this hospital. We hear of many individual instances of heavy loss. The first French director, Mr. Dingler, came to the Isthmus with his wife and three children. At the end of the first six months all had died of yellow fever except himself. One of the French engineers, who was still on the Isthmus when we first arrived, stated that he came over with a party of 17 young Frenchmen. In a month they had all died of yellow fever except himself. The superintendent of the railroad brought to the Isthmus his three sisters; within a month they had all died of yellow fever. The mother superior of the sisters nursing in Ancon Hospital told me that she had come out with 24 sisters. Within a few years 21 had died, the most of yellow fever. Many other instances of this kind could be cited. During the eight years that the Americans have been at work on the canal the death roll has reached 5,141, of which 995 have been deaths from violence. For the fiscal year 1912 the death rate per thousand on the Isthmus was lower than in almost any large city in the United States, as the following figures will show:

Deaths from accidents	3.08
Deaths from diseases	7.08
Total deaths from all causes	10.16

"The most important work of the sanitary department and the one which has had most to do with the reduction of the death rate is undoubtedly that which has to do with the control of the breeding of mosquitoes, so that I will speak only of that one feature of its work.

"I have found it a very prevalent idea among the visitors to the Isthmus that the mosquitoes have been entirely exterminated from the zone; such, however, is not the case, for, although there are 448 square miles within the zone, the destruction of the mosquito is carried on over only about 100 square miles. Outside of this area of 100 square miles mosquitoes can be found just as thick as they ever were; but by constant vigilance and effort the number of mosquitoes in the sanitated areas has been reduced to such a very few that adult mosquitoes are but seldom seen by the casual observer.

"For the purpose of sanitation the zone is divided into sanitary districts, each district being placed in charge of a sanitary inspector. As a general rule, the sanitary work is carried on to a distance of about 1,000 yards outside the extreme limits of any inhabited district, as this has been found to be about the flying radius of the varieties of mosquitoes which the sanitary department has to deal with. The work of controlling the mosquitoes within these districts falls under three heads:

"First. Elimination of favorable breeding places by filling, drainage, removal of grass to favor evaporation, clearing of banks of streams and other bodies of water to give access to fish that eat the larvæ of the mosquitoes, removal of vegetation and other foreign matter, such as algæ, which gives shelter to the larvæ of the mosquitoes, introduction of water supplies to reduce the number of water-holding containers in which the yellow-fever mosquito breeds, and screening of such water containers as can not be done away with.

"Second. By oiling or larvaciding such bodies of water as can not be conveniently and economically eliminated, the oil used for this purpose being the ordinary crude oil and the larvacide a mixture of creosote, caustic soda, and resin.

"Third. By preventing the access of mosquitoes to the inhabitants by effectively screening as many dwellings as possible and, in addition, by catching in specially designed traps and by hand such mosquitoes as find their way into dwellings.

"By the constant application of these methods the malaria rate has been reduced from about 6.83 per cent of employees admitted each month to the hospital in 1906 to about 1 per cent per month for the current year, and in totally eliminating yellow fever from the cities of Panama and Colon and the Canal Zone, the last case of this disease having occurred in Colon in May, 1906."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. HULINGS, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GOEKE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. LA FOLLETTE, for one week, on account of illness.

To Mr. MANAHAN, for three weeks, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—FRED HOPPE.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. GARD to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers accompanying H. R. 23460, granting a pension to Fred Hoppe, Sixty-first Congress, second session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MAURY DIGGS AND DREW CAMINETTI.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration House resolution 181, that four hours of debate be had upon the resolution, one half of the time to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, myself, and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the leader of the minority, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], the leader of the Progressive Party; and that at the expiration of the four hours of debate it be in order, without amendment, to move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that there be four hours of general debate on what is known as the Kahn resolution, House resolution 181, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and one-half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], and that at the end of that time, without amendment or intervening motion, the motion to lay the resolution on the table be voted upon. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is the resolution now before the House?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then I desire to submit a preferential motion. I move that the resolution do lie on the table.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, pending the suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee, I desire to make a statement.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the House is well aware of the responsibility which is imposed upon any committee of this House in the handling of any particular resolution or bill. The committees are appointed for the purpose, and a chairman is selected in furtherance of that purpose, of giving careful and proper consideration to the matters referred to the committees. The Committee on the Judiciary gave careful consideration to this resolution and of every question touching it. They were unanimous in their report and conclusion that the resolution had accomplished its purpose, and were unanimous in the recommendation that it ought to lie on the table.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. I wanted in justice to myself to make one more observation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not want to open the matter up for debate.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will endeavor not to do that. But as in the nature of a postulate for what I was coming to say, I have said what I have.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on several occasions the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has manifested a desire to speak to this resolution. Of course it is not within the power of the committee nor any Member of this House to prevent the gentleman from California at some time during the session of Congress to speak on this subject. It occurred to the chairman of the committee and to his associates, all with whom he could confer, that it would perhaps be well under all the circumstances that the gentleman from California be permitted now to engage in the remarks that he desires to submit to the House, the range of which I can not tell, and that the chairman and the committee should also have an opportunity to reply to anything that he might say, if such reply was deemed advisable or necessary. The Attorney General has said in effect that he had no desire to withhold anything from publication pertaining to the so-called Caminetti case, but that on the contrary it is his desire that the fullest publicity be given to his acts and doings. He has concealed nothing and has done nothing for which he wants any excuse on the part of this House. Now, in pursuance of that, I will be frank to state it to the House——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I dislike to object, but I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am not going to discuss the question, but I would like to state one sentence.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not want to be in the position of objecting, but——

Mr. CLAYTON. Just one sentence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said that he wished to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to add one sentence?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. And that is, I feel myself, and my colleagues of the committee with whom I have conferred feel, in some way under obligation to make the proposition that I have made, and to respectfully ask the House to accede to it, and to respectfully insist upon it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That was not the position of the committee the other day when it reported the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution having been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], he having withdrawn his motion to lay on the table, is he not entitled to the floor for the discussion of the resolution ahead of any demands of any person to be recognized for the purpose of moving to lie on the table? It is perfectly patent, Mr. Speaker, when a bill is called up before the House, if any Member on the floor can take off his feet a person in charge of the bill by a motion to lay the bill on the table, it would be a very common method of filibustering.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to insist that I have the floor.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Section 740 of the Manual says:

> In debate the members of the committee, except the Committee of the Whole, are entitled to priority of recognition for debate, but a motion to lay a proposition on the table is in order before the Member entitled to prior recognition for debate has begun his remarks.

Therefore the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is in order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes before the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is put.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman desire to discuss this case in any way?

Mr. KAHN. No. I want to show the committee why this motion should not prevail.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McKELLAR. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] to table this resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 91, noes 67.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. CLAYTON took their places as tellers.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 75.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. We are here for all summer now.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 85, answered "present" 7, not voting 205, as follows:

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, until further notice, ending August 6, except on banking and currency.

Mr. PADGETT with Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, until further notice, ending July 26.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will begin over at the left and call the names of gentlemen desiring to change their votes.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," but on account of a pair with Mr. ALLEN, of Ohio, I wish to change my vote to "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, and he answered "Present."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how is the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. TOWNER, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. MANN. Several gentlemen state that he voted "no" on the first roll call.

The SPEAKER. The roll call shows that he did not vote at all.

Mr. MANN. A gentleman right here says he heard him respond on the first roll call.

The SPEAKER. Where is Mr. TOWNER?

Mr. MANN. I presume he is at lunch, although I do not know. He went out, presuming or knowing that he had voted.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I was here and heard Mr. TOWNER vote "no" in a very distinct voice

The SPEAKER. How did the matter of Mr. TOWNER'S vote get up?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Because his name was called on the second roll call.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I heard him vote on the first roll call, and then I heard the Clerk's voice calling his name a second time.

The SPEAKER. Of course, on the statements made, the Clerk will record him as voting "no."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I notice that I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. HINDS. I wish to withdraw my vote, and to answer "present."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I should like to inquire how the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. LEWIS, is recorded.

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He voted "no," Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must be here and attend to their own business.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He was here and voted twice, on both the first and second call.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. LEWIS, here?

Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania, and he voted "No."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if the regular order now is the proposition to instruct the conferees on the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the previous question not having been ordered upon that bill, it can come up only when that order of business is reached.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it is evident that the bill has been sent to conference. As I understand the parliamentary situation, it is this: The House had before it two Senate amendments. It acted on those two Senate amendments, disagreeing to both, I believe, and then passed a resolution asking the Senate for a conference. Now, so far as the House is concerned, it could have stopped there. It was not necessary for the House to name the conferees in order to send the bill to the Senate. As a matter of fact, it could have sent the bill to the Senate without asking for a conference at all. So I take it, under the parliamentary situation, if nothing further is done the bill will go to the Senate without further proceedings, except that there will be no conferees appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not state the whole case, though. There was a motion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] to instruct the conferees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is just what I am saying, Mr. Speaker. Now, the thing pending is not the passage of a disagreement on the part of the House to the Senate amendments. That is concluded. The bill is out of this House. The House can at any time disagree to the Senate amendments and send a bill over to the Senate without asking for a conference, and upon the Senate asking for a conference the House could subsequently, as a matter of privilege, appoint the conferees; so that, so far as the status of the bill is concerned, I take it that the bill is practically out of this House. The only question that is pending before this House is the question of appointing conferees, and that is a privileged matter in this House.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will yield for a moment——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield first to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Is seems to me, if the gentleman's position is correct, it would deprive the House of one of its undoubted rights under the rule, namely, the right to instruct the conferees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. Why not? If the gentleman's position is sound, and the Chair could at any time appoint the conferees as a matter of right, then there would be no place for the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] to instruct the conferees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman misunderstood what I stated.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to answer this question of the gentleman from Georgia first?

Mr. MANN. That matter is not before the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I do not like to be discourteous to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. The proposition I make is not that the Speaker can appoint the conferees without the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] first being voted upon. I do not contend that at all. I contend that whenever these conferees are appointed the Speaker must, prior to the appointment of the conferees, lay before the House the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]; but I do contend that this bill could have gone to the Senate without any motion to appoint conferees—absolutely so. We were not compelled to ask for a conference. We could have disagreed to the Senate amendments and sent the bill back.

Mr. HARDWICK. But we have asked the Senate for a conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. That part can go to the Senate. The bill itself can not go——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill can go to the Senate without——

Mr. HARDWICK. Not until you get the House conferees appointed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANN. On reflection I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that the bill has reached a privileged status. I doubt whether the gentleman is correct about sending the bill over to the Senate before the House has disposed of the motion before it, but that is not——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I happened to do that with one of the tariff bills in the last Congress, because I did not want to appoint the conferees.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman did not ask for a conference there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. The gentleman disagreed to the Senate amendments and let it go without asking for a conference. But I do think that the gentleman is correct in contending that the bill has reached a privileged status where it can be called up at any time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is right about that. I had the other impression at first.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman contend that it has reached that status?

Mr. MANN. The House has disposed of everything that it could dispose of in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Senate amendments were Union Calendar amendments and would have had to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, except that by unanimous consent here they were considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. But the House has disposed of those amendments by disagreeing to them, so that the matter is now before the House, not before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and hence has reached the privileged status, the House having disagreed to the Senate amendments. Otherwise the matter could never be called up, for you can not go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on this bill any longer, because there is nothing pending that could be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I notice that on the calendar for to-day appears the bill H. R. 32, being a bill to provide for the appointment of a district judge in Pennsylvania. If as a matter of fact the bill is now out of the House, why should it be upon the calendar at all?

Mr. MANN. I did not say the bill was out of the House. I do not think the bill is out of the House, but I do not think that is a question that is material.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If the bill is still in the House and it be in the House and is not finished business, is it not necessarily unfinished business?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that if the bill were in the House, and there were no question of appointing conferees at all and the Senate amendments had been disagreed to and the bill sent back to the Senate, it would still be a privileged motion in the House, and the gentleman from Alabama could move to appoint conferees and ask for a conference.

Mr. RODDENBERY. But the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to instruct the conferees, followed by the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to move the previous question, was made at a time when the House was acting as in Committee of the Whole, so far as the RECORD shows.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman asked unanimous consent that this bill might be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. When the amendments had been passed upon and voted on the status or consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole had ceased, and the status of the bill in the House then reached the stage it would have reached if the amendments had been considered in the Committee of the Whole, and the committee had risen and reported them back to the House, and the House were considering them. To appoint conferees or to ask for a conference is not a function of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but it is a function of the House itself, and this question of asking for a conference and appointing conferees on a bill in disagreement between the two Houses has always been considered a matter of privilege and is a matter of privilege at this time.

Of course, I do not mean to say that that interferes at all with the motion of the gentleman from Indiana. Whenever the matter comes up that motion comes up also, but I do contend that it is a matter of privilege for the gentleman, whenever he is recognized for that purpose by the Speaker, to move to call the matter before the House and have it disposed of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, then, the proposition before the House is to instruct the conferees in accordance with the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana, and I move the previous question on that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to instruct the conferees.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to instruct the conferees.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. WEBB, and Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

FEDERAL BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. McCOY (when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was called). Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOY. Is it in order now to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 6383) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, and so forth?

The SPEAKER. It is not. There are two limitations when the House starts on this call. Once started, the call must be finished, unless it be interrupted by a committee having business upon the calendar.

Then, after 60 minutes has been consumed, it is in order for one to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If the 60 minutes are not consumed, and the call goes clear around, then, at the end of the call, it has been ruled that it is as though 60 minutes had been consumed, and the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is then in order. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

The Clerk proceeded with and concluded the call of committees.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6383) to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6383, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCOY rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOY. I yield for a question. How long a time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MANN. I desire to be recognized in my own time.

Mr. McCOY. I believe that I should first make a statement about the bill.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to amend a section of the public buildings bill of the Sixty-second Congress, which section, No. 19, provided that the Secretary of the Treasury might sell the public building in the city of Newark, N. J., now used for the post office and for other Government uses, and invest the proceeds of the sale of that building in the purchase of a new site for a post office and other Government offices and in the erection of a new building upon that site.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds believed that it had accomplished that purpose, but when the bill came before the Secretary of the Treasury he felt it necessary to obtain an interpretation of it from the Attorney General's office, and that interpretation was that, although the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to expend for the purchase of a new site a part of the proceeds of the sale of the old site, he was not authorized to expend any part of those proceeds for the erection of a new building.

The result of that situation is this, due to one or two provisions contained in section 19 of the public buildings bill: In that bill it was provided that the Government should not be authorized, notwithstanding the proposed sale of the old building, to pay any rent for the use of that old building. The bill also provided that no money should be available for the purchase of a new site and for the erection of a new building except such money as we could get from the sale of the building and site now owned. Now, the net result of that is that we must find a purchaser for this old building under the terms of a contract providing for payments at such times as the Secretary of the Treasury will need to have money for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a new building.

Now, the would-be purchaser who signs that contract can not go into possession of the present building until the new building is completed and we are ready to occupy it. Consequently, although he is paying his money down, he will not be able to get into possession of the building and get any use of the property until such time. So the only thing for him to do when he comes to make up his mind how much he can afford to pay for this building, knowing that he will not be able to get possession of it for two and one-half years or as the matter now stands with us, perhaps not for five years, he will say, "I am going to pay out certain sums of money for certain periods of time, and, although this building and site to-day, if I could get the deed, might be worth two and one-quarter millions, if I can not get the deed for it immediately, and have to pay my money out long in advance, I have got to offer as much less for the site and the building as the amount of interest I shall lose on the money I have been paying to the Government comes to."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCOY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the bill, it proposes to authorize the sale of the site at a price not less than $1,800,000, the Government to remain in possession of the present building on this site until the new Federal building is completed and ready for occupancy?

Mr. McCOY. That is right.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that is a very good way to sell a site——

Mr. McCOY. I do not.

Mr. MANN (continuing). When the purchaser does not know whether he will be in possession in three years, five years, or seven years, and maybe longer?

Mr. McCOY. Personally, I should have prepared some other sort of provision, but that was the provision which the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds inserted.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman takes the provision of the existing law relating to this sale in this bill, I understand?

Mr. McCOY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, this bill also provides for a special architect?

Mr. McCOY. It does; yes.

Mr. MANN. The last Democratic House repealed the Tarsney Act. Now, are there special reasons why a special architect or a consulting engineer ought to be employed on this building?

Mr. McCOY. I think so, and I was just about to state the reasons, which are that we are limited in the sale of this building to obtaining for it the sum of $1,800,000. Now, it is supposed that the building and site are worth something like two million to two and one-quarter million dollars. We have had no appraisal put on it. But, as I say, the purchaser has to discount the amount he will offer for the building, because he is going to be out of possession for a long period, and if we can not get ready to complete this building by the employment of special architects, he will be forced to make so large a discount on those payments that necessarily he will be obliged to offer less than $1,800,000 for the site; and if so, the bill fails us altogether.

Mr. AUSTIN. If you should depend on the Supervising Architect's office to prepare the plans of that building, it must take its regular order, and this building will not be reached for five and one-half to six years?

Mr. McCOY. That is it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Whereas if this amendment is passed it furnishes you for immediate use an architect who will complete these plans and enable the Supervising Architect's office to complete this building within these two years and a half? And the bill itself here provides for a maximum amount to be paid the Supervising Architect which is equal to the present cost of getting out and preparing plans in the Supervising Architect's office?

Mr. McCOY. So I understand; and the money which is paid for the fees of a special architect comes out of the proceeds, and consequently the payment for such services will not in any way postpone any other project which is now in the office of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOY. For a question; yes.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. It is a short statement apropos of what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has stated. He will recall as a member of the committee that when the evidence was submitted by the committee from Newark favoring this plan, they made it perfectly clear that the situation there was extremely urgent; and I know that he and the other members of the committee who were present will bear out my colleague [Mr. McCOY] in his contention that everything that is possible to be done in order to pass this measure, which means so much to the city of Newark, should be done at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will say to the gentleman that when this bill was up recently, perhaps a week or ten days ago—and we discussed it pretty thoroughly—I stated it was the most congested Government building in the United States.

I made that statement after a personal investigation as a member of the subcommittee from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and gave the figures showing that the number of employees when the building was completed was 181, whereas at present the number is 440. The present building is wholly inadequate. It would be inhuman and cruel to the public officials to require them to occupy that overcrowded building for six and a half years, or perhaps eight years, because the Supervising Architect's office is five and a half or six years behind in its present work, and it will require a period of two or three years at least to construct a new building, which would make the period of its occupancy at least eight years. So that unless this relief is granted, the purchaser of the present lot and building must wait at least eight years before he can occupy it for his purposes, whereas under the conditions prescribed by the Treasury Department, if he buys it and pays down $800,000—the outside price for a new lot—he would be out of his money, $800,000, for eight years, and the interest on which, at 5 per cent, would amount to over $320,000.

On the other hand, if we give this relief and pass this bill, the Government employees will be relieved, the public will have an up-to-date building, such as they deserve and need in that city, at the end of two and a half years, and the Government itself would save at least $200,000 or $250,000 in the matter of interest.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOY. For a question; yes.

Mr. MONDELL. It is proposed in this bill to allow the use of 5 per cent of the cost of the building for the services of an architect?

Mr. McCOY. Not to exceed that amount.

Mr. MONDELL. That is for the purpose of expediting the erection of the building, which ought to be done probably in any event, but particularly in view of the conditions under which the building has been sold. The gentleman has suggested that if built in the usual way, under the plans of the Supervising Architect, it may be seven or eight years before the building is completed and ready for occupancy, and the bidder for the old building would be justified in assuming it would be that length of time and bid accordingly. I consider the provision for an architect a wise one, but in making this provision, would it not also be wise to estimate a reasonable length of time within which the successful bidder may be certain that he can move into and occupy his premises?

While you are attempting to provide for the completion of the building at the earlier date, are you, as a matter of fact, giving the bidder for the property any more assurance than he had before? You are encouraging his hopes and increasing his expectation of the use of the building at a reasonably early date, but you are still leaving the whole thing in the air. Under those circumstances, I doubt if you would get a better bid for the property than you would if you did not have this provision in your bill, whereas if you added an amendment to the effect that the date when the purchaser shall have possession shall not extend beyond a certain time at the utmost, then the purchaser would have an assurance upon which he can bid with some degree of certainty as to when he can enjoy the property. It seems to me that while the committee has wisely provided for expediting the erection of the new building, it has not given any assurance that will have the effect of the Government receiving a larger price for the property.

Mr. McCOY. I would say in regard to that, that in the contract which the Secretary of the Treasury will draw, and consequently in the advertisements for bids, he will undertake to specify the time not later than which the possession of the old site will be delivered.

Mr. MONDELL. Will he do that?

Mr. McCOY. He is bound to do that for the reason that the gentleman from Wyoming stated. He is bound to get the price.

Mr. MONDELL. Can he do it? Can he do it under the provisions of this act, that the purchaser shall not have the use of property until the new building is completed? Could the Secretary make a contract in the face of a mandatory provision in this bill to the effect that the Government should enjoy the use of the property until the new building was completed?

What would happen if the new building was not completed at the expiration of the period fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury in his contract? Here is the act of Congress. That governs.

Mr. McCOY. He will fix a time sufficiently long ahead to make certain of that, and I believe he will provide in the contract for a time later than that at which the title can be delivered and provide that the price will have to be increased by the proper percentage in case of an earlier delivery of possession. In other words, he will give himself plenty of time, so that beyond peradventure almost the building can be completed, and if the title to the old building is delivered sooner than that the purchaser will have to increase his price by so much.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman assume that under this legislation the Secretary of the Treasury can make a sale under which the price may be graduated, depending upon the date when the purchaser may come into possession of the property?

Mr. McCOY. No; but the Secretary of the Treasury, in the exercise of sound judgment, would, under this bill, I believe, be authorized to say to the purchaser, for instance, "We will deliver title to the old building and possession within two years and a half from a certain date." Now, if he wanted to, he could absolutely leave the contract in just that shape, and notwithstanding the Government was ready to go into possession of the new site at an earlier date, he could wait for that date so fixed and deliver possession of the old building. Now, if that is so, he could go further and say, "We may be able to deliver possession of the building six months sooner than that date, and if we do, then your price must be so much more for the property."

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman evidently has not got my idea.

Mr. McCOY. I think that I have.

Mr. MONDELL. Assuming that under this legislation the Secretary of the Treasury shall make a contract in which the property is to be turned over in a given time, if at that time the new building should not be ready for occupancy, that contract would be without force or effect in the face of this legislation.

Mr. McCOY. Yes; I think the gentleman is quite right.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me answer that.

Mr. MONDELL. What advantage would it be to the purchaser that the Secretary was willing to make a contract with him that would have no force or effect if perchance the building were not completed? It would be perfectly idle. It seems to me the way to meet it is for Congress, after consultation with the Supervising Architect's Office, to fix a date at which the purchaser may have the building. Then it is the business of the Supervising Architect, or of the architects that he employs, to finish the building by that time. It might be well to fix the penalty for failure to turn over the property at the date fixed at a sum equal to a fair rent, and it might be well to provide for a small bonus for earlier delivery of the property.

Mr. McCOY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], of the committee, to answer that.

Mr. AUSTIN. If this amendment to the original omnibus bill becomes a law, the first thing that will happen will be this: The Supervising Architect, an able and efficient man, will engage outside architects to prepare plans and specifications. He can require them to complete them within a definite time. Then he can also advertise for bids for the construction of this building under these plans and specifications, and can require the completion of the building within a fixed time; and with that information, there is no difficulty about the Secretary of the Treasury fixing a definite date when the new building will be completed and ready for occupancy on the part of the employees of the Government and when the old or present building can be delivered to the purchaser or new owner.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but as an assurance to the purchaser that would have no force or value whatever, because if perchance anything should occur to delay the building any contract or agreement that the Secretary may have entered into would have no force or effect, because Congress has provided that the Government shall enjoy the use of the old building until the new one is completed without regard to any agreement the Secretary may make.

Now let me make this suggestion to the gentleman: In a case of this kind there will not, I assume, be many bidders. I assume that there will be comparatively few people wanting to purchase. Every one of those purchasers would base his bid on the proposition that under this act he might not have the enjoyment of his property for 5, 10, or, in an extreme case, 15 years. There is nothing in this act which insures him the use of his property in a quarter of a century. It is true that you have endeavored to increase his grounds of hope and expectation relative to the early use and enjoyment of the property by providing for a special architect; but what if the special architect should be a slow-moving gentleman, and what if there should be the usual amount of red tape unwound before this building is completed? What assurance is there to the purchaser? That is my proposition. You have attempted to secure a better price for the Government by providing for some additional architects; but, as a matter of fact, you will not get a dollar more than you would if you did not have that provision in the bill, for there is no assurance that this provision will actually expedite the erection and completion of the building. You hope it will. Why not do as any business man would? Fix a reasonable date, let the penalty for nonfulfillment be a reasonable rent, and a reasonable bonus for the turning over of the property at an earlier date.

Mr. AUSTIN. This amendment has been submitted to the Treasury Department. It has been carefully examined by the Supervising Architect's Office. It has been approved by that office, and they are satisfied that they can do precisely what we have claimed, if Congress will amend the original act.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. I believe I have the floor. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Tennessee, to whom the gentleman from New Jersey yielded.

Mr. McCOY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] to say that before selling the present site he might go ahead and prepare plans for the new building. Did I understand that correctly?

Mr. AUSTIN. I did not state it exactly in that way. I said this is about what will happen in the event that this legislation is granted, that in discussing the question of a definite time when the building can be turned over to the purchaser, the Supervising Architect will employ an outside architect. Before he is employed he can tell exactly how long it will require to prepare these plans and how long to complete the new building under contract, specifying the time or date of completion.

Mr. MANN. Is this all before the present site is sold?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I think not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. McCOY. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withhold his point of order. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY] has been here right along, endeavoring daily to bring this matter up. After the clear, concise, and intelligent statement that was made by his colleague from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] there can be no question in the mind of any of those who are present as to the urgent necessity for this public improvement in the city of Newark. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum present is well taken. There are but 60 Members present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6383) to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the request of Mr. HAY for unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers accompanying the bill to correct the military record of David Crowther, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this request will be granted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore agreed to, adjourned until Tuesday, July 22, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for $10,907.81 to pay the interest on the principal sum of the judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee in favor of J. E. Parrish against the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers (H. Doc. No. 147); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Westport Harbor and Saugatuck River, Conn. (H. Doc. No. 148); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on examination and survey of Appoquinimink River, Del. (H. Doc. No. 149); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a letter from the Acting Secretary of War submitting an estimate for an additional appropriation required in the work of prevention of deposits, harbor of New York, etc. (H. Doc. No. 150); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for establishing a cost accounting system in the Bureau of Indian Affairs (H. Doc. No. 146); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6903) authorizing the payment of damages to persons for injuries inflicted by Mexican federal or insurgent troops within the United States during the insurrection in Mexico in 1911, and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes, and the same was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, relative to proper headlights and safe boilers for railroad engines; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, favoring bill for improvement in living conditions for our seamen; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the Banana Buyers' Protective Association, New York, N. Y., protesting against the passage of the proposed import tax on bananas; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: Petition of the Central Council of Business Men and Taxpayers' Association of Buffalo, favoring the appointment of a national commission to consider a plan for vocational education; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. THACHER: Petition of the Boston Fruit and Produce Exchange, favoring 1-cent letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, favoring the adoption of a more stringent immigration law; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, favoring the extension of authority of locomotive boiler inspectors of the Interstate Commerce Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 19, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR PENNSYLVANIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina how many amendments there are in the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no idea. I only know what was the action of the House of Representatives in requesting a conference.

Mr. NORRIS. If the matter could go over, the amendments would be printed under the rule, would they not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; the amendments ought to be printed. When the bill comes back from conference the Senate should be fully informed as to the amendments, whether there is an agreement or a disagreement, as the case may be.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from North Carolina that, as I understand the situation, while I have not seen the amendments I have heard what, for instance, one of the amendments is, and I should like to reserve the right at the proper time to move to concur in that particular amendment. I am not prepared to do it now, and I may not on examination want to make the motion. I have not been able to find out what the particular amendment is.

Mr. OVERMAN. I confess to the Senator that this is the first time I have had my attention directed to it. The House having asked for a conference, I think it is our duty to agree to the conference, unless the Senator desires to make a motion now. I am not sufficiently informed as to the amendments, and I will have to examine the bill. It may go over, if the Senator desires.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will let it go over, I do not think there will be any delay caused. The House does not meet to-day.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am told that the House of Representatives disagrees to the amendments of the Senate. It is a House bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, if that is the parliamentary situation, my motion would be to recede from the Senate amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. That would be the proper motion.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have an opportunity to examine it, and if I think it proper I will make that motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. With that understanding, I withdraw my motion for the present so as to let the Senator have time to examine it. I will call it up again next week.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn for the present.

MEMORIAL.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the importation of cigars free of duty from the Philippine Islands, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 2789) to award the medal of honor to Maj. John O. Skinner, surgeon, United States Army, retired (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Wyoming:

A bill (S. 2790) granting a pension to Nancy J. Northrup; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 2791) granting a pension to William Kennedy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 2792) granting an increase of pension to Ezra Rice; and

A bill (S. 2793) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Hummon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 2794) to reimburse John A. Lowrie, postmaster of Seville, Medina County, Ohio, for postal savings stamps stolen; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 2795) for the relief of heirs or estate of John M. Wright, deceased;

A bill (S. 2796) for the relief of heirs or estate of Moses Camak, deceased; and

A bill (S. 2797) for the relief of heirs or estate of John Y. Jackson, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

HEARINGS BEFORE LOBBY INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 138), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, authorized to have printed for their use 1,000 copies, or as many thereof as they may deem necessary, of the hearings being held by a subcommittee of that committee, under Senate resolution 92, adopted May 29, 1913, instructing said committee to investigate the charge that a lobby is being maintained in Washington.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. FALL. I offer the following Senate resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 139) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders, and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government, both for himself and his property.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KERN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution goes over.

Mr. FALL. I ask the Senator not to make an objection to the adoption of a Democratic plank in the last Democratic platform.

Mr. KERN. It is offered under such suspicious circumstances——

Mr. FALL. It was adopted possibly under suspicious circumstances, if other planks in the Democratic platform are not meant to be kept, Mr. President. There is another plank which I did not think it was necessary to write into this resolution:

Our platform is one of principles which we believe to be essential to our national welfare. Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign.

If there were any suspicious circumstances with reference to this resolution, Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana and those who were with him at Baltimore were responsible for it, and not myself. I have taken it that it was in just as good faith as the plank in the Democratic platform with reference to the reduction of the tariff, or the currency, or any other measure whatsoever.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator from Indiana will see his way to withdraw his objection and allow the resolution to pass unanimously.

Mr. KERN. We do not know what the resolution is. I am objecting to it on general principles, and I insist on my objection.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I find this plank in what is said to be the Democratic platform adopted by the Democratic convention of 1912 held at Baltimore, Md., June 25 to July 3. I will here read the plank, and the Senator can compare the resolution with the plank in the platform, and if he then desires, as the leader of the Democratic Party, to repudiate the platform——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask a question? When did the Senator become the exponent of the Democratic platform?

Mr. FALL. I was the exponent of what I considered to be true Democratic principles for many years until the Democratic Party was led into the wilderness, in my judgment, by one of those who now occupies a very important position in the United States, which he has been since endeavoring to exploit upon the Chautauqua platform.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. FALL. I am answering the Senator's question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think we ought to get into a discussion. Yesterday we had a very full discussion that ought not to have taken place, and here we may get into another.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was a Republican discussion and this is a Democratic discussion.

Mr. FALL. I do not propose to get into any discussion.

Mr. OVERMAN. There are other important matters to attend to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be again read.

Mr. FALL. I ask that the plank of the Democratic platform which I send to the desk be read with it, that it may be compared with the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being an objection upon the part of the Senator from Indiana to the present consideration of the resolution, the resolution goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent that it may be again read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the question is, Shall the resolution again be read?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator can read it for himself.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator desires to know what is the question put before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the resolution be read? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government, both for himself and his property.

Mr. FALL. I ask unanimous consent that the Democratic platform upon that subject may be read for the information of Senators upon the other side.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. KERN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the question is, Shall the Democratic platform on this proposition be read? [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Norris	Thomas
Brady	Gallinger	Overman	Thompson
Bristow	Hollis	Page	Thornton
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Tillman
Catron	Jones	Pittman	Townsend
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Robinson	Vardaman
Chilton	Kern	Saulsbury	Walsh
Clapp	Lane	Sheppard	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Lewis	Sherman	Weeks
Colt	McLean	Smith, S. C.	Works
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Dillingham	Nelson	Sterling

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] are unavoidably absent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to make the same announcement concerning the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH].

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent on business. He is paired on all matters with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire this announcement to stand for all votes during the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for a call of the names of the absentees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BACON, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. ROOT, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. STONE, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WILLIAMS responded to their names when called.

Mr. BORAH, Mr. LODGE, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas subsequently entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to state that members of the Foreign Relations Committee were absent this morning in attendance upon a meeting of the committee, and therefore several of them were not present to answer to the roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question pending before the Senate is whether the plank of the Democratic platform which is said to have to do with the resolution of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] shall be read.

Mr. FALL. If the Chair will allow me, I will say that the resolution has already been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been.

Mr. FALL. It was read on motion. The motion now is that the plank of the Democratic platform upon the question of the protection of American citizens shall be read, so that it may be compared with the resolution, when it will be shown to be verbatim with it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands and has so announced.

Mr. FALL. I beg pardon of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Secretary read the plank from the Democratic platform as requested by the Senator from New Mexico? [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt and will ask Senators to rise and stand until counted.

The Senate proceeded to divide.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in no further doubt. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move, as a substitute, that the whole platform be read.

Mr. LANE. I second the motion.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no earthly objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina, and, with the consent of the Senate, I am perfectly willing to give my consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have objection. We are met here for some purpose, I assume. This day has been set aside to begin or continue the debate upon the tariff bill, and I think it is indefensible to take up the time of the Senate in reading party platforms.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the plank of the platform which he has been requested to read.

The Secretary proceeded to read from page 179 of the publication Platforms of the Two Great Political Parties, 1856 to 1912, inclusive, compiled by South Trimble, Clerk of the United States House of Representatives, July, 1912——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I moved a substitute a little while ago, and I insist on its being put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the question has been put and carried, and no substitute and no amendments are in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> The constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government both for himself and his property.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over, on objection.

STABLE MONEY (S. DOC. NO. 135).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask to have printed as a public document a memorial by George H. Shibley, Director of the American Bureau of Political Research, on stable money and the freedom provided for in the Democratic banking and currency bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE TARIFF.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] if the chairman of the Finance Committee is ready to proceed with the tariff bill? It seems to me that we ought to go ahead as rapidly as possible with this very important measure, and that unless it be very inconvenient to Senators upon the other side we ought to take it up now. I do not want, of course, to impose any inconvenience upon the Finance Committee or the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], but if ready I hope that the bill will be called up now and that the debate will proceed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] told me on yesterday that he expected to proceed with his address to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS entered the Chamber.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from North Carolina has just entered the Chamber. Mr. President, I ask that the bill known as the tariff bill be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before beginning the statement which I intend to make with reference to this bill I wish to say that, in order that my statement may be consecutive, I should be glad not to be interrupted. When the bill has arrived at that stage when we take up for consideration the various schedules and paragraphs, I shall be glad, as I am sure every majority member of the committee will also be glad, to answer any question and to make any explanation that we are able to answer and make.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. Before the Senator proceeds with his address I should like to inquire about when we can have the book in explanation of the bill, which we were advised would be printed?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that the gentleman in charge of that work advised me this morning that he thought it could go to the printer by Monday.

Mr. BRISTOW. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, when the national conventions of the two great political parties met in 1908 they were confronted with an overwhelming demand for relief from the intolerable burdens of a tariff framed in the interest of privilege, and which, while enormously augmenting the wealth and power of the few, restricted the opportunities of the many, and advanced the cost of living beyond the income not only of the average man but of the moderately thrifty and well-to-do.

The Democratic response to these complaints and demands was unreserved and unequivocal.

The response of the Republican Party, while not so specific, was accepted by the country as a pledge to substantially lower tariff duties and to remedy the evils complained of, at least to the extent of limiting the power of combinations and of the protected industries to arbitrarily fix prices, by admitting competition from the outside when prices here were raised above the margin of a fair profit.

In the election of that year the Republican Party was successful, electing the President and a majority in both branches of Congress. Feigning to redeem these pledges, the Republican Congress of 1909 passed the so-called Payne-Aldrich bill, reenacting in effect the Dingley law, with a few minor changes in rates—some upward and some downward—resulting in practically no change in the general average, giving little or no relief to the people on the one hand, and on the other hand taking from the beneficiaries of the tariff but little, if anything, which was regarded by them as worth retaining.

The substituted act was in effect and substance so nearly the same as the one it superseded that the question whether it operated to revise the tariff downward or upward was at the time and still is a matter of dispute.

Scarcely had the act gone into operation when the dissatisfaction of the people found expression in a nation-wide agitation for its repeal, culminating in the congressional election of 1910 in the overthrow of the Republican majority in the House of Representatives and the elevation to power in that branch of Congress of the Democratic Party—pledged to revise the tariff to a revenue and competitive basis.

I need not detain the Senate to recount the struggle of the Democratic Party in both branches of Congress during the special session of 1911 and again during the session of 1912 to carry out these pledges through the series of schedule bills that were submitted, nor the opposition to these bills from the Republicans in both branches of Congress, resulting in the final failure of those measures which passed both the House and the Senate, through the veto of President Taft. The facts are well known by Senators, and I need not detain the Senate to recount them.

In the national campaign of 1912 the Republican Party nominated Mr. Taft for President and the Democratic Party nominated Mr. Wilson. In that campaign the tariff and the record of the two parties, as exemplified by their action in Congress with reference to these schedule bills, and of President Taft in his veto of them, became the paramount issue. Out of the 531 votes in the electoral college President Taft received only 8, and Mr. Wilson received 435. The Republican Party in the Senate was superseded by a Democratic majority of 6, while the Democratic majority in the House was increased from 68 to 146.

The bill now presented to the Senate, it is confidently believed, is a fair interpretation of the will of the people and is an honest compliance with the pledges of the Democratic Party with respect to the revision of the tariff.

The conditions under which the schedule bills of 1911 and 1912 were drawn and submitted to Congress were radically different in many respects from those which now obtain.

These schedule bills were submitted as individual pieces of legislation and only as a part of a general system of customs taxation. Moreover, at that time, on account of constitutional limitations upon the power of Congress with respect to taxing incomes, revenue from this source, except from incomes of corporations, was not available. The extension of the power of Congress with respect to taxing incomes, as well as the enlargement of the scope of the proposed revision, has made it possible for this bill to make greater reductions in the rates in the present law than was possible under the conditions under which these schedule bills were framed and presented.

I wish in the outset to say that the amendments offered by the committee are not proposed in a spirit of disagreement with the House or to the theory of tariff revision upon which that body acted. On the contrary, they are offered with a view of further carrying out and perfecting the principles of a revenue-producing tariff upon the basis of competitive rates enunciated by the Ways and Means Committee of the House as a just and fair interpretation in the light of existing conditions of the platform pledges of the dominant party upon the tariff.

Like the House, we have sought to find a basis of action which would untax the necessaries of life as far as is consistent with the revenue needs of the Government, which would lay the heaviest burdens upon the luxuries of the rich, and which would impose upon those things which are neither prime necessities nor luxuries, but which are proper subjects of tariff taxation, a rate sufficiently competitive to yield revenues adequate to meet the needs of the Government on the one hand and on the other operate as a regulation of domestic prices by making outside competition at all times possible.

In the analysis which I propose to make of the bill it is not my purpose to discuss, except incidentally, the tariff question nor the House bill, but to confine myself chiefly to the amendments proposed by the Finance Committee to the House bill, and I shall only discuss the more important of these changes.

SCHEDULE A.

The Senate has made quite a number of changes in the chemical schedule, designated in the bill as Schedule A, but many of them are of minor importance, being mainly changes in verbiage or classification, with now and then a slight reduction or increase in rate.

COLORS AND DYESTUFFS.

The amendments of most importance are those relating to colors and dyestuffs, especially those used in the textile industries and in the manufactures of leather, pulp, and paper.

Under the present law alizarin and colors obtained from alizarin and anthracene are on the free list. The House bill placed a substantial duty upon these products. Under the present law colors obtained from carbazol and indigo are highly dutiable, and the House made no change. The textile industries and the manufactures of leather, pulp, and paper consume enormous quantities of these colors and dyestuffs.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendments have made heavy reductions in the duties upon the products of these industries, and it was thought just and fair, in view of these reductions, that these dyeing materials, constituting as they do such a considerable element in their production cost, should be transferred to the free list in the interest of both the manufacturer and the consumer.

CREOSOTE OIL.

Creosote oil is used largely for impregnating wood for the purpose of its preservation. In line with the policy of conserving our rapidly decreasing resources of wood materials we have placed this preservative upon the free list, believing that the object to be accomplished is of more importance than the revenue which would be derived from the duty the House placed upon it.

LINSEED OIL AND FLAXSEED.

For like reasons the committee has reduced the rate of duty in the House bill on linseed oil and flaxseed, from which linseed oil is made. This material is used extensively in mixing paints and varnishes, and to make certain other articles of common consumption, such as soap and linoleum.

SCHEDULE B.

Changes in this schedule are few, and practically all in the line of reductions or to correct errors. In a few instances the Senate has increased the House rates of this schedule because the article involved was in the nature of a luxury.

CEMENT.

We have transferred Roman and Portland cement, dutiable under the present law at an ad valorem equivalent of about 20 per cent and under the pending bill at 5 per cent, to the free list.

Cement is a material used largely for house building and street paving. It is produced in enormous quantities in this country, the production last year being in value about $80,000,000, while the total imports of that year amounted to less than $170,000. It is both produced and sold here as cheaply as anywhere else in the world. This is conclusively evidenced by the fact that only recently, when the Panama Canal Commission advertised for bids for 4,500,000 sacks of cement, although there were 12 foreign bidders, the lowest bid submitted was that of a domestic corporation. The investigation of the committee showed conclusively that the cement industry of this country has reached a position of strength and independence where it does not need the helping hand of the Government in order to stand in competition with foreign countries.

ASPHALT.

We have also placed asphalt upon the free list. Asphalt is used extensively for road building and street paving. A duty upon this material would be a tax upon road construction and street paving, both objects of the highest importance.

There are two kinds of asphalt in common use in this country—one known as natural asphalt, which is not produced in this country, but is imported chiefly from Trinidad. It is of high quality, especially for use in the construction of roads. The other is the residuum product of petroleum oil, and its production is largely controlled by the Standard Oil Co. The petroleum out of which this residuum product is made is at present on the free list.

The committee thought these conditions justified putting asphalt of all kinds upon the free list.

SCHEDULE C.

We have put pig iron and certain of its allied products upon the free list. There is no reason for a duty on these products. That pig iron can be and is produced as cheaply in this country as anywhere in the world is abundantly established by the testimony, not only of disinterested witnesses, but by the admission and sworn testimony of the leading representatives of the iron and steel industry.

The domestic production of iron ore is largely controlled by the United States Steel Corporation. To aid the independent producers of iron and steel in their competition with this monopoly the House bill placed iron ore upon the free list. Partly for like reasons the Finance Committee, after thorough investigation, reached the conclusion that ferromanganese, a blast furnace product, should be placed upon the free list along with iron ore, pig iron, and so forth.

Ferromanganese is a necessary material in the manufacture of steel, and the United States Steel Corporation largely controls the manganese ore out of which this alloy is produced. This corporation is the only producer of ferromanganese in this country, but it produces it for its own use and consumption and not for sale. The independent competitors of this monopoly have to supply their demand for it from abroad. Under these conditions it was thought by your committee that with iron ore, pig iron, and ferromanganese on the free list, domestic competition in iron and steel products would be strengthened and the price of the finished product in this market eventually lowered.

MANUFACTURES OF IRON AND STEEL.

These are in a sense the raw materials of the iron and steel industry. Partly because of the transference of these raw materials to the free list, and partly because we thought the House rates were not sufficiently competitive, we felt justified in making substantial reductions in the House rates upon their crude products, such as structural iron and steel, anchors, tin plate, and so forth. For similar reasons further reductions were made in the more highly organized products of this industry, but it is believed that the duty has not in any instance been reduced below a reasonably competitive basis.

The average ad valorem rate of the House bill upon all the products included in this schedule is 21.22 per cent. Our amendments reduce this ad valorem to 18.38 per cent.

With an annual domestic production of approximately $4,500,000,000; with relatively insignificant imports; with $306,000,000 exports, sold in nearly every civilized part of the world; with unequaled natural advantages in raw material and otherwise; with an artificial advantage in ad valorem charges on imports of 18 per cent, manifestly the domestic producers of these products, who neither desire nor seek by illegitimate methods to exploit their customers, need not fear undue competition from abroad.

For the reasons given in the report, and which need not be repeated, your committee has slightly increased the House rate on zinc, zinc ore, and lead ore. With a few exceptions, it is believed that all the amendments made to this schedule are in the direction of reductions.

SCHEDULES I, J, AND K.

WOOL.

The manufactures of wool and cotton and of hemp, flax, and jute constitute three of the greatest industries in this country. They are each treated in this bill in separate schedules.

For more than a third of a century the duties on wool and woolens have remained practically unchanged. That these duties are not only excessive but indefensible is generally admitted, even by the advocates of protection.

The House bill placed wool upon the free list and greatly reduced the duties upon its derivative products.

While the House bill places wool upon the free list, it retains a duty of 15 per cent upon combed wool, tops, and roving made in part of wool and camel's hair. The House also retained a duty of 20 per cent upon the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

The committee could see no tenable reason why the hair of the Angora goat should be treated differently from the wool of the sheep, and it has therefore put that product upon the free list.

Your committee, after thorough investigation, also reached the conclusion that the rate of 15 per cent on combed wool, tops, and so forth, fixed in the House bill, was too high, and that in order to place these products upon a competitive basis this duty should be reduced to 5 per cent. Combed wool and tops are basic materials in the manufacture of woolens, and having reduced those duties your committee felt warranted in making further reductions upon woolens, especially upon yarns, the rate on which has been reduced from 20 to 15 per cent.

As a result of putting the hair of the Angora goat upon the free list, corresponding reductions have been made on the various products of this material.

FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE.

Under the present law flax is taxed when hackled at the rate of 3 cents per pound, and when unhackled at 1 cent per pound; the House reduced hackled flax to 1½ cents, not hackled to one-half cent.

Under the present law tow of flax is dutiable at $20 per ton; the House reduced this to $10 per ton. Under the present law hemp and tow of hemp is taxed at $22.50 a ton and hackled hemp at $45 a ton. The House changed these rates to $10 a ton on tow of flax, and one-half a cent a pound on hemp and tow of hemp and 1 cent per pound on hackled hemp.

Flax and hemp are the raw materials of the manufacturer. They are not produced in this country for commercial purposes. The duties upon them, therefore, are purely revenue duties. The products of this industry are consumed in enormous quantities by the people, especially by the farmer. In order that this industry might be put upon a parity with respect to its raw materials with the other textile industries, and in order that the cost of the finished product might be reduced both in the interest of the manufacturers who make and the people who consume these finished products, your committee, at a considerable sacrifice of revenue, have put flax and hemp, hackled and unhackled, and so forth, upon the free list, and as a result of this they have made heavy reductions upon the finished products of these materials.

The average reduction upon this schedule has been from 22 per cent in the House bill to 15.76 in the Senate bill, that being the heaviest reduction made in any schedule in the House bill.

COTTON.

Large quantities of long staple cotton are consumed in the manufacture of cotton goods. We do not produce in this country a sufficient amount of this grade and quality of cotton to supply the domestic demand, the additional amount required, totaling something like $25,000,000, is imported.

The House left cotton upon the free list and the Senate committee concurred in making no change.

Your committee has made but few changes in House rates on cotton goods, and those which have been made are mostly changes of classification and affect only slightly the schedule of rates.

The average ad valorem under the House rate for this schedule is 34.47 per cent and under the Senate bill 29.40 per cent.

The chief change made by the Senate committee is with respect to the differentiation made by the House on plain and colored cloths by the process of dyeing and bleaching. The House allowed this differentiation on cloths that were dyed and bleached. The Senate committee extended it to yarns out of which these cloths are made, believing that as the process of dyeing occurs in the yarn as well as in the cloth the yarn should have the benefit of the differential allowed on account of the cost involved in the process of dyeing and bleaching.

SCHEDULE G—AGRICULTURE.

THE FARMER.

It is charged that this bill deals unfairly with the farmer. There is no foundation for this charge.

In 1911 we passed the so-called reciprocity agreement with Canada, giving to many of the products of the Canadian farmer free entrance into our markets.

The Democratic House, with a view to compensating the American farmer for any losses he might sustain by this free-listing of his products, passed what was known as the "farmers' free-list bill," placing many of the necessaries which the farmer buys upon the free list. There was opposition among the farmers in many sections of the country, especially along the border and in the wheat-growing States, to this reciprocity pact, but for the most part the farmers of the country would have accepted it if the farmers' free-list bill had not been vetoed by ex-President Taft. They would have accepted it because it provided, as this bill does, for adjustment on a compensatory basis of advantages and disadvantages.

The pending bill, as passed by the House and amended by the committee, places many of the products of the farm upon the free list. It places wheat and flour upon the free list, with a countervailing duty against countries that prohibit the free entrance to their market of our wheat and flour; it places cattle, sheep, swine, sugar, wool, eggs, and potatoes upon the free list, and it reduces the duty upon some other products of the farm, such as oats, rice, barley, and butter.

The duty upon many of these products is of little value to the farmer under the present trade conditions, and upon some of them of no value under any conditions.

In revising the present highly protective tariff to a revenue and a competitive basis, logically and necessarily heavy reductions have been made all along the line.

Every man, whatever his occupation may be, will be the beneficiary in some direction, to a greater or less degree, of this general system of reductions. In this respect the farmer has been shown special consideration. Practically everything he buys has been put upon the free list or the duty on it has been greatly reduced. For his special benefit cotton bagging and ties have been put upon the free list. For his special benefit the materials out of which sacks for grain, wool, fertilizer, and so forth, are made have been put upon the free list. For his special benefit wire for fencing and baling purposes and similar articles of farm consumption have been put upon the free list. For his special benefit plows, shovels, hoes, rakes, mowers, reapers, planters, and agricultural implements of every kind and description have been put upon the free list. He will be in a large degree the beneficiary of putting building materials of various kinds, materials used in the construction of roads, textbooks for school, and so forth, on the free list. He will be largely the beneficiary of putting boots and shoes, ordinary blankets, harness, saddles and saddlery, wagons, carts, sewing machines, and other like articles of household and farm utility and consumption on the free list.

In common with the rest of the people, he will share in the general benefits from the reduction of the duty on sugar and its ultimate abolition. And, finally, he will share with all the people the benefits of the heavy reductions which this bill makes on wearing apparel of every description, on crockery, hardware, household and kitchen furnishings and utensils.

No class of our people has reaped as little benefit from the Republican tariff system and suffered as heavily from its exactions as the farmer. No class of our people understands the practical operation of our tariff better than the farmer. He knows that under the Republican system he has had to buy in a highly protected market and sell most of his products on a basis of free competition with the world. The studied efforts to mislead him with respect to the effect of this bill upon him will not succeed. He will study it and study it closely, as is now his custom with respect to all questions affecting his interests and the common welfare. There is in my mind no doubt that his verdict will be one of approval, especially in view of the fact that he will be among the first to feel the beneficent results of the transition from a tariff in the interest of the classes to a tariff in the interest of the masses.

SCHEDULE N.

SUNDRIES.

Schedule N, covering sundry merchandise not covered in any other schedule of the tariff bill, has been remodeled rather extensively. Even a cursory glance at the text of this schedule will show that it covers commodities of most heterogeneous character, such as buttons and explosives, furs, gloves, manufactures of rubber, paintings and sculptures, pencils, photographic cameras, diamonds and jewelry articles, pipes and toilet sets, and many other items of no generic relationship. In the main, however, the schedule covers luxuries and some raw materials used in the manufacture of these luxuries, and the House bill has transferred to this schedule a number of items, notably laces, scattered in the existing law under various other schedules. The changes extend not only to the dutiable status of certain merchandise but also to the character of rates proposed, variations in these rates, and to alterations in the phraseology of the several paragraphs. The changes in rates and in the dutiable status of merchandise covered by this schedule are thoroughly in harmony with the principle underlying the construction of this entire tariff bill, namely, to eliminate altogether the burden of taxation on the necessaries of life or to reduce it to the lowest possible limit compatible with our revenue requirements, and to increase the burden of tariff taxation upon luxuries or semi-luxuries up to the point where a maximum amount of revenue will be derived from imports. Schedule N as submitted to the Senate proposes to transfer to the free list crude artificial abrasives, fulminates, gunpowder and other explosives, glazier's and miner's diamonds, harness and saddlery not specially provided for, surgical catguts, and sensitized but not exposed photographic films. It is also proposed to retransfer furs to the free list.

Inversely, the bill as submitted to the Senate has transferred from the free list to this schedule crude marine corals and crude meerschaum, both of which are articles used in the manufacture of luxuries.

It increases the rate on ramie hat braids and manufactures thereof, on leather toilet sets, on leather gloves, on manufactures of amber, on masks, on paintings and sculptures, all of which are luxuries, while reductions are proposed on agate buttons, on wearing apparel of cheap furs, combs and other articles made of hard rubber, and on photographic cameras, all of which are necessities. The changes in the rates on buttons made from vegetable ivory, mother-of-pearl, or shells, which changes are above as well as below the rates of the House bill, are proposed with a view of harmonizing such rates with the conditions prevailing in these industries, and to establish therein a genuine competitive basis. Substantially the same reason is adducible in justification of the change proposed in the rates on pencils.

Schedule N of the House bill carries in paragraph 357 a proviso prohibiting the importation of feathers, plumes, quills, heads, wings, tails, and skins, or parts of skins of wild birds, and so forth. The schedule as proposed to the Senate limits the prohibitory proviso to aigrettes and aigrette plumes, or so-called osprey plumes. While it is generally recognized that stringent limitations should be put upon the indiscriminate killing of wild birds carried on principally for the purpose of vain adornment, it was equally recognized that an efficient remedy against such wanton extermination can be had only by international agreement, and that little good can be accomplished by prohibiting such imports in the United States when all other countries offer a free market for the victims of such unrestricted slaughter.

Alterations in the phraseology of the particular paragraphs of this schedule, or in the cases where rates were changed from an ad valorem to a specific basis, were made principally with a view of facilitating the adminstration of the law, to limit possible litigation by eliminating ambiguities, and to protect the revenues by making the rates specific in cases where proper valuation is next to impossible, as, for instance, in moving-picture films, negatives or positives.

THE FREE LIST.

Under the House bill importations of the value of $[illegible] are transferred from the dutiable to the free list. The amendments by the Finance Committee add $44,000,000 to this free list, making a total of $147,000,000.

It is estimated that the increase in importations, free and dutiable, under the House bill as amended will amount to $123,000,000. Calculated upon the comparative basis of free and dutiable imports as explained in the report, the average ad valorem in the House bill is 27.84 per cent and in the Senate bill 26.67 per cent.

On this basis of calculation the average ad valorem of the Senate bill is 4.22 per cent lower than the average ad valorem of the House bill and 27.64 per cent lower than the average ad valorem of the present law.

Because of its extension of the free list and its reductions in rates on dutiable commodities this bill is denounced by the advocates of protection as a free-trade measure.

It is true that the bill as amended carries a large free list; so does the Payne-Aldrich law, but there is a broad difference between the free lists of these two measures.

The free list in the Payne-Aldrich bill is a free list in the interest of the protected manufacturers. The free list in this bill is a free list in the interest of the consumer as well as of the manufacturer. Under the Payne-Aldrich law more than half of all importations to this country are on the free list. More than 80 per cent of these free imports are the raw materials or semi-raw materials of the manufacturer. Only about 18 per cent of them go directly into the homes of the consumer. Manifestly, you can not reduce the price of the finished product to the consumer by putting the raw material out of which it is made on the free list unless you correspondingly reduce the duty on the finished product, and this was not done either in the McKinley, Dingley, or Payne-Aldrich revisions. Clearly, therefore, the free list of those measures is a free list for the benefit of the manufacturer and not of the purchaser of his wares.

Not so with the free list of this bill. Under it the articles transferred to the free list are of three kinds:

First. Finished products. Obviously the ultimate consumer should get the benefit of this remission of the tax.

Second. Raw products which go directly into the homes of the people and are finally consumed in their raw state. The ultimate consumer should get the benefit of this remission of tax.

Third. Raw or semi-raw materials of the manufacturer. Coincidently with untaxing these raw materials of the factory, the bill reduces rates on the finished products made from them to a competitive basis, so that the consumer as well as the manufacturer may get the benefit of the remission of the duty on the raw product.

I can not understand how the authors and champions of a law which admits 54 per cent of all imports free of tax, which imposes a duty upon the remaining 46 per cent largely in excess of what is needed for the purposes of protection according to their own theory of the proper measure of protection, can denounce this bill which reduces that admittedly excessive tax only about 27 per cent, and, after all its reductions, retains an average ad valorem of over 26 per cent—an average higher than any other country in the world except Russia and possibly one other—can claim that this is a free-trade bill unless they mean to be understood as asserting that all the world except Russia and ourselves are at present on a free-trade basis.

COMMERCIAL EXPANSION.

Mr. President, there was imported into this country last year $1,600,000,000 worth of foreign products. It is estimated that the changes made in this bill will eventuate in increasing these importations about $123,000,000, in addition to the normal increase.

In the face of a domestic production of over $30,000,000,000, over two billions of which was exported and sold abroad in competition with like products of other countries, the opponents of this bill declare in effect that if the people of this country are permitted to increase their purchases abroad to this moderate extent the doors of industry will be closed and labor deprived of employment.

This is an argument predicated upon the theory that the importation of things which can be made in this country should be practically prohibited through the tariff. It is an argument not for a protective tariff, but it is an argument for a prohibitory tariff.

A revision of our tariff laws upon such a basis would be not only vain and futile so far as giving relief to those who complain against their exactions, but it would be a fatal blow to our great export trade, through which we annually tap the gold reservoirs of the world.

Undoubtedly there will be increased importations under this bill; that was intended and provided for in the reductions in rates it makes. Moreover, you can not revise the tariff so as to give relief from present tariff burdens except by enlarging opportunities for importations. Undoubtedly, on the other hand, there will be increased exportations under this bill. That was also intended by its framers and is provided for in such ways as were found possible and practicable.

To this latter end it untaxes the things the farmer employs in making the products he sells abroad. It untaxes the raw materials of the manufacturer and it largely untaxes the material used in the construction of his plant and the machinery needed for its equipment to enable him to meet his foreign competitor on more advantageous terms, not only at home but abroad.

In short, it seeks in such ways as are open to us to establish upon a broader basis that spirit of comity on which international good will rests, to remove hampering restrictions, to broaden the basis of international trade and enable the American producer to take advantage, in greater measure than has been possible under past and existing tariff conditions, of our great national opportunity in the markets of the world.

Mr. President, the passage of this bill will not result in closing factories; it will not throw labor out of employment. On the contrary, I confidently predict that it will open a broader field to our manufacturers and farmers, both at home and abroad, and that the resulting expansion of both our foreign and domestic trade will open new opportunities to industry and enlarged employment for labor.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

It is estimated that the ordinary receipts under the amended bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, will amount to $366,810,000. Ordinary expenditures for the same period will amount to $994,790,000, leaving a surplus of $2,020,000.

The receipts for the current fiscal year are materially affected by the Senate committee amendments changing the time for the assessment of the income tax from January 1 to March 1; postponing the time when the bill will go into operation as to wool and woolens until December 1 and January 1, respectively; as to sugar, until March 1, 1914; and by deferring the date when the Senate amendment imposing a tax on spirits used in fortifying wines becomes effective.

It is estimated that during the fiscal year 1915, when all the provisions of the amended bill will be in operation, there will be a revenue of between nine and ten million dollars in excess of the probable needs of the Government.

INCOME TAX.

The adoption of the amendment to the Constitution authorizing Congress to tax incomes has made it possible, in revising the tariff upon the lines of the new principles of this bill, to make many remissions and reductions of tariff duties in the interest of a fair and just distribution of the burdens of government and for the relief of the people fror oppressive exactions which, on account of the revenue needs of the Government, would have been impracticable but for the additional source of revenue furnished under the authority of this beneficent and long-delayed amendment to the organic law.

The income section of this bill is not framed upon the theory that the chief object of an income tax is to supply a deficit in revenue, but, on the contrary, it is based upon the theory that property should bear its just share of Federal as well as State taxation, and that therefore the rate of this tax should be fixed with a view to requiring the wealth of the country as reflected in the incomes of the well-to-do to contribute equitably to these expenses.

Under the old system, from which this income-tax amendment emancipates us, the money for defraying the expenses of the Government was obtained from a tax on consumption—that is, a tax on the things the individual man consumes—and as the actual necessities of food and raiment of the poor man are relatively the same as that of the rich man, the result was that the rich man paid but little more tax to support the Government than the poor man.

Why this unjust system should have been allowed to continue so long, it is difficult to understand. It is as much the function of the Government to protect the rights of property as it is its duty to protect the rights of persons.

In our complicated industrial system it is safe to say that the expense of adequate governmental protection of our great property interests is as great as that required for the due protection of the life and liberty of the citizen.

Since 1870 our population has increased from 38,000,000 to 98,000,000, or about 150 per cent, while property has increased in the same time from thirty billions to one hundred and twenty-five billion dollars, or 300 per cent. The per capita of wealth has increased during this time from $775 to $1,500. Much of this wealth had its origin in what may be called the unearned increment—in the appreciation of property from causes not due to the individual exertions of the possessors. This part of the wealth of the country has not been created by the owners, but has resulted from the productive energy and enterprise of the community generally. It has accrued through the sweat of the brow of others and without toil on the part of those who enjoy it. It is the offspring of our existing institutions, of our land, and of our Government, and from its ample storehouse a reasonable share should be contributed for the support of the Government.

The income-tax amendment to the Constitution confers the power upon Congress to impose upon property its just share of the general burdens of taxation, and the authors of this section of the bill in its original and amended forms have not hesitated not only to use this power, not only to supply any deficiency in the revenues resulting from the reductions in consumption taxes, but they have invoked it as an effective means of exacting a fair contribution to governmental needs from accumulated wealth.

It has not imposed this tax upon those whose incomes does not exceed $3,000, that being the income upon the basis of 6 per cent earning capacity of $50,000. It was thought by your committee that the possessor of an excess of this amount of wealth, if he was a single man, should contribute to the revenues of the Government at least 1 per cent of the income arising from it. If the taxable person is a married man or woman, the exemption is increased to $4,000, and if there are children it may reach $5,000.

It is expected that the income and excise tax will yield at least $100,000,000 of revenue annually, thereby enabling us to remit to the taxpayer a like amount in the consumption taxes.

ADMINISTRATIVE SECTION.

The changes made in the administrative section of the House bill are specifically pointed out in the report of the committee, and need not be enumerated here in detail.

The provision allowing a 5 per cent differential in duties on imports shipped in American bottoms, the so-called dumping clause, and the provision authorizing the inspection of books of foreign manufacturers, and so forth, were eliminated for the reasons given in the report.

One of the most important amendments made by the committee to the House bill is contained in the so-called retaliatory clause of this section. The House bill authorized the President to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements, but it contained no provision for the protection of American trade against invidious discriminations. The Senate amendment authorizes the President in such cases to raise the duties prescribed in the bill to a specified amount on certain articles if imported from the offending country and to continue them in force against that country so long as the discrimination is continued.

Another amendment provides for a congressional commission to investigate and consider our revenue-administration laws, with a view to simplifying, harmonizing, revising, and codifying them.

SPECIFIC AND AD VALOREM RATES.

Aside from the reduction of duties the most important difference between this bill and the Payne-Aldrich bill, which it is intended to supersede, is the method providing for levying duties.

Duties under the present law are, in the main, either specific or compound.

The duties under this bill are, in the main, ad valorem. In other words, this bill assesses taxes upon the basis of the value or selling price of the thing taxed, while the present law assesses taxes upon the basis of the weight and quantity without regard to the quality or value of the thing taxed.

The controversy over the relative merits of specific and ad valorem duties is one of long standing in this country. It began more than three-quarters of a century ago and related chiefly to possible frauds upon the revenue of the Government through undervaluations on the one hand, and to underweighings on the other. These arguments, pro and con, are well understood and need not now be restated.

The objections now urged against this feature of the bill are substantially the same as those that have been made against the ad valorem system in every controversy over specific and ad valorem rates in connection with our tariff legislation from the beginning.

Speaking generally it may be said where protection is the primary purpose of a tariff tax specific duties naturally lend themselves, so to speak, to that purpose; and where the primary purpose of a tariff tax is revenue ad valorem duties are best adapted to the accomplishment of that purpose. The present law is a protection measure and was framed with protection as its primary purpose, and naturally specific rates were adopted. The pending bill is a revenue measure. To raise revenue to pay the expenses of the Government is its primary purpose, and for that reason its authors prescribe ad valorem rates.

INEQUALITIES OF SPECIFIC RATES.

Mr. President, while these questions of administrative difficulties and possible frauds in the enforcement of our tariff laws are undoubtedly important, they are of but minor consequence compared with the injustice, inequality, and the unfairness of assessing an article for taxation upon the basis of quantity, or weight, or measure without reference to value or quality.

The inevitable effect of assessing duties upon the basis of quantity instead of value under the present law is to discriminate against the cheaper and coarser articles covered by the tariff which the poor consume, in favor of the finer and more costly articles which the rich consume. It was repeatedly shown in the discussions of the Payne-Aldrich bill that the specific duties of that bill taxed the coarser grades of woolen and cotton goods, flannels, and carpets which the poor buy much higher than the finer grades which the rich buy.

In his great report upon the Walker bill, Robert J. Walker, then Secretary of the Treasury, in denouncing the minimum and specific duties carried in the law which that bill superseded, declared that these duties exacted annually over $5,000,000 from the poorer classes by raising the duty on cheaper articles above what they would have been if the duties had been assessed upon the basis of actual value.

Mr. President, equality is a fundamental principle of popular government. Whatever does violence to that principle is undemocratic as well as unjust. A tax upon importations upon the sole basis of quantity is an unequal tax, an unjust tax, and an undemocratic tax.

It is as obnoxious to the fundamental principle of equality as would be direct taxation upon the basis of quantity. It is just as unequal as would be a State tax assessing lands upon the basis of acreage without reference to location, fertility, or productiveness. It is just as unequal as would be a State tax assessing a draft horse at the same price as a thoroughbred because they were both horses. It is just as unequal as would be a State tax assessing the humble cottage of the laboring man at the same price as the costly mansion of the rich because they were both houses. Direct taxes levied upon such a basis would be intolerable, and indirect taxes levied upon the same basis while differing in degree nowise differ in principle.

CONCLUSION.

Your committee has devoted two months of earnest thought, study, and investigation in considering the bill submitted to them. It has at all times been impressed with the demand of the people for relief from existing tariff conditions and the necessity for prompt action in this behalf. But we have felt that prudence and wisdom required that there should be a most thorough scrutiny and analysis, and for this reason we have not hesitated to take the time necessary for a thorough understanding and study of the changes proposed and the effect of those changes upon the business interests of the country, both as they affect the producer and the consumer.

It has constantly kept in mind the evils which have resulted from our existing tariff law in establishing monopolies, increasing the cost of living, and imposing unnecessary burdens upon the people. It has also had constantly in mind the pledges of the party now in power and the just expectation of the people with respect to the fulfillment of these promises.

It has given due consideration to the representations of those interested in retaining high rates and has duly considered the arguments and facts upon which they have relied in support of their contention. Like the Ways and Means Committee of the House, it has rejected many of the theories upon which these contentions are based, and likewise it has found many of the contentions upon which these theories were attempted to be justified unwarranted by actual conditions in this country and abroad.

For the reasons given by the Ways and Means Committee of the House your committee has rejected the cost-of-production theory. The grounds upon which this theory was rejected are so conclusive and so exhaustively stated in the several reports of the House committee upon this subject filed during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913 that it is not deemed necessary to restate them here.

Following the lead of the Ways and Means Committee, your committee has sought in its amendments to the House bill to further carry out and perfect the theory of establishing a revenue-producing tariff upon the basis of competitive rates as a just and fair interpretation, in the light of existing conditions, of the latest authoritative utterances of the party in power upon that subject. Your committee now submits the results of its labors with the confident belief that the enactment of the House bill as amended into law will result in a more equitable distribution of the burdens and incidental benefits of our system of customs taxation; that it will tend to disintegrate the monopolies built up under the protective system, and offer enlarged opportunity to individual effort; reduce the cost of living and relieve the people of many of the burdens of the unjust, discriminatory, and oppressive tariff imposed upon them by the Republican Party at the dictation and in the interest of the privileged few who have for more than a third of a century dictated the policy and legislation of that party.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is to be congratulated upon his very clear and understandable analysis of the bill now under consideration. There is one question that I desire to propound to him before I proceed with my own suggestions.

May I ask the chairman of the Finance Committee to make a little plainer to me what is the average rate of duty in the bill before us?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know that I exactly understand the question. Does the Senator inquire with reference to the average ad valorem rate comparison I made between the present law and the pending bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. The average rate of duty, which of course would be the ad valorem rate of duty.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know that I can make it plainer than to state that upon the basis of the calculation which I gave this morning, which included both free and dutiable articles, the average rate carried in the present law would be something over 36 per cent. Using the method that obtains in the departments, of calculating only upon the basis of dutiable imports, the rate in the present law, as I understand, would be something over 40 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. A little more than that, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. A little more than that. I believe in the House report it is estimated at about 40 per cent, upon the basis of the importations of the last year.

Mr. CUMMINS. My question is, Upon the same basis—that is, reckoning only the dutiable commodities—what is the average rate carried in the bill before us? I thought I understood the Senator from North Carolina to say about 27 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the amended bill carries something over 26 per cent on the basis of free and dutiable imports. The average rate carried in the House bill, upon that basis of calculation, is something over 27 per cent and in the Senate bill something over 26 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was very solicitous to be clear upon that point, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator, however, to bear in mind that this basis of calculation was one for comparison. We felt that the only proper basis of comparison of the rates of the three bills was one which took into consideration both free and dutiable articles transferred by either the House bill or the Senate amendments to the free list.

SHOULD BE NO UNNECESSARY DELAY.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am concerned only with the bill now under debate. I had reached the conclusion, upon investigations made by myself, that the average rate of duty upon the dutiable commodities alone is about 25 per cent, and as I shall have occasion to refer to that fact in the course of my argument I wanted the assurance and the verification of the chairman of the committee before I proceeded.

It has been stated very often that there were certain Republican Senators—and I have been mentioned as one of them—who had it in mind to delay the conclusion of the bill through unnecessary and prolonged debate. I take this opportunity to say that, in so far as I am concerned, there is no truth whatsoever in the statement. I shall express my opinion frankly, freely, and fully. I shall present certain amendments as we pass through the bill, but a very short time will suffice for all I have to say. I can not say honestly that I hope the bill will speedily become the law of the land, but I can say with sincerity that I hope it may, with due regard for the fair limits of debate, be speedily voted upon by the Senate.

BILL INVOLVES PERILS OF FREE TRADE AND INSUFFICIENT PROTECTION.

Mr. President, the Republican Party lost the confidence of the people and was driven from power largely because it insisted upon the maintenance of import duties many of which were unnecessarily and oppressively high. The Democratic Party will soon be overtaken by like disaster, because it is about to inflict upon the country a tariff law which, with respect to many things, invites the perils of free trade; which, with respect to many others, imposes duties that are dangerously and destructively low; and which from end to end grievously discriminates against the West in favor of the East—that is to say, in favor of the manufacturer against the farmer.

We have been sailing over tariff seas for a century, and we ought by this time to be fairly well acquainted with the voyage. We ought to know something about the channels through which we can safely pass, the coasts upon either side, and the storms which the mariner must meet; but notwithstanding the experience of more than a hundred years, the navigators of these political and economic waters alternately and regularly meet their end in the waves of selfish and excessive protection or dash themselves upon the shores of unfair and unequal competition. The Republican craft went down in the whirlpool of Scylla in 1912, and its Democratic successor is steering straight for the rocks of Charybdis, where it will go to pieces in the stress of 1916. There is a passageway to safety and prosperity. The progressive Republicans charted it in 1909 and they will chart it again in 1913. Some time the American people will make the trip under these pilots, but in the meantime we must suffer another shipwreck, bearing its hardships, as I hope we will, with patriotism and fortitude.

BELIEVES IN FULFILLMENT OF PARTY PLEDGES.

I voted against the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill not because it was more offensive than the Dingley Act, but because it failed in the fulfillment of a pledge and because a great number of its duties were unreasonably high. I made up my mind to vote for no general revision of the tariff that did not fairly embody the doctrine of protection, a doctrine that can be violated by excessive duties just as it can be repudiated by insufficient and discriminating duties. I will vote against the bill now before the Senate, although in many things it meets my approval, precisely as the bill of 1909, in many respects, was fair and equitable. I will vote against it because it puts many commodities upon the free list which ought to bear a duty and upon many others prescribes duties that are so low that they will give, as admittedly they are intended to give, the American market to the foreign producers, and because its protection is mainly bestowed upon the manufacturing class, while its burdens must be borne by the agricultural class.

In debates elsewhere Republicans, who for years have been fighting for lower duties, have been taunted with inconsistency because they are opposing this bill, which unquestionably presents a revolutionary reduction of the tariff. The taunt comes from either an insincere or a shallow mind. It will not deceive anybody. It is either the cry of ignorance or the thin froth of demagoguery. It could be said with equal force that those of us who for many years have insisted upon lower and more equitable railroad rates must, in order to be consistent, stand for free service from the railways, if a misguided political party were to propose it.

The unjustly high duties of the existing law are bad enough, but the discriminations and the withdrawal of adequate protection in this bill are still worse. To be plainer and more specific, I believe that the men and women of the country who must struggle year in and year out to live comfortably and maintain their families decently will find the struggle more arduous under the proposed law than they have found it under the present law. I sincerely hope that time will prove that I am in error, for I have no pride of opinion that I would not gladly yield to promote the happiness of my fellow men. I am compelled now, however, to act upon my own judgment—a judgment that has resulted from long, patient, and honest study. I feel no party obligation that would restrain me from voting for the Democratic bill if I could believe that it would serve the general welfare. There are hundreds of items in the measure for which I can vote conscientiously, and for which I will vote if I am given an opportunity to do so; but the happenings of the last few months warn me that in the end I must vote for the bill as a whole or vote against it as a whole, and when that times comes the path of duty will be as plain before me as it was in 1909, when I voted against the Republican bill.

It is not my purpose at this time to discuss particular duties. I have it in mind rather to make a general survey of the bill and point out what I believe to be its fundamental errors; but before doing even that I must observe that there are some matters connected with the measure which do not appear in its provisions well worthy of the attention of the Senate and of the country.

EXECUTIVE MUST NOT ATTEMPT TO COERCE CONGRESS.

The influence that has been exerted by the President upon Members of Congress, an influence so persistent and determined that it became coercive, is known to every intelligent citizen of the United States. Without respect to the soundness or unsoundness of his economic views, I am opposed to the executive interference of which he has been guilty, and I intend now, and upon every appropriate occasion in the future, to record my protest against it. There is nothing personal in this criticism. I have urged it against his predecessors, and if I live I shall utter it against his successors, if they follow a like course. The only difference between the present Chief Executive and those who preceded him is that, like all misuse or usurpation of power, the evil grows and becomes more and more pronounced, more and more objectionable. I do not appeal to the Constitution, for it might be changed to give the President the power that he has in fact exercised upon this bill. I appeal to the spirit of free institutions and to the fundamental principles of representative government.

There are many thinkers who believe that the legislative department of a government should hold the executive power, as does, in fact, the Parliament of Great Britain, but it is yet to be proposed that in a free government a single executive should hold the legislative authority of a great people; and yet we are rapidly drifting in that direction. I doubt if there is a man in America bold enough to assert that the legislative branch of our Government should be abolished and that the people should elect at stated times a dictator who would both make our laws and execute them; and yet it would be far better to make this change, revolutionary and shocking as its mere suggestion is, than to tolerate the practice of executive coercion. The President of the United States has greater power and holds more potent influences in his hands than any other man in the world, and if he be strong, in and of himself, he can overcome the legislative will and direct it toward his own purposes. He is the head of his party and holds the chief office of the country.

The administration of the laws imposes upon him the selection of the hundreds of thousands of subordinate officers through which the vast work of the Government is carried on. I do not charge, nor do I believe, that the President, in terms, barters this power for legislative subordination, but I do say that without barter the knowledge of the consequences that may follow legislative independence will bring about all the evils of actual wrongdoing unless the most scrupulous care is exercised in communications between the President and Members of Congress. It lies with the President himself to mark out the path of propriety and to pursue such a course as will enable every Member of the legislative branch of our public affairs to feel free and unrestrained in every vote that he casts. I grant that the President is interested, and ought to be interested, in legislation. The Constitution empowers him to communicate to Congress his opinion upon every subject that touches the public welfare. It is right that he should consult with Members of Congress, and especially with those with whom he is affiliated as a partisan, but it ought always to be made clear that in such consultations or conferences the President enters them stripped of the power which the laws of the country confer upon him as President, and that the failure to agree with him upon any given matter means no more than the failure of two Members of Congress to agree with each other. So long as the President is permitted to set up a standard of loyalty to the party to which he may belong and condemn every man who does not accept it, and so long as Members of Congress vote under the apprehension that they may suffer from the presidential power, controlled by his judgment instead of their own, so long Congress will incur and will deserve the contempt of all true lovers of free and representative government.

Within the fair limits of compromise every act of Congress should embody the reflective, intelligent, and independent convictions of a majority of the Members of both the House and the Senate, and as often as a failure occurs in this regard, just so often do our institutions fail in their high purpose.

I have been a close observer of the measure now under consideration. I believe that in many important particulars it would be modified if every Member of Congress were to vote according to his own view of the public good. I believe, however, that it will not be modified or amended in any essential respect, largely because the President of the United States, assuming to interpret and apply the economic doctrine of his party, has laid the heavy hand of his power upon a branch of the Government that ought to be coordinate, but which, in fact, has become subordinate. It ought to humiliate us all somewhat when we look around and find that the people generally not only understand this surrender of our rights and privileges, but observe it with a certain degree of satisfaction. It is perhaps natural for them to enjoy it, because they have gradually come to believe that Congress looks upon itself as inferior; and it is very human to deride a body of men who, lacking the courage to assert themselves, are whipped by a master hand into subjection.

I have said these things not because they pertain more to the tariff bill than to any other proposed legislation. I have said them not because they are more pertinent now than they have been apt in times past, for what I have just uttered is a mere repetition of sentiments that I declared on the floor of the Senate long, long ago. I would not have my Democratic friends believe that in what I have said there is a particle of party feeling or partisan tinge.

As I said, I have said these things, not because they pertain more to the tariff bill than to any other proposed legislation, but because this is the first important act of the present administration; and so long as I am a Member of this body I intend to do all that I can to lift the legislative branch of governmental power from the low estate into which it has fallen.

LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS SHOULD BE PUBLIC. SECRET CAUCUS DESTRUCTIVE OF POPULAR GOVERNMENT.

Executive interference is not the only misfortune which has attended this bill. It is the product of secret party caucus. It may be that I have no right to speak of the proceedings which matured it in the House of Representatives, and therefore I confine my observations to its history in the Senate. When it came here from the House it was referred to the Committee on Finance. It was at once parceled out among so-called subcommittees made up entirely of members of the majority party. For many weeks these misnamed subcommittees worked over their respective allotments, excluding not only the minority members of the Committee on Finance but the public as well. They gave hearings to those who were immediately interested, and I have no doubt devoted all the time they could to the subject; but the country did not know what was happening before them, and the other Members of the Senate have no information of their proceedings. The whole process was secret and intended to be secret, save as to those of the majority party to whom the work was committed. When these subcommittees had finished their assignments the bill came before a body made up of all the Democratic members of the Finance Committee. Again the Republican members of the committee were not admitted, and again the public was excluded. For something like three weeks this fragment of the committee considered the bill, and it finally reached a conclusion. It was then reported to a closed caucus made up of all the Democratic Members of the Senate, and for two weeks the caucus debated it, offered amendments to it, and voted upon it both in detail and as a whole. Again the public was forbidden the opportunity to know what was being done or what arguments and influences in the end prevailed. I do not know just what occurred, but it is commonly understood that in some fashion or other an obligation grew up by the force of which nearly all of the majority Members of the Senate will feel compelled to abide by the action of the majority of the caucus. When all this had been done the bill was then brought before the full Finance Committee, and was before the committee less than two hours, which, of course, means no consideration whatever. It was then reported to the Senate, and it is here with the strength not only of the Democratic members of the Finance Committee behind it, but with the seal of the secret caucus upon it.

I want to be entirely fair. I believe that I have it in my heart to be fair, and therefore I say that, with the exception of the final caucus, the proceedings this year are a practical repetition of the proceedings attending the Payne-Aldrich bill in 1909. They were indefensible then; they are indefensible now. The Republican leadership in 1909 was willing to exclude the minority of the Finance Committee from participation in making up the bill; but, bold as it was, it was not rash enough to attempt a revival of the tyrannical rule of a caucus.

I do not forget that the people of the country are divided into political parties and that with respect to many matters of organization the minority must yield to the majority; but the solidarity of organization can not be extended to legislation, and especially to legislation conducted in the secrecy of a party caucus. The effect of the proceedings upon this bill is to make the work of Congress as a whole—a work which must be performed in the public eye and where every word uttered in debate is for the public ear—a mere formality. If the caucus is to be supreme, why should we meet here day after day at vast expense with no other possible outcome than that finally the decree of the caucus will be entered as the finding of the Senate? If conscience is to be stifled and judgment bound by the secret vote of a majority of a majority, it would be far better to so amend the Constitution that only members of the dominant party shall sit in Congress. Then, at least, the debates and votes would be public and some individual responsibility would attach to those who may participate in public business. So long as the real legislation takes place in a caucus it can not be known what any man says or how any man votes.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. KERN. I think it would be fair if the Senator would state the fact that the caucus referred to was more in the nature of a conference and that no action that was taken was regarded as binding action on any Senator participating. Not only that, but perhaps it might be well for the Senator to know that in all the sessions of the conference there was the most perfect freedom of debate. The debate extended over a period of nearly two weeks, but under the practice of that conference any one member had the right to demand a roll call, and all roll calls were by order of the conference given to the public, so that on all votes taken the attitude of every member of the conference was made known to the public on the day the action was taken.

In that regard I think it was quite different from that kind of a caucus where the members are bound by caucus action to vote either one way or the other. It was different from that kind of a caucus where a roll call can not be had and where the votes taken are not given to the public. In this case every vote which might be demanded by any member of the conference was by order of the conference given to the public at once, so that the public was fully advised as to how every man in that body stood, or voted, on every disputed question which was there considered.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, the Senator from Indiana knows what happened in the caucus, and I do not.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I, however, availed myself of every means of information open to the general public. I have no doubt that these matters were debated freely and fully in the caucus. I have no doubt that upon all differences of opinion there were votes. The only thing now suggested by the Senator from Indiana which I did not know before is that those votes were made public. I am a somewhat careful reader of the newspapers, and while I frequently saw in their columns, during the course of the caucus, the aggregate vote on the one side or the other, I assumed that, like the proceedings of the executive sessions of the Senate, those votes had reached the public through the grapevine route, through some undisclosed channel.

I am very glad to learn from the Senator from Indiana that the public was given an opportunity to know the outcome of those votes, but I will be glad if he will tell me further just how those votes were communicated to the public.

Mr. KERN. They were communicated to the public by the roll calls that were taken and recorded by the secretary, being handed out to the representatives of the press, who were always present.

Mr. CUMMINS. I beg pardon; as to that last statement I have not so understood it. Does the Senator from Indiana say that reporters were present in the caucus room?

Mr. KERN. Oh, no.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; for I saw them myself camping on the outside. They were very carefully excluded.

Mr. KERN. The reporters were not in the room, but the roll calls were, by order of the conference, given out each day to the representatives of the press.

Mr. CUMMINS. Were those roll calls such as we have in the Senate?

Mr. KERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. Did those roll calls show how each Senator voted?

Mr. KERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not see such roll calls during all the proceedings of the caucus, although I do not, of course, question the accuracy of the statement just made by the Senator from Indiana.

So long as the real legislation takes place in a caucus, I repeat, it can not be known and it is not known throughout the country what any man says or how any man votes.

It is not only invisible but it is inaudible government. We have heard many and severe criticisms launched against the invisible government of the United States, and we have now added to it the inaudible government of the country as well. Any contrivance, scheme, or combination that prevents, or has a tendency to prevent, freedom of individual opinion, or that makes a vote cast here the reflection of party authority rather than the expression of individual judgment, is an offense against free government and a denial of the most sacred rights of the people. It is to be regretted that in these days of progress, these days of publicity, these days when standards of fidelity are being lifted higher and higher, the Congress of the United States is the scene of legislation through party caucus. I venture the prediction that there will be swift and overwhelming condemnation of a practice which has nothing to commend it and which was long ago rejected by the best sense of civilized mankind.

BELIEVES IN SYSTEM OF PROTECTION FAIRLY APPLIED.

I now turn to the bill itself for such general analysis as the time at my command will permit me to make.

I believe in that system of taxing imports which is commonly known as the system of protection. It is difficult for the country to view it without prejudice, because, for many years at least, we have had, in my opinion, no law which fairly expressed it. The existing statute imposes so many exorbitantly high duties that the principle itself has fallen into apparent disfavor with a great many people who ought to be and who upon further reflection will be its sincere friends. It would serve no good purpose to set forth at this time the argument which sustains it or to recite the experience which vindicates it. It is in the truest sense a regulation of our commerce with foreign nations. Against the protective doctrine there stand two economic theories: First, that duties should be laid for revenue alone, or for revenue as the chief object; second, free trade with foreign nations, just as we have free trade among the States.

TARIFF FOR REVENUE UNJUST AND INTOLERABLE.

With regard to a tariff for revenue—and I beg the attention of my Democratic friends now—with regard to a tariff for revenue, whether solely or chiefly, I believe it is obsolete, unjust, and intolerable. If tariff duties are not to be levied to equalize conditions of production—that is to say, for protection—they ought not to be levied at all. The moment protection becomes unnecessary free trade is demanded by every consideration of justice and equality. Duties imposed for the purpose of raising a revenue are taxes upon consumption, and whatever may have been true in the days when governments seemed to exist for the encouragement of the rich rather than to defend the poor, in these days when governments are taking more thought of humanity and less of property a tax upon the consumption of all the people merely to raise a revenue is abhorrent to even the bluntest conception of fair dealing. There is but one exception to the rule I have just stated. It is this: That such taxes may be laid either upon imports or domestic production if the commodities upon which they are laid are of such character that the public welfare will be promoted if their consumption is diminished; or, to be more specific, upon such things as intoxicating liquors, tobacco, and the like. If I did not believe that an import duty put upon an article would benefit the man who bought it and used it commensurately with the higher price he is compelled to pay for it, nothing could induce me to favor a duty upon it. I would hold myself an enemy of mankind if through import duties I were to raise the price of any commodity which the people generally used and ought to use simply to put money into the Treasury of the United States. If I ever cease to be a protectionist I will be an absolute free trader, for there is no tenable ground between these two economic principles.

TAXES SHOULD BE PAID ACCORDING TO THE ABILITY OF TAXPAYER TO BEAR THE BURDEN.

We have reached a stage in our development when the great majority of the humane students of public affairs believe that taxpayers should contribute to the expenses of the Government according to their ability to bear the burden rather than according to their necessities. Or, in other words, they should pay in proportion to their accumulation and not in proportion to their consumption.

If this revision has merit, it ought to endure either the test of the Democratic faith or the Republican faith. In my opinion it is a dismal failure, whether tried by the one or the other. Let us look at the bill, therefore, from two standpoints—first, the Democratic, and, second, the Republican. I do not, of course, occupy the former, but I know what it is, for the traditions and creed of that party are known to every student of history and to every observer of public affairs.

The Senators upon the other side believe—I hope they will mark now what I say, because if I am wrong in this I desire to be corrected—the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber believe that the only object which justifies a duty or a tax on an imported article is to raise the necessary money to pay the expenses of the Government. They believe that the tax so laid not only increases the price of the imported article by the amount of the duty, but also the price of any like article produced in this country. They believe that the only person who receives any benefit from such increase in price is the person who produces and sells the domestic article. They believe that all who buy or use it are taxed for the profit of the producer, without any compensating advantage. If there be any Senator present who cares to deny the statements I have just made, I will gladly yield for an interruption.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into a discussion with the Senator on those propositions now, because they could not properly be discussed in a colloquy. I want to say there are several of the propositions which the Senator announced that I do not think anybody agrees to, but I will not do more than enter a denial at this time.

Mr. CUMMINS. In order that I may be perfectly clear, I am going to state them again, because I have always supposed that these were cardinal declarations in the Democratic faith; and I do not speak of them disparagingly, because they have been held by a vast number of not only good but patriotic men.

Let us see. They believe that the only object which justifies a duty or tax on an imported article is to raise the necessary money to pay the expenses of the Government. I have heard that declared upon the Democratic side of this Chamber more than a hundred times since I became a Member of this body. They believe that the tax so laid not only increases the price of the imported article by the amount of the duty, but also the price of any like article produced in this country. I have heard that emphasized an equal number of times, with one possible modification, namely, that there are some of the competitive articles the price of which is not raised the full amount of the duty upon the imported article, but that is only a matter of degree and not of principle. They believe that the only person who receives any benefit from such increase in price is the person who produces and sells the domestic article. I have heard that declared in terms so fervent and with an eloquence so inspiring that I have not been able to doubt that it was the Democratic faith that the tax benefited only the man who produced the article and could not by any possibility benefit the man who used or consumed it.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to say, Mr. President, that I hope the Senator from Iowa, who has heard that statement so frequently, will turn to the page of the RECORD and quote it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not believe that I have misinterpreted the Democratic doctrine. If so, you have all become protectionists.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no; by no means, Mr. President, and, least of all, have we become the kind of protectionists that the Senator from Iowa is.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, sir.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will pardon me a moment, I will say that I can very well appreciate the man who is a genuine protectionist; I can appreciate the man who advocates the doctrine of protection without qualification; but I do not appreciate the attitude of such a protectionist as is the Senator from Iowa. The Senator from Iowa is a protectionist who thinks it is an iniquity to take a high degree of toll by a high protective duty, but that it is an entirely proper thing to take a low toll by a low degree of duty; in other words, admitting the fact, which I presume the Senator will not deny, that the levying of a tariff duty raises the price of an article to the consumer, the Senator from Iowa thinks it is all right to take a little bit from a man by such a process, but all wrong to take a large amount from a man by such a process.

That is the sort of protectionist I say he is; the last kind of protectionist that I would be. If I were going to be a protectionist, I would be, I will say without disparagement or offense to the Senator, an honest protectionist—a man who believes in the doctrine and is ready to follow it to its legitimate conclusion—not a man who puts one foot on one horse and the other foot on another horse.

DUTIES SHOULD NOT BE HIGH ENOUGH TO MAKE COMBINATIONS POSSIBLE.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, of course I did not invite any personalities in the suggestion that I made; I did not ask the Senator from Georgia to appreciate the kind of protectionist that I am. I have not made any inquiry of him in that regard. I am discussing the Democratic faith, and he answers me by at once assailing the consistency of my own. However, I pause for a moment for the purpose of stating just what kind of protectionist I am.

I do believe in fair protection; I do believe in raising the price of articles produced in the United States to the American level of price; I do believe in protecting the American producers from the unfair and unequal competition of other lands. I do not believe, however, in such duties as will enable the American producers to combine among themselves and lift the American price above the point of fair profit in American production. If the Senator from Georgia sees dishonesty in that belief, I must leave him to cherish such an opinion of my views as he may see fit to do.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to interrupt the Senator to read just a few lines from the Democratic platform in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] of what he believes is the view of the Democratic Party.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota for that purpose.

Mr. GRONNA. I read from the Democratic platform of 1912, as follows:

> We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government, under the Constitution, has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of government honestly and economically administered.

Mr. BACON. I wish that could be read in every Republican speech that is made.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was not unaware of that declaration of the Democratic platform. It has been in every Democratic platform, with possibly one exception, since I have known anything about public affairs. I have no thought in my mind of dishonesty on the part of those who believe that doctrine. It is a view that has been accepted by a great many men over a great length of time, and in stating that doctrine as I did state it I supposed that I was repeating the most familiar axiom of the Democratic belief.

Mr. BACON. And the Senator was not in error in that particular.

TAX ON CONSUMPTION UNJUST; BURDENSOME TO THE POOR.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is expected by the authors of the bill before us to raise, when all its provisions have become effective, a revenue of about $200,000,000 or $250,000,000 yearly. If its duties were laid entirely upon articles the like of which are not produced in this country, namely, upon noncompetitive things, the result would be, from the Democratic point of view, that the consumers of those articles would be taxed to the extent of $200,000,000 or $250,000,000, or practically one-third—not reckoning the postal receipts—of all the expenditures of the Nation. The tax would be paid by the people in proportion to their use or consumption of the articles bearing the duties. The poor man, earning just enough to feed and clothe himself and family, would pay substantially as much as the man with princely income, and inasmuch as the vast majority of the people work for barely enough to supply their actual wants, the final outcome is that the men who are always struggling against poverty and hunger would pay by far the greater part of the immense sum I have just mentioned. This is always the result of the iniquitous system of taxing consumption instead of wealth, unless those who consume share the benefits of increased price.

The Government must live, and if there were no other way of providing for its support we would be compelled to resort to the injustice of such a tax, but no Democratic Senator can take refuge behind a defense of that kind. There are other ways, easy, open ways for creating a revenue without laying the burden of a penny upon the consumption of the people, and I have marveled in the past, and I am wondering now, why a great political organization, the members of which believe that the consumer can not be benefited by an import tax, persists in crucifying the great mass of the people, who are already suffering the misfortunes of poverty, upon the cross of a mediæval and repudiated theory of taxation.

If the proposers of this bill, who are so emphatic in their denunciation of the system of protection, had done nothing more than levy duties in the manner I have described, they would be defenseless in the court of reason and justice, but they could perhaps summon from the antiquity of semicivilization precedents to sustain them. What I have already described, however, barely suggests the enormity, from their standpoint, of the thing they have actually done. They have not confined their duties to noncompetitive articles—that is, to commodities not produced in this country; on the contrary, they cover a wide range of commodities which are produced at home, and in the sale of which in our markets we compete with foreign rivals. This means that the duties levied, not from my standpoint, not from the standpoint of a protectionist, but according to the Democratic belief, will raise the prices by the amount of the duty, upon our entire competitive domestic production. I have undertaken to ascertain, as best I could, the value of that yearly production.

First, let us have no controversy with regard to this fundamental idea: Do you believe or do you not believe that duties upon competitive imports will increase the price in America of the like products manufactured at home? That is the charge against protection made by our friends, the Democrats; the sum and substance of it all is that we increase the price of our domestic articles in order to permit them to be manufactured here. Let us see. We produced in the United States commodities competitive in their character in the year 1909—that being the year whose energies are recorded in the last census report—and upon which duties are levied in this bill of the value of not less than $18,800,000,000, a sum, of course, so vast that it is impossible for the human mind to grasp it. Remember, now, that I asked the chairman of the Finance Committee just at the close of his address the average rate of duty upon articles upon the dutiable list, and you will remember that he replied to me, substantially 26 per cent, including both dutiable and free importations. I will take it at 25 per cent upon dutiable importations alone. My assumption will work rather against the conclusion I am now reaching than for it. You have levied an average rate of at least 25 per cent upon imported articles the like of which we produce in this country, and we produce them to the extent of $18,800,000,000. Tell me whether you believe that the duty upon these articles increases the price of these $18,800,000,000 of commodities by the amount of the duty? I do not suppose that any one of you will dare assert that it does; but do you believe that it increases the price of this vast production in some degree? I will take it, however, now as increasing the price or prices by the amount of the duty.

IF DEMOCRATIC THEORY IS SOUND, DUTIES WILL INCREASE PRICES NEARLY FIVE BILLIONS.

If the average rate of duty upon these articles is 25 per cent, the duties will increase the price of one year's product in the aggregate $4,700,000,000, and, according to the Democratic view, that, together with the $250,000,000 that we pay upon the imports themselves, is the tax that you put upon the consumers in order to raise the $250,000,000. This increase in price can be justified only by the assumption that those who buy and consume are benefited equally with those who produce and sell; and the very moment that we depart from that proposition the whole scheme of taxation at our customhouses becomes insupportable and indefensible.

I am assuming, of course, in the argument I am making that the Democratic side of this Chamber repudiates the doctrine of protection. If they do, I invite them to dwell upon the picture I have drawn. I am bound to believe—and I say in all sincerity that I do believe—that in their hearts these Democratic Senators are protectionists. If they are not, they can never atone for the wrong they are about to commit.

Pursuing the analysis further, it will be interesting to study the classification of the producers who will be benefited by these duties and of the producers and workers who receive no favor in the bill, who must not only sell what they have to sell without an increase of price, but must pay the favored ones the billions added by the duties of the bill. I have prepared a map of the United States, which now hangs in your sight and to which I invite your attention. Upon the area of each State is marked the value of its dutiable production and its free production; also the total production and the percentage which the dutiable production bears to the whole. I do not assert that these figures are mathematically exact, and I desire now to make to the Senate a statement of the manner in which they were prepared.

I have been compelled to estimate some of the factors which enter into these aggregates for the reason that the sources of information in the Census Bureau and other bureaus of the Government are not so classified that the statistics there found can be applied with absolute precision to the various items of the tariff bill. I do assert, however, that this showing is substantially correct, and no variation of estimates, which generally relate to small enterprises, would affect the conclusions which appear in this showing.

Observe, first, that I have divided the country by a line drawn along the course of the Mississippi River. The upper part of the line, however, departs from the river and pursues the eastern border of the State of Minnesota, which is entirely included in the western group of States. All of Louisiana is also included in the western group of States. It is my purpose now to make some comparisons in the application of this bill to the States which lie in these two great divisions of the United States.

Permit me to take my own State as a beginning. The total production of Iowa in 1909, as shown by the census of 1910 and the reports of the Geological Survey for 1911 and 1912, was in value $1,069,988,280. Pausing here a moment permit me to say, parenthetically, that the statistics relating to manufacture and agriculture which I am about to present are all taken from the last census, and with respect to minerals from the recent reports of the Geological Survey. Of the total production of Iowa, $472,914,934 is dutiable and $597,073,346 is free; that is to say, 44 per cent, in value, of the things which we in Iowa produce are dutiable.

EIGHTY PER CENT OF NEW JERSEY'S PRODUCTION ON DUTIABLE LIST; ONLY 44 PER CENT OF IOWA'S PRODUCTION ON DUTIABLE LIST.

I notice my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] is giving me close attention and therefore I compare, for a moment, the State of New Jersey with my own. I do it also because there is not much difference between the value of the yearly production in New Jersey and in Iowa. New Jersey produced in 1909 a total of $1,277,643,237. Of that production we of Iowa are permitted to buy without duty $265,965,729, and we are compelled to pay a duty upon the productions of New Jersey, if we buy them, to the amount of $1,011,877,558, or 80 per cent of the whole; that is to say, the State of New Jersey, which has furnished to the Nation a most distinguished and learned President, and which has furnished to the Senate of the United States two of the most valiant champions of free trade, or an approach to free trade, who have ever been received within its walls—New Jersey has 80 per cent of her production protected while Iowa has but 46 per cent.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg to say, Mr. President, so far as one of New Jersey's representatives in this body is concerned, that if I, honored as I am as a Senator from the State of New Jersey, had my own way I would lighten even further the burdens that Iowa has to bear.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure of that. I only mention it to indicate the helplessness of the Senator from New Jersey. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I am not so abjectly helpless.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is helpless in this respect, or he would have put upon the free list more of the productions of his State, I am sure.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize, and the Senator must, too, that I am a member of a great party; and I want to say, in defense of our caucus, to which the Senator has alluded, that it was a most typical Democratic caucus. We advocated our respective sides of the various schedules to our hearts' content, and as Americans, as Democrats, and as citizens under a democratic form of government we bowed to the edict of the majority and allowed our individuality and our individual thoughts to be swallowed up by the majority of our party. We believed that we were best advancing the welfare of our Commonwealths and the welfare of our country by so doing.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can have no doubt of the sincerity of the Senator from New Jersey; and the only difference which he and I manifest at this time is that I have long cherished the notion that, under the institutions of our country and the Constitution of our land, we ought to bow to a majority of the Members of the Senate and not to a majority of the members of a secret caucus.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I beg to say, Mr. President, that I believe I am a patriot; I bow to that which I believe shall be best not only for my Commonwealth and for my party, but to that which I believe may best inure and accrue to the welfare of my country. I am so imbued with Democratic doctrine, I have such deep and abiding faith in the principles of justice of the Democratic Party, that I believe I am advancing the country's interests by adhering to its decrees.

Mr. CUMMINS. Again, I say there is not a suspicion of doubt in my mind regarding the sincerity of my friend from New Jersey, and I am quite sure that he feels vastly more confidence in the decision of the caucus than he would feel in the decision of the Senate.

COMPARISONS BETWEEN VARIOUS EASTERN AND WESTERN STATES.

I pursue the inquiry a little further, because I do not want to seem to be invidious. Minnesota, one of the bright stars in the western constellation, had a total production in value of $915,056,559, of which $360,654,983 are dutiable and $554,401,576 are free. I may say that what I have already shown means that 39 per cent of the production of Minnesota is in some way or another, in some degree or another, protected by this bill.

I turn to Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania has a total production of $3,697,821,639, of which $2,134,735,384 is dutiable and $1,563,086,255 is free, which means that of her production 58 per cent is dutiable as against the 39 per cent of Minnesota.

Kansas, to use another illustration, with a total production of $880,771,826, has on the dutiable list $262,430,761 and upon the free list $618,341,065, or, in other words, 30 per cent of her production is protected either in greater or less degree by this bill. I now compare Kansas with Connecticut and Rhode Island.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I simply want to ask whether in those figures the Senator has included wheat and flour in the free list or the dutiable list?

Mr. CUMMINS. The free list, both of them.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Senator understands, of course, that there is a countervailing duty in the Senate bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that there is a pretense of a countervailing duty; but I answer the question by saying that they are both reckoned in the free list in the figures I have made up.

Mr. THOMPSON. They are not actually upon the free list.

Mr. CUMMINS. They are upon the free list, Mr. President, unless some other country is permitted to make our tariff bill for us. For myself, while I believe there may be some especial merit in a particular reciprocity treaty, I have never believed in putting the commerce and the business of the United States at the mercy of any foreign nation through a general law for countervailing duties. But I have answered the question by saying that I have reckoned them to be on the free list.

Connecticut, in the eastern group, with a total production of $548,229,146, has $459,191,252 dutiable and $89,037,894 free, being 87 per cent dutiable—more aggravated than New Jersey, for New Jersey has but 80 per cent, while Connecticut has 87 per cent of all her productions on the dutiable list, and Kansas has 30 per cent of her productions under the same protection.

MOST INVIDIOUS AND DEFENSELESS DISCRIMINATION IN THE HISTORY OF TARIFF MAKING.

I might pursue this comparison to cover all the States west of the Mississippi River. In the map before you I have put upon each State its full production, its dutiable production, its free production, and the percentage which the dutiable production bears to the whole. I earnestly hope Senators will give that showing the most careful consideration, because it is conclusive of the most invidious, the most defenseless, discrimination that was ever practiced in the history of tariff making.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, would the Senator deem it wise to insert the entire table in his speech so that we may see it?

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have the tables here; and the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire recalls to my own mind a purpose to ask that they be printed as a part of my remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust that will be done. I think it will be very interesting to all of us to examine them at our leisure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have prepared a table embracing all the States of the Union, showing the grand total of production, the free production, and the dutiable production; the production in manufactures, with the free and the dutiable production; the production in agriculture, with the free and dutiable production; and the production in minerals, with the free and the dutiable articles separated; also certain summaries. I ask that I may have them printed as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator if he has made any comparison with reference to the commodities of the different States under the present tariff bill, showing what proportion is on the dutiable list and what proportion on the free list?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator does not know what the ratios would be?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know precisely, but I know that no such disparity exists as I have just suggested. I have not, however, made a comparative table so as to present the table to the Senate. I hope before the debate is over some one who is industriously inclined will prepare a comparison of that kind, because I myself should like very much to see it.

I might pursue this comparison to cover all the States west of the Mississippi River with a similar number of States east of the Mississippi River, and the disparity which has been pointed out would be found to be substantially the same as has been indicated in the comparisons already instituted. I will add a table which will complete the showing already outlined. I sum it up, however, with this statement: Now, mark this:

The total production east of the Mississippi River in the year I have mentioned was $24,914,673,048. Of this production $14,811,052,242 is on the dutiable list, being 60 per cent of the entire production of that part of the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves this subject will he institute a comparison between Arizona, for example, which is a Southwestern State, and North Carolina, which is a Southeastern State, and give us the difference between the two?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can do so in a moment. I am glad the Senator mentioned that, because it gives an opportunity to show that my friend from Arizona, or somebody for him, has worked out very closely his theory in this bill.

The product of Arizona amounted to $127,901,248. Of that $116,603,827 is on the free list and $11,297,421 on the dutiable list. That means that just 9 per cent of the products of Arizona are found on the dutiable list and 91 per cent are on the free list.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senator to yield only for a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. This bill has been denounced as a free-trade measure, but the criticism is not correct, sound, or just. There is no absolutely free-trade civilized nation in the world, as the learned Senator knows.

There may be free ports in the world, but, I assert, no free-trade civilized nation. Not even is England a free-trade nation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me by citing history. Of course, this is all very well known to us.

Mr. ASHURST. I will only be a moment; but I wish to emphasize the facts I have stated. While all I have just stated is true, it is also just as true that every man is a free trader at heart after he gets his own interests protected.

I am perfectly proud of the position that Arizona occupies. Out in that State of boundless resources we do not demand protection. We produce a class of men and women who are able to go into the arena of life and take care of their own affairs; are able to manage their own business and earn a subsistence without any gift, bounty, or largess from the Government. The people of Arizona have provided poorhouses for men who must have a bounty from the Government in order to subsist.

So I am perfectly proud that Arizona occupies the position that has been stated. I am pleased that the Senator saw fit to advert to it. A protective tariff system is nothing more and nothing less than a means of allowing one man to get without working for it that which another man works for but does not get.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am sincerely obliged to the Senator from Arizona. When I announced a few moments ago that that was the Democratic view I was sharply rebuked. I beg now that what you have just heard from the Senator from Arizona may be added to what I said in trying to explain or to interpret or to state the Democratic doctrine. I agree with the Senator from Arizona that if you tax one man to benefit another and the person who is taxed does not share the benefit it is nothing less than robbery. But in view of what the Senator from Arizona has said, I commend him to the tender mercies of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], who has 80 per cent of the products of his State upon the dutiable list.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the State of New Jersey suffers by that comparison, Mr. President. If her interests require more protection than ours, then all the more pity for New Jersey.

Mr. CUMMINS. I leave that also to the Senator from New Jersey. [Laughter.]

I was asked to compare Arizona with North Carolina. North Carolina had a total production of $461,269,413, of which $253,-396,402 are on the dutiable list, or 55 per cent, as against the 9 per cent of Arizona.

I will restate a sentence:

The total production east of the Mississippi River in the year I have mentioned was $24,914,673,048. Of this production, $14,-811,052,242 is upon the dutiable list, being 60 per cent of the entire production of that part of the country. The total production west of the Mississippi River in the year named was $10,301,016,313, of which $4,041,224,327 was upon the dutiable list, being 39 per cent of the whole production of that part of the country lying west of the Mississippi River.

This is the equivalent of saying that according to the Democratic view prices are raised by this bill upon 60 per cent of the enormous production east of the river, while it raises the prices of but 39 per cent of the lesser production west of the river. If the Democratic doctrine so often announced is sound, and if it be true that the producers of domestic products are alone benefited by import duties, and that the consumers are taxed for the sole advantage of the producers, it will be interesting to hear the defense for this grievous discrimination against the people who live in the Mississippi Valley and beyond.

The value of the entire production of the United States in the year was $35,215,689,361. Dismissing for my present purpose the mineral product, I find that the value of manufactures was $20,625,435,000, of which under this bill $12,984,486,740 is upon the dutiable list, being 63 per cent in value of all the manufactured product. The total value of all agricultural products was $12,337,644,446, of which $5,381,363,596 is upon the dutiable list, or 43 per cent of the whole. Even this comparison does not adequately show the discrimination against agriculture, for the average percentage of duty upon agricultural products is very greatly less than the average percentage upon manufactured products. Taking the comparison of the figures themselves and the fact I have suggested it seems clear that there has never been so gross and unwarrantable a discrimination against agriculture in the last hundred years of our national history.

Remembering still that this measure is based upon the theory that an import duty upon a competitive product raises the price of the domestic product by the amount of the duty, and not forgetting that the Democratic doctrine is that the consumer is taxed for the benefit of the producer, I have worked out a few illustrations which will show in a graphic way some of the effects which the bill will accomplish.

Again, I take Iowa and New Jersey as my first illustration. Assuming that the average rate of duty on all dutiable things is 25 per cent and that the people of Iowa were to consume all that New Jersey produces, and that the people of New Jersey were to consume all that Iowa produces, we would have this result: Iowa would pay New Jersey $202,375,512 on account of the duties imposed by the bill. New Jersey would pay Iowa $94,582,987 by reason of the duties upon the commodities she produces, with the final outcome that the people of Iowa would pay the people of New Jersey $107,792,525 every year in excess of the amount they would receive.

Again, take Massachusetts on the one side, producing $1,593,551,802, and Nebraska and Minnesota on the other side, producing $1,582,493,542. Upon the same assumption Nebraska and Minnesota would pay Massachusetts $204,570,781 yearly on account of the tariff. Massachusetts would pay Nebraska and Minnesota on the same account $118,600,799, which means that Nebraska and Minnesota would pay Massachusetts every year an excess of $85,969,982.

Again, take Connecticut and Rhode Island in the eastern group, and Kansas in the western group. The production of the two former States is $843,423,364. The production of the latter State, in the western group, $880,771,826. Kansas will pay to Connecticut and Rhode Island on account of the tariff annually $144,361,270. Connecticut and Rhode Island will pay Kansas $52,486,152, leaving Kansas to pay annually to Connecticut and Rhode Island in excess of the amount she receives $91,875,118.

Let us take another and larger group of States, namely, Louisiana, Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Missouri, Nevada, and Oklahoma. All these States produce in the aggregate substantially the same amount as does Pennsylvania alone. Nevertheless upon the same basis or assumption, they will pay in a year to Pennsylvania $166,133,603 more on account of the tariff duties than Pennsylvania will pay to all of them.

Let us take a still larger group of States and in order not to be in the least discriminating I will begin on the western coast and take them in their order, as follows: California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Wyoming, Colorado, and Montana. These States produced $4,237,633,641. New York, in the East, produced $4,091,-085,166. Upon the assumption that I have already set forth, this group of Western States will pay in one year to New York $241,431,319 on account of the tariff in excess of the amount that New York will pay to them.

It may be said that these comparisons are fanciful and imaginary. So they are in one sense, for of course the people of one State do not consume all the products of the people of another State. Nevertheless, in the mighty clearing house of the Nation, if the Democratic proposition is sound, there will follow substantially the results which I have pointed out in the hypothetical cases.

BILL RANK WITH INJUSTICES EVEN FROM DEMOCRATIC STANDPOINT.

I need go no further. The bill is rank with injustice and discrimination, even if we accept the Democratic faith and test it by the revenue standard.

Under the permission already granted I add here a series of tables illustrating the comparisons I have just made.

Suppose that New Jersey consumed what Iowa produced, and vice versa. Let the tariff rate be assumed 25 per cent.

I turn now to view the measure from the Republican standpoint; that is to say, from the standpoint of one who believes that the chief, if not the only, object in levying duties upon imports should be to equalize the conditions of production, the general purpose being to enable our producers to reach the American market and supply it, if they are willing to do it, at fair prices. I do not intend at this time to enter upon an argument in defense of the doctrine of protection. Its validity has been under discussion almost continuously for more than a century. The literature of the subject is complete, and our experience under it as a nation is recorded in almost numberless volumes. The doctrine assumes, with respect to the greater number of commodities, that the cost of production is greater here than abroad—greater because the laboring man gets more for his work and the general standard of life is higher. It is obvious that the Republican doctrine, to be either just or successful, must be consistently applied to all production falling within its scope—that is to say, to all productions wherein there is, or is likely to be, a substantial difference in the cost of production.

Discrimination practiced either in imposing too high a duty upon some things and too low a duty upon other things, or in attaching an adequate duty to some things and no duty to other things, if there is a difference in cost here and abroad, while not destroying all the benefits of the system must inevitably distribute its benefits unequally and therefore unjustly.

We have been told by our Democratic friends over and over again that they abhor the protective doctrine, but that in levying duties solely for revenue some protection incidentally and necessarily follows. This is manifestly true; but the difficulty is that the incidental protection becomes not only incidental but accidental as well, and the result is that from my point of view the bill before us is not only glaringly unjust from the protective standpoint, but so disproportionate in its various parts that it is absurd and grotesque.

PEOPLE DID NOT VOTE FOR ANY SUCH DISTORTED REVISION.

In my judgment the people at the last election did not vote for any such distorted revision of the tariff as is now presented for our adoption. They wanted a reduction of duties in order to prevent combinations at home from exacting exorbitant prices and thereby extorting excessive profits and accumulating piratical fortunes. They wanted a reduction of the duty on every commodity to the point of fair, decent protection, and if upon investigation it was found that any article is produced here as cheaply as it is abroad, they wanted the duty entirely removed from that article.

They did not want to transfer any part of the American production to foreign lands. They did not want to lessen the wages of any American workingman. They did not want to furnish the manufacturer with free raw material from abroad to the ruin of the domestic producer of that raw material. They did not want to expose the small producer of the more finely organized forms of manufacture to the destructive competition of other countries simply because the great trusts needed little or no protection. They did not want to classify American producers into manufacturers and farmers, protecting one and exposing the other to the raids of the outside world. They did not want to sacrifice the West upon the altar of the East. They did not want unfairness, inequality, or discrimination.

The Democratic Party has misunderstood the meaning of the election of 1912, as it will discover at the first opportunity which the voters have again to express themselves. I am not one of those who believe that general disaster will necessarily follow the enactment of the bill now before us. Unquestionably it will increase the importation and diminish the home production of a great many things, and will force into idleness many workingmen; but I earnestly hope that its effect in that respect will not reach the proportions of an industrial revolution. It is easy to see, however, that the depression which must inevitably follow might be aggravated by other causes into a general disaster.

REASONS WHY MEASURE CAN NOT BE ACCEPTED BY PROTECTIONISTS.

I am not censuring the Democrats for their failure to present a wise, reasonable, protective measure. They make no pretense of a desire to levy duties for protection, and I am referring to that phase of the subject to show why one who has so long insisted upon a reduction of the tariff can not support a bill in which the protection is accidental and haphazard, even though it does reduce duties. This measure can not be accepted by a protectionist, no matter how earnestly he believes that the duties of the Payne-Aldrich law are too high or how sincerely he may be fighting for their reduction, because—

First. It takes the products of agriculture and puts them, in the main, upon the free list, not on account of an equality with foreign producers in cost of production, but solely on account of the character of the commodities which are raised on the farm. It is probably true that some of these commodities need no protective duty, and ought to be on the free list for that reason; but many of them do require such a duty, and to treat the farmer as an outlaw simply because he uses the soil instead of a machine as the basis of his production is so manifestly wrong that I can no more give my support to the proposition when presented in this form than I could give it when it was proposed to exclude him from the benefits of the protective system through an alleged reciprocal arrangement with Canada. I do not intend just now to inquire into the cost of production with respect to any commodity. I content myself with the proof of discrimination that I have already suggested, and I repeat that of the total value of domestic manufactured products 63 per cent are dutiable, while of the total value of agricultural products only 43 per cent are dutiable. Striking as these percentages are, they do not disclose the full enormity of the Democratic classification, for it happens that a very large part of the agricultural products that are put upon the dutiable list is made up of commodities which either can not be imported into this country at all, or which can enter only a little, narrow strip of our territory bordering upon eastern Canada, or which, by their very character, must be consumed in the localities in which they are produced.

Second. Generally speaking, the bill proceeds upon the theory that the manufacturer of the finished product—that is to say, the product in the form in which it is finally used or consumed—is entitled to its raw material free of duty. I am utterly opposed to this view of a tariff law. If the so-called raw material can be produced in this country as cheaply as it can be brought in from abroad, then there should be no duty upon it, and no honest advocate of protection would propose a duty upon it; but if it costs more here than it costs elsewhere, and if the industry which produces it is one which ought to be carried on in this country, then the raw material of the manufacturer should be dutiable, and the measure of the duty should be precisely the same as is accorded to the manufacturer upon his finished product. To me the proposition that the manufacturer of woolen goods should be protected by a duty because it costs him more to make them than it costs his competitor in England, Germany, France, or Belgium, and that wool should be admitted free, although admittedly it costs more to produce it here than in Australia, South America, or Africa, is a monstrous doctrine. Many other instances could be pointed out, but I reserve whatever I have to say upon particular schedules for another time.

Third. Entirely apart from the obvious discriminations of the bill, its duties are, upon many commodities, destructively inadequate. While some of them are quite high enough, and indeed too high, measured by the protective standard, it still remains true that what may be called the lesser industries of the country will seriously suffer. Every careful observer must be aware of the fact that what are loosely called the trusts have two characteristics in the management and conduct of the business in which they engage—first, the substitution to the last degree of machinery for men and the reduction of men to the rank of machines, so that their labor demands the lowest order of intelligence, with a corresponding diminution in the price paid for it; second, an overwhelming and irresistible power over their employees, which extinguishes independence of action.

SMALL ENTERPRISES DETERMINE PROSPERITY OF COUNTRY.

With such institutions the difference in cost of production between our own country and other countries must necessarily be slight, and therefore very low duties, or none at all, are required. When, however, we pass from these mammoth undertakings to those of smaller enterprises, which in the aggregate determine the prosperity of a country and which produce things which demand the employment of a great deal of manual labor, which can be performed only by men and women of high intelligence and long training, and which must be performed under circumstances that give to the laborer an independence which is unknown in the so-called big business of the country, we enter the field of high wages, large labor cost, full competition, and fair prices. It is with respect to such industries that this bill most signally fails. There has been no inquiry, apparently, into the cost of production, either here or elsewhere, and I am warranted in saying that because but a few moments ago the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee declared to the Senate and to the country that the committee had repudiated in all its work an inquiry into the cost of production. I fear that we are about to cripple the very industries that we should be most solicitous to encourage and maintain. As the debate proceeds I intend to point out specifically and prove conclusively the unfairness of the bill in this respect. For the moment I do nothing more than to assert that duties upon articles produced by labor that is really free and that require in their manufacture the training, skill, and fidelity which distinguish the American above all his fellow men are in the main below the protective point and must result in putting these men and women, of whom we are so justly proud, into a competition with the men and women of other countries so unfair that all of us—Republicans and Democrats alike—will be shocked when we see it in actual operation.

In a former part of this argument I have pointed out how unequally the protection which it contains is distributed among the producers of the Nation. I will not review again the statistics I have already presented; it is sufficient to say that when duties are imposed without regard to the difference in labor cost or cost of production here and abroad, and without entering at this time into the hopeless confusion in manufactures themselves or in agricultural products themselves, it appears that 63 per cent in value of all the manufactures of the United States are either adequately or inadequately protected by duties and that only 43 per cent in value of all the agricultural products are protected, a man who believes in protection, and at the same time in equality and fairness, can not look with favor upon the measure. This thought is intensified and emphasized when it is remembered that, disregarding the classification of commodities, taking them all together, 60 per cent of those produced east of the Mississippi River are dutiable and but 39 per cent of those produced west of the river are dutiable. I do not suggest that there was either class or sectional feeling among the Democratic members of the Finance Committee or in the Democratic caucus. On the other hand, I believe that their motives ought not to be, nor can they be, successfully impugned. The whole trouble has been that upon a stormy sea they have been without chart or compass and their ship is on the rocks. They began their work repeating to themselves their favorite maxim, "A tariff for revenue only." They encountered the declaration in their platform which bade them injure no legitimate industry, and they were confused and bewildered. They collided with the demand of the President that agricultural products must be reduced in price, and they tried to put that idea into the bill. Moved by all these conflicting principles and emotions, they have produced the most inconsistent and indefensible tariff law ever offered to the American people.

I repeat my hope that it will not bring on general disaster, but at the same time I assert that the burdens which it imposes are put upon the people who are least able to bear them.

We can go along for years with one part of this country bearing an unjust burden without meeting financial or industrial disaster. It is in the power of the people of our country to bear these burdens. They have borne them in the past in a degree, and they can bear them again. I am not assailing this bill because I believe it will generally close the shops and the factories of the United States. I am opposing it because I believe that in it, without any intelligent or conscious desire to protect American interests and American labor, you are taxing one body of the people for the benefit of another body, and taxing them to a degree never before dreamed of in the laws of the country.

INCOME-TAX PROVISION WISE IN PRINCIPLE BUT OUGHT TO BE AMENDED.

I have dealt solely with that part of the measure which concerns duties upon imports. I have not referred to the income-tax provision. I am now and long have been an earnest advocate of a Federal income tax. While the proposal for such a tax in this bill ought to be amended in some respects, yet, if it can not be amended, I am for it as it is, and will gladly vote to adopt it if I have an opportunity to do so as a distinct matter. Whether that chance will be given to those of us who believe in this form of taxation is with you.

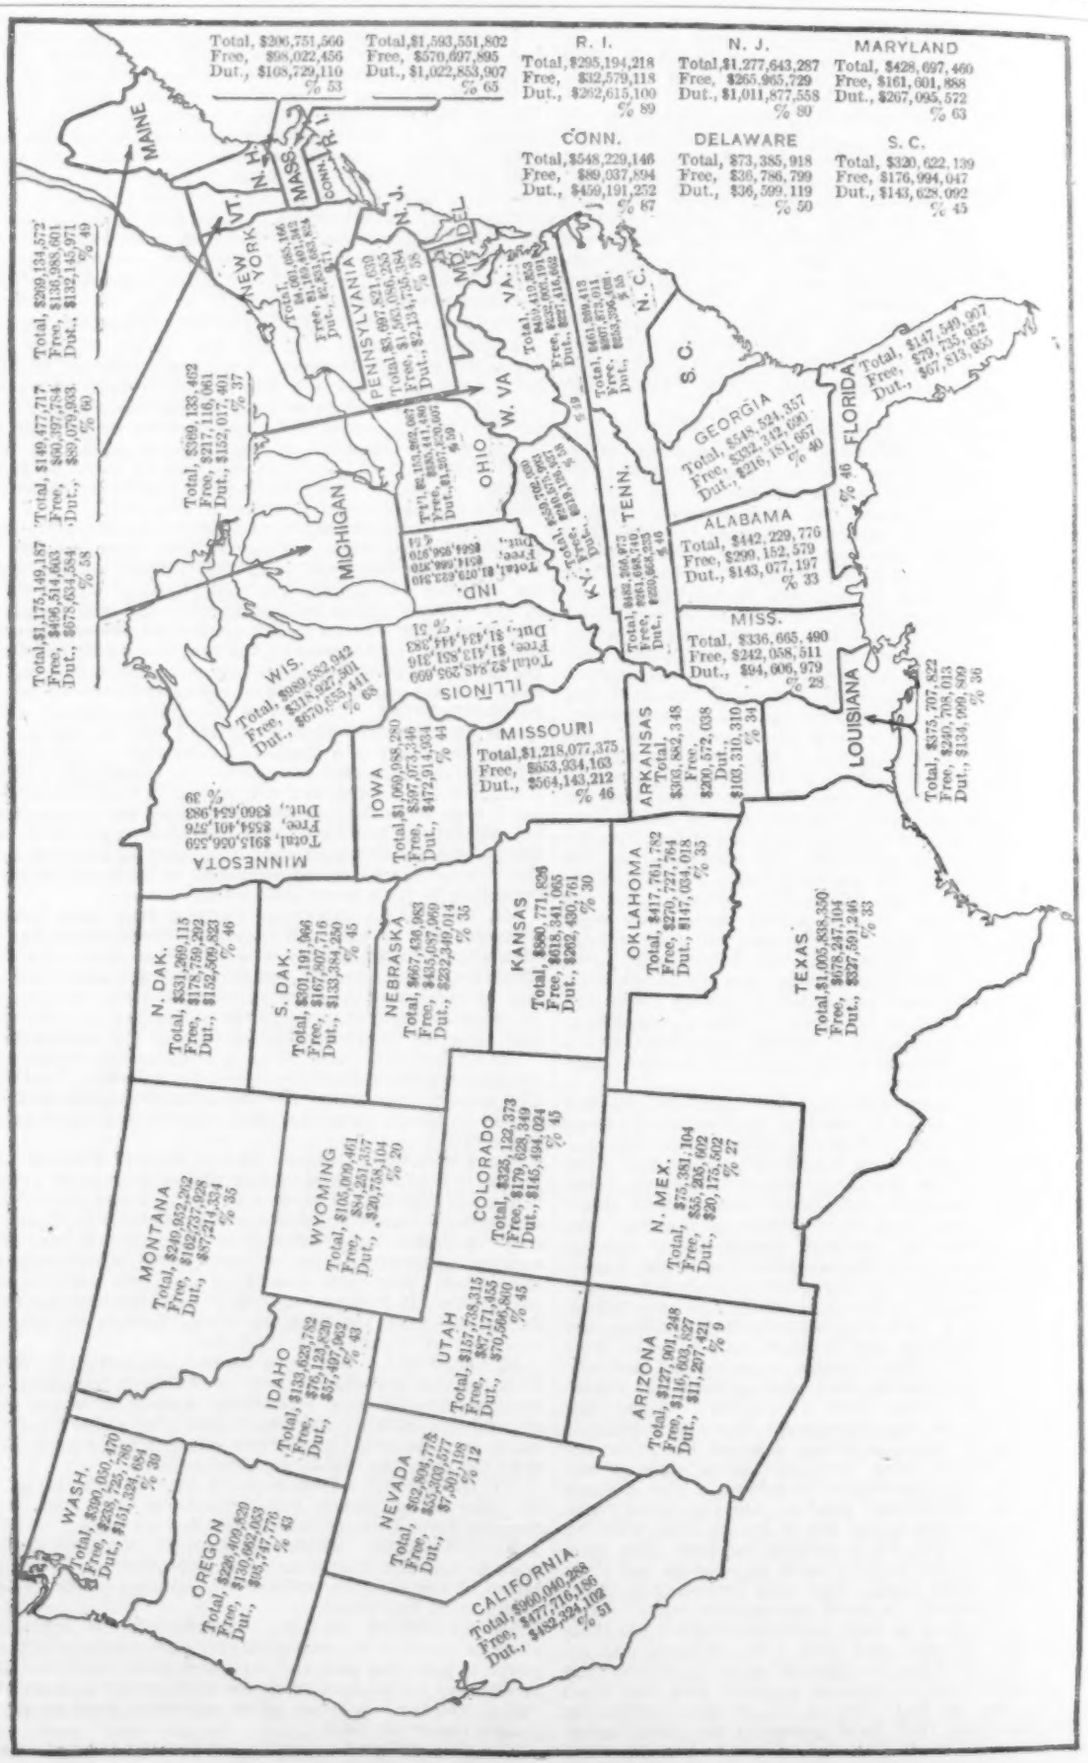
I am sincerely obliged to you for the attention you have given me, and I close with just one further thought—this bill illustrates, just as the revision of 1909 illustrated, the iniquity and the injustice of a general revision of the tariff. If the Congress of the United States wanted to take the real judgment of its Members, if it wanted to sift their consciences, if it wanted to embody their convictions in the law, we would be given the opportunity of voting for those things in this bill in which we believe and the opportunity of voting against those things which our judgments reject. The evil of the system against which I protested in 1909 and against which I protest again is drawing within the limits of a single bill thousands of applications of an economic doctrine that can not by any possibility be classified in a single vote. I suppose I will appeal in vain now as I did then, but I hope from the bottom of my heart that some time we will be sufficiently intelligent and sufficiently patriotic to present these laws so arranged that the votes upon them will divide the Members of Congress according to their convictions and not according to their party affiliations.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the Senator from Iowa takes his seat I should like to make an inquiry. The Senator has in a map divided the country into two grand sections, the Mississippi River being the common boundary for the most part. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he made any calculation or can give any statement of the amount or proportion of duties laid upon the products of either side of the boundary?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not. I made no calculations upon that subject, nor do I think it would be material, for this reason: The importations under the law of 1909 furnish no guide whatsoever to the importations that may or will come in under the law of 1913.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire whether that would not be true of all tariffs and of 1909 and all other years?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have said many times that the effort to estimate the imports under a particular duty on the basis of the imports under some other duty is utterly futile. It teaches nothing whatsoever, and we have many times been misled by that effort. You have a duty at one point which excludes importations. It may be reduced 10 per cent and the foreign producer will take the market. That depends entirely upon the condition of the domestic producer.



Mr. SMOOT. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator. If he will let me take the map on which he has given this information as to the total production of each State and the amount of products dutiable and free, I will add in blue figures upon the same map the total production of each State and the products dutiable and free under the present law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. I can not, of course, reproduce the map in my speech, but I would be very glad to allow the Senator from Utah to take it for that purpose.

Mr. CHILTON. Before the Senator takes his seat I merely wish to ask him if I understood him correctly. Does the calculation of the Senator embrace the mineral products and all the products of the State?

Mr. CUMMINS. It does. It embraces the three great divisions of production—manufacture, agriculture, and minerals. I ought to say here that the statistics with regard to the mineral production were taken from the most recent reports of the Geological Survey. All the other statistics were taken from the census report of 1910.

The map referred to was subsequently ordered to be printed in the RECORD and it follows.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if there is no Senator who desires to continue the discussion, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THORNTON in the chair). The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 21, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 19, 1913.

COMMISSIONER OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 21, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Industrial Club, of Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring an appropriation to provide suitable homes for American representatives abroad, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CLAPP presented petitions of sundry citizens of St. Paul and Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minneapolis and St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Northern Minnesota Development Association, favoring an appropriation for the construction of drainage ditches, roads, and firebreaks upon portions of the ceded Chippewa lands owned by the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the city council of Minneapolis, Minn., favoring the Government ownership of telegraph and telephone companies, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of sundry manufacturers and merchants of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the importation free of duty of cigars from the Philippine Islands, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PERKINS:

A bill (S. 2798) to provide for warning signals for vessels working on wrecks or engaged in dredging or other submarine work; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 2799) granting a pension to Lucinda P. Fayette (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 2800) to amend section 34, volume 31, United States Statutes at Large; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO TARIFF BILL.

Mr. McLEAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $400,000 to make payment of a part contribution to the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a memorial in the District of Columbia to commemorate the women of the Civil War, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH PATRICK.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 140), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Sarah Patrick, widow of Lewis S. Patrick, late clerk to the Committee to Investigate Trespassers on Indian Lands, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate resolution 139, by Mr. FALL, comes over from a previous day. It will be laid before the Senate.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 139, submitted on Saturday last by Mr. FALL, as follows:

Resolved, That the constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders, and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government, both for himself and his property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is not in the Chamber, being unavoidably detained. I ask that the resolution may go over to-day without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the further consideration of the resolution may be postponed for the day without prejudice.

Mr. BACON. I rose for the purpose of moving the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but in deference to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah I have no objection to its going over until the Senator from New Mexico can be present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The morning business is closed.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3321, the unfinished business, on which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] gave notice that he would speak this morning.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. May I at this moment, for purposes which are evident——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. If I may be permitted just to make a suggestion, which I have reason to believe necessary to make, I must suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. Does that suggestion of mine violate what the Senator thought I would do? Will it take too much time?

Mr. CUMMINS. I was about to make a request.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will state the point of order.

Mr. BACON. The point of no quorum having been made, nothing can be done but the calling of the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to state that it could only be postponed for a moment by unanimous consent. As the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia is in the nature of an objection, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Lippitt	Simmons
Bacon	Fletcher	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Gallinger	McLean	Smoot
Brady	Gronna	Martin, Va.	Sterling
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Stone
Bristow	Hollis	Norris	Sutherland
Bryan	James	O'Gorman	Swanson
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Page	Thomas
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones	Pittman	Thornton
Chilton	Kenyon	Pomerene	Townsend
Clapp	Kern	Root	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	La Follette	Saulsbury	Warren
Colt	Lane	Sheppard	Williams
Crawford	Lewis	Sherman	Works

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce that both the Senators from Pennsylvania are unavoidably absent on important business.

I wish also to make an announcement concerning the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. He is detained from the Senate by reason of protracted illness. I will not repeat this declaration in any future calls of the Senate to secure a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has been absent all morning on departmental business, which accounts for his absence from the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in the address I made on Saturday I referred to a map that was on the wall, in sight of Senators, but I did not ask that the map be made a part of my address for the reason that I assumed it was not practicable to do so. I have ascertained since that it is, and that it can be photolithographed, or in some other way made available at a cost not to exceed $5. That is not my estimate, but the estimate of the printing clerk of the Senate.

I am aware that it can not be done without the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing, but I think that before I even ask to send the request to the Committee on Printing I ought to have the consent of the Senate, inasmuch as I did not ask it while I was making my speech. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the map be reproduced and be made a part of my observations.

Mr. GALLINGER. For my own information I wish to inquire whether, if the Senate itself orders the map inserted in the RECORD, we should have, in addition to that, the consent of any committee of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand. The Chair thinks that the Senate is sufficient under existing rules and regulations.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my view. I think it ought to be sufficient.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was informed by the printing clerk that I must have the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing. I do not know other than that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Joint Committee on Printing has in the past had control over the RECORD, and of course it has control over the RECORD to-day. It has made an order that no photographs or maps shall be printed in the RECORD, and members of the committee on the part of the Senate have refused time and time again to permit Members of the other House to have photographs and maps put into the RECORD. We have also refused it in the Chamber here. I think the Senate has expressed itself upon one or two occasions to the effect that it was a very bad practice to be indulged in, and I should like——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the map which was presented by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was most illuminating, and I sincerely hope the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will not object to its being printed in the RECORD. Further than that, I hope the Senator will keep his promise to offer for printing the same kind of a map in connection with the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was going to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that this matter be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing. Then, they, in turn, will report to the other House and to the Senate whatever their decision may be.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if it is not necessary for me to have the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing for this purpose, I do not want the matter referred to that committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is necessary to have the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing, both under the order of the Joint Committee on Printing and under the rules of the two Houses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if the Congress itself has given jurisdiction to the Joint Committee on Printing to control these matters and take them out of the hands of either House of Congress? It seems to me that the Senate ought to have authority to decide that a matter of this kind, which was a part of the Senator's speech, should be inserted in the RECORD, and that it ought not to be held up by any committee of the body.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the Senator from Utah if the rule does not make a distinction between a map or an exhibit of that kind that is asked, independently of a speech, to be inserted in the RECORD, and a map or a matter a Senator is using in his speech to illustrate the points he is making and which is necessary for a full understanding of his argument? It seems to me almost preposterous that a map of that kind, so associated with a Senator's remarks that it is of very great convenience in understanding the force of his argument, can not be controlled by the body to whom he is delivering the address, but must be referred to a joint committee, part of which is composed of Members of another body. I therefore ask the Senator from Utah if there is not some distinction between the two situations?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in full sympathy with the request of the Senator from Iowa; I should like very much to see the map printed in the RECORD, and I have no doubt that the Joint Committee on Printing will authorize it to be so printed; but the order or rule is as I have stated in reference to photographs and maps, and it has been followed in the past in relation to the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Utah stated, if I understood him correctly, that the Joint Committee on Printing had control of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. No; of the printing of the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Control of the printing of the RECORD. I notice on page 2894 of the RECORD a reference to section 40 of the public-printing act of January 12, 1895. Does the Senator from Utah mean that the joint committee has control of the printing of the RECORD under that statute or under any statute of the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is not an objection to the printing of the map. I wanted the request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to have the map printed in the RECORD to take the same course as all similar requests have taken ever since I have been a member of the Joint Committee on Printing. When that course is taken I do not hesitate to say to the Senator that more than likely a meeting of the committee can be had to-day to pass upon the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to make a statement in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. The Chair declared it to be his opinion that it was competent for the Senate to include the map in the RECORD. The Chair presumed that because there was no statute prohibiting it the Senate was in control of its own RECORD. The Chair, however, finds that the Joint Committee on Printing has formulated a system of rules, which was published in the RECORD of July 19, on page 2804, the sixth of which is as follows:

Sixth. No maps, diagrams, or illustrations shall be inserted in the RECORD without the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing. All requests for such approval should be submitted to the Joint Committee on Printing through the chairman of the Committee on Printing on the part of the Senate or of the House, in whichever the speech desired to be illustrated may be delivered, and no maps, diagrams, or illustrations shall be inserted that exceed in size a page of the RECORD.

The Chair proceeded upon the theory that that rule was applicable only where the Senate had not taken different action.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The rule quoted by the Chair was formulated, I am quite sure, with the idea that there ought to be some kind of an estimate made as to the cost of the printing of maps that might be used in argument or offered to be printed. The usual course is to refer such matters, as the rule prescribes, to the Joint Committee on Printing. It often occurs that that committee is able to limit the cost, that otherwise might be very enormous, of the printing of maps and encumbering the RECORD in a way in which the Senate would not approve. I am quite sure that the committee will be very glad, indeed, to facilitate the proper presentation of the argument and the data that any Senator offers. I presume that very likely there will be no objection whatever raised to that; but there ought to be some kind of an estimate made and some sort of consideration of the matter with a view of limiting the cost and the scope within which this sort of matter may appear and the space it may occupy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no disposition to prolong the discussion; I do not think it is necessary to do so. I was aware of the fact that the Joint Committee on Printing had adopted the rule to which reference has been made; but that rule has never been adopted by the Senate itself; and if a committee of the body can adopt a code of rules governing legislation here, of course we are then in the hands of a committee and not in our own hands. Therefore, I repeat that, in my judgment, notwithstanding that the committee has formulated the rule, it is entirely competent for the Senate itself to determine its procedure and to have inserted in a speech such matter as the Senate in its wisdom shall decide. I think the position taken by the Chair on this question is absolutely correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, if I wanted to do so I could, under the statute, object to the printing of this map, because the statute specifically provides that there shall be an estimate as to the actual cost before anything is printed as a document.

Mr. GALLINGER. The request is not to print it as a document, but as part of a speech.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not asked that it be made a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that, Mr. President. I am not going to object to this map being printed, because I should like very much to have it printed; but I do believe that it will be the means of bringing into the RECORD many objectionable maps and photographs which in the past have been kept out under this rule. Of course I think that the committee could report to-day upon the question in its regular order and have the map duly printed in the RECORD; but I shall say nothing more about it if the Chair decides that it may be printed without reference to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah whether, in the formulation of rule 6, which has been referred to by the President pro tempore, one of the provisions of which is that—no maps, diagrams, or illustrations shall be inserted that exceed in size a page of the RECORD—

the committee claims that the statute has given the Joint Committee on Printing authority to make that rule?

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I had the printing laws here with me, but I find I have not.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can answer that, if the Senator from Utah will allow me.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator has the statute before him, I should like to have him quote it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have the statute here. Section 13 of the act of January 12, 1895, provides that—

The joint committee shall have control of the arrangement and style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and while providing that it shall be substantially a verbatim report of proceedings, shall take all needed action for the reduction of unnecessary bulk, and shall provide for the publication of an index of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD semimonthly during the sessions of Congress and at the close thereof.

It is under the act of 1895 that the joint committee claims authority to make the rules.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But does the Senator claim that under that act the Congress of the United States has taken away from the power of either House to order anything inserted in the RECORD of its proceedings that it chooses?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not claim that precisely; but I claim that under this act the committee had the power to make this rule and that that is the regular course of procedure. Of course, if the Senate desires by special action to do something else, I presume the Senate has the power to do it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the Senator is justified in his claim that under this statute of the United States the committee had authority to make a rule which provides that no maps, diagrams, or illustrations shall go into the RECORD except upon its approval, the statute has deprived either House of Congress of the authority to put anything in the RECORD without the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing. I should like to see the map published, but under the rule it can not occupy more than one page of the RECORD. The only interest I have in the matter is to straighten out the powers of the Joint Committee on Printing, if possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the Senator from Iowa that there be printed in the RECORD the map used by him at the last meeting of the Senate in connection with the speech delivered by him. [Putting the question.]

The motion was agreed to.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the map of the United States as marked and referred to by Senator CUMMINS during the delivery of his address on H. R. 3321 on the 19th instant be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of his address.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, as I have endeavored to prepare a connected argument, I request that I may be allowed to proceed without interruption.

Mr. President, I approach the discussion of this subject with no worship of protection as a fetish, but rather with a conviction that whenever there shall be an era of comity and mutual concession in trade among nations and our own country shall have reached a point when its productive capacity has been fully developed free trade might be a rational policy. But such is not the present situation. The disposition to restrict trade among nations and to grant access to markets only on rendering concessions in return is on the increase rather than otherwise. Again, while our own country has made marvelous progress in almost every branch of industry and production, it is still far from reaching that varied development in which its capabilities shall be thoroughly tried. Consequently, this year 1913 is no time for entering upon untried paths or the acceptance of theories which do not square with existing facts. Although the statement may be made that the one guiding principle is the creation of competitive conditions, the proposed measure is based upon the idea that tariffs should be levied for revenue and not for protection. If duties which are in fact protective have been retained, it is rather accidental than intentional or results from the necessity of securing adequate revenues.

The pending bill proposes vital changes in principle and sweeping changes in the details of our fiscal legislation. I believe that the proposed measure is based upon theories which are erroneous and that its adoption will prove to be disastrous to our industrial activities and to the whole framework of our economic and social life. Again, it will not accomplish the beneficial results which are claimed.

In order that legislation may be framed which shall be permanent, it is desirable that we should give attention to great fundamental principles and facts. These principles and facts should govern our action rather than purely local interests or partisan considerations. It is especially desirable that from the great mass of conflicting arguments and statements relating to tariffs we should eliminate those which will not stand the test of analysis.

There is no question upon which there has been a wider divergence than that of protection and free trade. The great majority of writers on economics have taken one view, while statesmen and men of affairs, at least in the making of laws, have accepted another, and as a result of this situation we have often heard the absurd expression that free trade is correct in theory but that protection is right in practice. Theory and practice can not be opposed. That which is right in practice must be theoretically right as well. If they differ it must be because the information upon which the theories are based is not sufficient or the inferences from that information are wrong. What, then, is right both in theory and practice?

We can not rely on two arguments for protection used by Mr. Henry C. Carey, namely: First, the great saving in the cost of carriage consequent upon producing commodities at or near to the place where they are to be consumed—transportation alike with production is a part of the cost to the consumer, and if it can be delivered to him at a lower price after paying the cost of transportation as well as that of production no different rule or principle applies; second, that relating to agricultural products—distant consumers do not, as home consumers do, give back to the land of their country the fertilizing elements which they abstract from the soil. Here again the same principle applies; the cost of maintaining the quality of the soil is naturally a part of the cost of production, though the extent of the deterioration of the soil is not so readily computed as the cost of transportation and often is not taken into account.

Another argument of Mr. Carey's which has much more of validity is that it is a necessary condition of human improvement that towns should abound, that men should associate with others of pursuits and mental cultivation different from their own. These associations are highly important, though with the modern tendency to the city there is no question but that towns will abound.

There is also a difference in the principles relating to commodities, in furnishing which we are under a permanent handicap as compared with those which after a time, with acquired skill and the investment of capital, can be produced here as cheaply as elsewhere.

Let us concede the full force of the argument that free trade is the best policy for this and all countries. It is maintained that free trade between nations is a necessary consequence of the advantages arising from a division of labor. Just as among individuals in every community there is a variety of employment and those having special capacity or skill for providing certain commodities furnish those commodities for all, so as between nations the exceptional advantages and capacities of different countries should be taken into account. Just as the carpenter resorts to the hatter for a hat, so the citizens of a country having fewer advantages for the manufacture of any article should resort to another country where the industry in question has an exceptional foothold.

It is alleged that protection causes industry to turn to less advantageous channels and lessens the productivity of labor; that in providing within our borders a supply of a certain article which requires the fostering influence of a tariff there is a waste of energy. If an article can be obtained more cheaply abroad, domestic labor should be exerted in the making of something for which it has special skill or advantages which could be exchanged for the given product. It is said that protection prevents this. Protection, in short, is obstruction. It is a way of preventing people from getting things. Free trade sanctions the idea that wherever in any part of the earth an article can be obtained at the cheapest price there it should be purchased, and all markets should be open for it; that to seek to provide a local supply causes a waste of capital and labor. If in changing from a régime of protection to free trade protected industries are destroyed, the eventual result will be that workmen will turn to more advantageous industries. Supplies of goods produced under conditions of superior efficiency will be available to export in exchange for imports, thereby resulting in a more productive employment of labor.

It is conceded by the advocates of free trade that some of a nation's industries may be crippled or even killed by unrestricted commerce. They view this possibility with calmness, not because they deny the fact but because they are content with the compensation. Many leading advocates of free trade, however, have maintained a more liberal opinion toward the doctrine of protection. They have conceded that for a time the imposition of duties may be desirable for the development of a particular industry; that a fostering influence should be afforded similar to that furnished by the granting of a patent which extends to the patentee a measure of protection from competition for a period of years. Economy of production attained by a people who have perfected a branch of industry constitutes a formidable obstacle to the introduction of the same branch into a country in which it does not exist. It will be difficult without protective duties to maintain competition between newly established industries and the long-matured establishments of another country; time is required for the acquisition of the requisite skill and efficiency. Encouragement must be given to capital to establish new undertakings and to labor in order that it may be induced to turn aside from other occupations and acquire the facility necessary for the work.

There is another view as regards protective tariffs similar to that just named which maintains that every country in its normal development must pass through three stages. The first is the condition met in a newly settled country, under which absolute freedom in the admission of products of other countries is most desirable. In new areas abounding in minerals, in timber, or in tillable lands, divers implements are required for recovering the minerals, cutting the timber, and the cultivation of the soil, and making available for use their natural resources. The furnishing of commodities which involve large investments of capital and acquired skill is practically out of the question.

In a second stage, which marks the beginning of a more advanced society, with a desire for local sufficiency and for affording a field for all the varied capabilities of an ambitious people, there is naturally a period of restriction in which very considerable duties are imposed upon imports. It is recognized that manufacturing and other enterprises must in their beginnings labor under serious disadvantages in comparison with older communities. It is equally recognized that if assured and symmetrical growth and diversity of employment are desired, such a period of restriction is essential. The whole history of trade and manufacture show this disposition to impose barriers upon imports wherever a more complex and developed society has been sought.

In a third period, whenever all the varied possibilities of a country have been developed and the special adaptability for certain lines of enterprise have been made known, there is a natural tendency toward free trade and the removal of restrictions.

One of the most conspicuous defects in the applicability of the doctrine of free trade as taught by Adam Smith and the early economists is the fact that they did not live in an era when wholly unprotected industries were possible. The physical circumstances with which they were surrounded inevitably gave a measure of protection to local industry which was only dimly recognized, but which nevertheless was a very potent factor in the situation.

The crude and expensive means of transportation available in those times placed between the producers of commodities separated by only comparatively short distances an almost insuperable barrier. The added cost of foreign commodities occasioned by the cost of transportation afforded a degree of protection far in excess of the ordinary modern impost. Under the conditions prevailing a hundred years ago the cost of transporting a bushel of grain from the interior of the United States to the consumer in London would have afforded a measure of protection to British farmers in comparison with which the burdens imposed by the Corn Laws were inconsequential. Mr. Mulhall, the statistician, made the striking statement that it now costs less to transport a bushel of wheat from Minneapolis to Liverpool than it cost in the days of Miltiades to carry it from Marathon to Athens. The fact is that free trade in the sense in which it is possible under modern conditions of communication and of transportation is a thing heretofore unknown in the world and is a condition which must inevitably modify our views as to the freedom of trade which might be wisely practiced.

Against all the arguments for free trade it may be said that in the first place the theory proceeds upon the hypothesis that man is wholly an economic creature, with perfectly single and simple motives; that he is moved entirely by the desire for gain. In the second instance the theory assumes that it is the individual consumer who is the sole determining factor with which the policy concerns itself. Neither of these assumptions is correct. In the first place, the purely economic man does not exist; in actual practice human nature is exceedingly complex, and the motives that control the springs of action may be so different from those assumed by the economist as to destroy the validity of the entire theory. In the second place, the theory is defective in that those who control the fiscal policies of a people must consider not only the individuals who make up the Nation, but national life as a thing quite apart from the life of its individual citizens. Mere cheapness or accumulation is of minor importance in comparison with the organization and maintenance of the productive forces of society. While the interest of the consumer must not be lost sight of, the protection and development of national life, the maintenance of its internal sufficiency, making possible the development of its natural resources and affording diversity of employment for all the varied capabilities of its people, are objects which must be promoted even at the expense of individual consumers.

Again, the free-trade policy, if applicable at all, is applicable only on the theory that it can be universally applied. If the consumer is to secure the benefit that is urged as its essence, it must be possible for the producer anywhere in the world to exchange the products which he can produce most efficiently for other products which can be more efficiently produced by some other producer, no matter where located, and the process of this exchange must be wholly unfettered. The very statement of the theory is a prediction of its downfall; the very fact that different races exist, to say nothing about their organization into alien nations, is indicative of disastrous results. Nearly all the nations of the earth sedulously maintain barriers against the trade of other countries.

The above analysis suggests the peculiar weakness of the free-trade policy. The attempt on the part of a free-trade nation to apply the theory in practice without the concert of other nations reveals the serious disadvantage of such a position. Even if theoretically in the most correct situation, she is in far the worse position to enforce her point of view. She can have recourse to no other means of protecting her interests except to persuade the statesmen of other countries that they, together with herself, would be better off under a régime of freedom in commerce; while they, on the other hand, can bargain between themselves to her disadvantage and at the same time profit by access to her open markets. One nation under an established policy of protection may deal with another nation, which is under a policy of protection, and agree as between themselves to admit the goods, the one of the other, under the most favorable circumstances as to production and demand, while a free-trade people must stand by as a suppliant saying, "I have given all as of good will."

Such a people might console themselves with the theory that as within their own borders freedom of trade would teach their laborers and artisans to direct their energies into the channels of the highest efficiency, yet as a matter of fact it would not be the policy of her own statesmen but the policy of foreign statesmen that must eventually determine into what channels her industrial activities must go. Englishmen, for example, might at a given period be the most efficient producers of certain manufactures, but if France, Germany, and the United States, being the chief markets for these products, should each build a high protective wall and thus enable their own citizens to supply these products, Englishmen must direct their energies into some other fields in which they were less efficient. Hence it happens that a one-sided free-trade policy can not fulfill its own fondest hope—that of directing energy into the fields of the highest efficiency. To illustrate, suppose there is a list of products, which we may term "Group A," which can be produced in our country on a basis, say, of 75, while the cost in foreign countries is 100. On the other hand, there is a list of articles, which we may call "Group B," which can be produced in foreign countries at a basis of 75, while in our own country they cost 100. It is an hypothesis not different from an actual fact to suppose that the foreign country or countries levy a duty of 40 per cent on "Group A," while our own country levies a duty of 40 per cent on "Group B," so that, although the articles can be produced in this country at 75, they can be disposed of in the foreign country only after paying a duty of 40 per cent, making the cost to the consumer there 105 as against 100 in their own country, and the same is true of articles in "Group B" produced in a foreign country. They can only be disposed of within our borders after paying a duty of 40 per cent, or at a cost to the consumer of 105 as against 100, at least, unless the foreign exporter is willing to sell below the price obtained in his own country; that is, below 75. This simple illustration shows that unless the free exchange of products universally exist the theories of free exchange can not be made applicable. Prof. MacCunn, although a warm eulogist of Cobden, forcibly expresses himself in relation to his forecasts regarding free trade. He says:

> One of the great reasons for the failure of his predictions is undoubtedly the growth, both in fact and idea, of that spirit of nationality which is perhaps the most forceful and pregnant political movement of the present age. The spirit of nationality has also made itself felt in an ideal of citizenship which has been gaining ground since the middle of the nineteenth century. It is the very essence of the idea of citizenship that the citizen and nation are bound together by bonds more intimate and more organic than was previously supposed. Cosmopolitanism is still desired, but there is no antagonism between it and patriotism, because a genuine cosmopolitanism must rest on patriotism.

He also says:

> It is a matter of fact that the vitality of the protective spirit has falsified all Cobden's forecasts. And it is not to be wondered at. For Cobden's eye was upon trade. And it is not considerations of trade alone that have maintained and built tariff walls. In that case they would not be so formidable; they might fall before free-trade arguments. No; these tariff walls which stand so firm, which show no signs of crumbling, are due to the alliance of trade with the spirit of nationality. For this spirit of nationality, to which the national interests are paramount, looks upon markets from a different point of view from that of cosmopolitan Cobden, who would fain have opened all of the markets of all the world to everybody. It does not concern itself much with the world as a whole. It does not think of leveling the barriers between nations. It thinks first, and sometimes it also thinks last, of securing markets for the national industries. Its instinct is for monopoly—a large, a national monopoly, but still monopoly. And if it can handicap or exclude altogether other nations from its own home markets or oust them in foreign markets or monopolize spheres of influence, the probability is that it will try to do so. It has no aspirations after an international division of labor. It lends no ear to free-trade theories. It is deeply dipped in the spirit not only of industrial but of political rivalry. And though it may be denounced by free traders as fatuous and as defeating its own ends by its fiscal follies, it is not shaken; it goes on. For the reason why it does not accept free-trade arguments is not that it can not understand them. They are not at all hard to understand. The reason is that it looks at the facts—the facts of trade and commerce—from a different point of view.

Thus the arguments for free trade have been rejected. This is illustrated by the tariff history of the most advanced nations of the world. In countries other than England the almost universal policy until about 1860 was in the line of restriction. High protective tariffs were in vogue in Europe. In the year 1860 Louis Napoleon of France entered into an agreement with England under which there was freer trade, and marked reductions were made by France and other nations by treaties of reciprocity, but with the overthrow of the empire in France in 1870 and the establishment of a republic a change commenced which has been called the protectionist reaction.

France increased duties in 1871 and again in 1872. In 1881 many increases were made, though raw materials in large numbers escaped taxation. At the last date specific were substituted for ad valorem duties. The law of January 11, 1892, made a great advance in duties on most imports and established the policy of concession of lower rates to nations according reciprocal favors. Germany did not quite so speedily come under the influence of the so-called reaction as France, but under the leadership of Bismarck in 1875 and later years very considerable increases were made in duties and a definite policy of protection was adopted. Bismarck in his presentation of the proposals on the subject called special attention to the example of the United States and ascribed to our protective policy the reason for our growth and prosperity. By a tariff in force since 1906 many duties were increased, except as in favor of countries with which trade agreements exist, and the policy of general and conventional tariffs more completely adopted. Italy until the year 1875, as shown both by treaties and legislation, was somewhat disposed against protection; but a revision of the duties in 1877 and again in 1887 made material increases in rates and made of Italy, as well as of Germany, a distinctively protective country. In the same period Austria raised duties. Russia has continued and strengthened those which already existed. In Japan the same policy has been adopted. A treaty of reciprocity with Great Britain, which gave great advantages to English trade, was terminated at the earliest possible moment. Perhaps the most striking of all has been the course of the colonies of Great Britain, every one of which has adopted a protective policy, and the tendency has been decidedly toward increased duties and to allow reductions only to countries granting equivalent advantages.

A striking lesson in support of the wisdom of a protective policy is derived from the comparative growth of different countries in recent years. A comparison of Great Britain with the United States, Germany, Italy, and Japan shows a far more rapid increase in the latter countries in many of the most essential branches of trade and industrial activity. Notwithstanding the almost stationary population of France, that country has shown more rapid advance in some lines of trade. This disproportionate growth is especially striking in the case of iron and steel, regarded as the best barometer of trade and industrial activity. Until the year 1889 the quantity of pig iron produced in Great Britain exceeded that of either the United States or Germany, but in the year 1890 the United States produced the larger quantity. Until 1903 Great Britain still, however, retained her position as a producer of pig iron in advance of Germany. In that year, however, Germany led by more than a million tons, and by 1911 the quantity produced in Germany was once and two-thirds as much as in Great Britain, while that in the United States was nearly two and a half times as much. France also showed a greater gain in the percentage of increase. In the 20 years from 1891 to 1911 the percentage of increase in pig iron in Great Britain was about 28.6 per cent, while that in France was more than 137 per cent. The reasons for this are obvious enough. The idealistic conception of free trade that there should be free access from one country to another is negatived by the almost universal policy of nations, and if any country makes itself an exception to the rule it is necessary that it take the position of a suppliant seeking outlets for its trade.

With the so-called protectionist reaction, which commenced about 1870, there was a marked growth in the spirit of nationality. Each of the great nations of the earth gained a degree of assertiveness and a desire for independence, which had lain dormant and for which there was freer play in the great progress of modern life. There was a united Germany and a unified Italy. It was not long before Japan also came to the front rank among nations.

Manufacture has become more nearly a matter of machinery. The possibilities of growth and of assuming a new place among the nations are far better than ever before. All these tend to arouse the national spirit both in industrial as well as political organization. The free-trade movement in England under Mr. Cobden's leadership was distinctively associated with a cosmopolitan movement. Mr. Cobden had the very commendable desire of bringing nations nearer together, of uniting them not only commercially but in a great world movement, in which their rivalries should be suppressed.

Free trade—

Mr. Cobden said in 1843—

is the breaking down of the barriers that separate nations, these barriers behind which nestle the feelings of pride, revenge, hatred, and jealousy which every now and then burst their bonds and deluge whole countries with blood.

To him free-trade principles were eternal truths. He likened them to the law of gravitation, the eternal law of the Almighty, a principle eternal in its truth and universal in its applicability, and which must be applied to all nations and all times. He clearly erred in many of his prognostications.

In 1846 he said there will not be a tariff in Europe which will not be changed in less than five years, to follow our example. He prophesied that the cultivation of land would be quite as profitable as it had been in the past, notwithstanding the abolition of the corn laws and the expected fall in the price which the farmer obtained for his wheat. He was the apostle of cheapness. He said the race was for commercial supremacy and the battle will rest with the cheapest. He maintained that England must secure from all available sources and at the least possible cost raw materials and products partly manufactured, as well as the instruments of production, and out of these turn out the finished product, which, by its cheapness, will force its way into the markets of the world. The trend of actual events has surely disappointed these hopes.

CHANGE IN RATES.

Another most serious objection to the provisions of the pending bill is the sweeping nature of the reductions in rates. If we have reached the third stage of development referred to, when duties may be reduced or removed, the transition should be gradual. The business of the country, its industrial life, has adjusted itself to a policy of protection. For 50 years the prevailing rates have been high. We can not change from these rates in a single year without widespread injury. The extent of the proposed changes are without precedent in the fiscal legislation of our own or any other country. It is estimated in the report of the Finance Committee that the reduction is 27.64 per cent. This is far in excess of the reductions made by the Wilson-Gorman tariff law of 1894.

The tariff act of March 2, 1833, furnishes a judicious example of gradual reduction. It provided that on duties exceeding 20 per cent one-tenth part of such excess should be deducted on the 31st day of December following, another tenth part on the 31st of December, 1835, and a similar reduction on the last days of 1837 and 1839; one-half of the residue of the excess on the last day of 1841, and all the excess above 20 per cent on the 30th day of June, 1842. It postponed until the 30th of June, 1842, the placing of numerous articles on the free list.

Mr. CHAMP CLARK, now Speaker of the House of Representatives, in a speech at Dayton on January 13, 1910, said:

I believe as firmly as I believe I must die one day and appear at the judgment bar of God to answer for the deeds done in the body and for the words spoken in this life that, had the Republicans fulfilled their promise to revise the tariff downward—had they cut it down 5 per cent on the average, or even 2 per cent, they would have eliminated it from the political equation for a generation. * * * They thereby make the tariff issue the most important issue in 1910 and 1912.

The bill certainly did reduce the average rates as much as 2 per cent, and according to the computation made in the Treasury Department applying the Dingley rates to importations after August 5, 1909, as much and more than 5 per cent.

What a change has come over the leaders of the Democratic Party. They are not now satisfied even with 5 or 2 per cent, but must have 27.64 per cent.

It seems a prevalent impression that in England duties were reduced at one fell swoop in 1846, the date of the abolition of the corn laws. But this is far from the fact. The promise of reduction dates back as far as 1786, when the younger Pitt concluded a treaty with France providing for large reductions. The reductions in both countries remained in force for five years.

In 1824–25, under the leadership of Mr. Huskisson, great reductions were made in the duties on raw materials, such as wool, silk, flax, and iron, and considerable reductions were made on manufactured goods. Prior to 1824 silks had been prohibited from importation, but in that year they were admitted at 30 per cent. Still further reductions were made in the next decade, especially in the year 1832. The fact is that England had reached a supremacy in manufactures which during all this period gave her such an advantage that duties on manufactures were hardly required. It was also regarded as a beneficial policy to admit raw materials free of duty. Notwithstanding all this, many duties were retained until their final abolition under the leadership of Mr. Gladstone in 1860. The same policy of gradual change has been adopted in other countries as well, and is dictated by every consideration of economic policy and regard for industrial prosperity.

AD VALOREM AND SPECIFIC DUTIES.

It appears to have been one of the fixed policies of the Ways and Means Committee to change, as far as possible, all specific duties to ad valorem duties. The Senate Finance Committee has adopted the same rule. The reasons for this change, advanced by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee in their report on the bill H. R. 3321, are not convincing. The only two definite reasons adduced are—first, that a specific duty is relatively low when prices are high, and relatively high when prices are low, "notwithstanding the undesirability of such method." Why the method is undesirable is not explained. The second reason is that the burden of the tariff is masked by specific duties, which is another rather vague accusation. There has never been a discussion of the tariff when the rate or percentage of duty has not been clearly disclosed. The third and only argument of importance is that the specific system requires a very detailed and highly organized classification and description of dutiable goods, in order to prevent deception and evasion. With infinite pains such a classification has been accomplished and has been found to work well. A classification into large groups is certainly much less complicated than a valuation of every separate invoice.

On the theory that the tariff is levied purely for revenue purposes an ad valorem basis may find some justification; but based upon any theory of protecting American industries by a scientifically constructed tariff system, or even of establishing "competitive" conditions, tariff rates based wholly on market value must prove utterly unsatisfactory. Some of the objections to the ad valorem principle are the following:

First. It means a heavier burden upon the consumer during periods when prices are highest and he is least able to bear it and a smaller burden when prices are low and he is therefore less in need of relief.

Second. From the standpoint of the American producer this system has the effect of giving him a maximum of protection when prices are most satisfactory and competition least destructive and affords a minimum of protection when competition is sharpest and his markets most liable to be invaded by the foreign producer.

Third. Assuming that the proper measure of protection which should be accorded to the American producer is the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, and assuming further that by far the most important element in the production cost is the element of labor, our protective tariffs have in practice been constructed upon the difference in cost of labor at home and abroad. If this theory is correct, then fixed specific duties are much better suited to permanently adjust this difference than an ad valorem rate, since the difference in labor cost is a comparatively fixed amount for months at a time, changing slowly and entering very slightly into the current fluctuations in any given product. On the other hand, ad valorem rates move up and down with changing prices, which may have wide fluctuations within a short period of time, due to market conditions and many other transient influences in no way incident to the cost of production.

To illustrate this fact—it is not probable that wages in any industry, either in Europe or America, changed materially during the year 1912, yet the price of many imported products fluctuated widely. For example, in the metal markets pig iron sold as low as $11.08 per ton and as high as $14.97 per ton, an advance of 35 per cent above the minimum price. In the London markets lead sold as low as £15 8s. 9d. and as high as £23 15s., being a fluctuation of 53.8 per cent. Antimony sold as low as $5.72 per hundred and as high as $8.81 per hundred, a fluctuation of 54 per cent. Ferromanganese sold as low as $38.50 and as high as $62.50, a movement of 62.3 per cent. Aluminum sold as low as $11.75 and as high as $20.06 per hundred, a fluctuation of 70.07 per cent. These substances are all of the most staple character and of almost world-wide production, in which such striking changes might be least expected. It is unnecessary to call attention to the fact that ad valorem duties can only heighten and aggravate this already troublesome price fluctuation, which is in no way incident to the cost of production.

The fourth objection to ad valorem rates is the fact that they afford temptation for undervaluation and thus encourage and favor the dishonest importer as against those who are honest.

The fifth objection is the difficulty of administration. Goods vary so enormously in real value as well as being subject to constant, in fact, almost daily, changes of market value, that anything like a uniform and accurate administration of the law is practically impossible. Ad valorem rates, therefore, make it possible for the wealthy importer to place his goods in bond and await a turn in the market, which adds further to the disadvantage of the American producer by compelling him to compete not with the average foreign price, but with the lowest price.

On the other hand, an ad valorem rate for exactly the opposite reason works to the disadvantage of the American manufacturer who must buy raw material abroad. Our manufacturers must frequently make contracts for future deliveries, often running as long as two years, to fulfill which they must rely on their importations of foreign material. It will probably not be denied even by free traders that it is desirable that American manufacturers should be successful in buying their foreign supplies abroad in the most favorable possible market. In order to do this it is frequently necessary or desirable to buy at periods of low prices under contracts for future deliveries, thus obviating the necessity of heavy carrying charge for stocks of raw materials. Under the system of ad valorem duties these materials will have to be assessed at the current prices at the time of entry. Thus a thrifty manufacturer may lose a large element of the benefit derived from his thrift and foresight.

The ad valorem system is condemned by all the leading nations wherever a considerable variety of articles are dutiable. France in the first days of the Republic tried it, but later abandoned it.

Henry Clay said:

> Let me fix the value of foreign merchandise and I do not care what your duty is.

Practically every Secretary of the Treasury, from Secretary Walker in Polk's administration, in 1846, to the time of the present administration, has advocated specific duties. Secretary Manning, Secretary of the Treasury under President Cleveland, when reductions were contemplated by the Mills bill in 1888, said:

> Whatever successful contrivances are in operation to-day to evade the revenue by false invoices, or by undervaluations, or by any other means, under an ad valorem system, will not cease even if the ad valorem rates shall have been largely reduced. They are incontestably, they are even notoriously, inherent in that system. One advantage, and perhaps the chief advantage, of a specific over an ad valorem system is in the fact that, under the former, duties are levied by a positive test, which can be applied by our officers while the merchandise is in possession of the Government, and according to a standard which is altogether national and domestic. That would be partially true of an ad valorem system levied upon "home value"; but there are constitutional impediments in the way of such a system which appear to be impossible. But under an ad valorem system, the facts to which the ad valorem rate is to be applied must be gathered in places many thousand miles away, and under circumstances most unfavorable to the administration of justice. One hears it often said that if ad valorem rates did not exceed 25 or 30 per cent, undervaluation and temptation to undervaluation would disappear, but the record of this department for the years 1817, 1840, and 1857 do not uphold that conclusion.

Mr. James D. Power, special agent of the Treasury, said:

> Ad valorem rates of duty afford temptations and opportunities for fraud which can not be guarded against, even by the most rigid rules and vigilant watchfulness. The assessment of values under this system is based upon expert knowledge of values, the most uncertain and arbitrary method that could be devised. Under the ad valorem system fraud has prospered and demoralized the importing trade, which has passed from the hands of American citizens into the control of men who have taken advantage of our high import duties to enrich themselves at the expense of the revenue and the ruined trade of American wholesale firms.

INCONSISTENCIES.

At another time I may call attention to certain incongruities and inequalities in this bill which are objectionable under the guiding principle which seems to have been adopted, and indeed under any principle of which we can conceive, though in this regard it should be conceded that the measure as it is now before us contains many improvements upon the House bill.

As it passed the House duties were imposed on wheat and oats, but none upon flour or oatmeal. While the flesh, hide, hair, bones, blood, hoofs, and horns of an animal were specifically made free, the live animal was subject to a duty of 10 per cent. For such an adjustment there can be no justification on any principle of economics or business. Ferromanganese, an article used to an increased extent in the manufacture of steel, was made subject to a much higher duty than under the existing law, but all the products into which it enters as a constituent were subject to a very material decrease in duty. There now appears in the bill a very considerably lower duty on paint than upon the constituent elements which enter into it. Paving posts, telegraph and telephone poles, and railroad ties are subject to a duty of 10 per cent, while other kinds of posts and highly finished forms of lumber, even that which is tongued and grooved, are placed upon the free list. One bad result of such a duty is to stimulate the cutting of young timber. These are illustrations of the crudities which appear throughout the bill. What justification can there be for a duty on bananas, a food which is increasingly utilized by consumers in humble circumstances?

With what justification is a duty levied on objects of art which are imported for the purpose of promoting the education and culture of our people? By the same token, why should a duty be levied on books in foreign languages which have hitherto been admitted duty free?

MISTAKEN NOTIONS REGARDING HIGH PRICES.

The Democratic Party in its recent platform adopted at Baltimore, and by the utterances of its advocates on the stump, have charged that the chief cause of the prevailing high cost of living is the existing protective tariff enacted by the Republican Party. They boasted that they could and would immediately reduce the cost of living by lowering the tariff wall; that the exorbitant prices of the necessaries of life in particular would immediately fade away and the poor man's table would hereafter be furnished at a fraction of its former cost. This, my Democratic friends, was your campaign argument; this was the promise on which you regard yourselves as delegated to tear to pieces the fiscal policy which has been the sheet anchor of nearly two decades of unprecedented prosperity and which is the only guaranty of its continuance. You have erected a tariff policy, blind to every consideration except the consumer. You can benefit him only by reducing the cost of the commodities he consumes without degrading their quality or destroying his opportunity to earn the price of that which he must buy. On this result you must stand or fall. There is no escape. Unless a very material reduction of prices immediately follows the enactment of this bill it will record one of the most ill-boding policies ever adopted by a responsible party in a representative government.

The bill was frankly not framed to encourage capital to enter new fields of industry or to extend those already established; it was not devised for the purpose of inviting our farmers to reclaim new acres for cultivation; it is certainly not calculated to enlarge the opportunities for labor to find profitable employment. Its sole justification is a reduced cost of living. If it fails in this, it fails utterly.

That it can not by any possibility fulfill the mission for which it is being created is now admitted even by some of its original sponsors, who then, as now, are regarded as its most responsible advocates. Mr. Redfield, who was selected for his responsible position in the President's Cabinet because he was regarded by the President as an expert on tariff matters, was evidently smoothing the way for the descent of Democratic hopes when he gave out a signed interview, from which I quote. After mentioning several of the causes of the high cost of living, the Secretary says:

> I mention these things to show that the tariff bill is no cure-all. It is a step toward removing obstacles which prevent the freer exchange of products of the farm, the mill, and the mine; but no intelligent man expects it to be more than a step. What, then, is the principal benefit arising from the tariff bill? To my thinking it is a moral and a mental benefit.

For years the delusion has rested upon many people—for it is no less—that the present high cost of living is due to protective tariffs. Assuming that this is true, some in ignorance and some by shrewd design have played upon the feelings of the people. The time is coming when this specious argument will fail. The most elementary examination of the subject disproves the idea that high prices are due to tariffs. This phenomenon of high prices is world-wide. It is in evidence in every country of advanced civilization, and it manifests itself in a degree approximate to the progress that the various peoples have made. In our own country the most notable increases have been in commodities of which we have a considerable surplus for export.

The increase has been manifested indiscriminately without regard to higher or lower rates in the last tariff act and has been most considerable in the case of articles on which there are no duties at all. There have been illustrations of a decrease in price where duties have recently been increased, and a multitude of instances in which they have increased though duties have been lowered. It is unnecessary to multiply illustrations. The facts are clear. The index of this increase in price is the greater production of gold, the world's monetary standard, and even that is rather an indication than a cause, for the reason that in any progressive era like the present, where the demands of human life are so increased and its luxuries are the possession of so much larger a number, the cost of living is sure to rise.

It is for the Democratic Party to fulfill its promises. I am unable to believe that the reductions proposed in this bill will be permanent. Many duties under the existing law should be lowered; others might be removed entirely, for we are nearing a more complete and symmetrical development, and industries which have enjoyed protection may need it in less degree or not at all; but we shall err if we take the radical steps proposed. Protection may have been abused, but the purpose of a protective tariff has been to establish here, between the lesser and the greater oceans, between the Lakes and the Gulf, an industrial empire, the most complete, the most beneficent to all that dwell within its borders which the world has ever seen. We can not afford to stay the march of progress toward that splendid ideal by erroneous policies such as are embodied in this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in my remarks to-day I shall not attempt to make an extended argument on any particular schedule of the bill, but simply call the Senate's attention to many of the inadequate, excessive, and inconsistent rates provided for in the bill, and shall hereafter address the Senate in detail, if occasion permits, on the sugar, wool, and chemical schedules. I shall attempt to present statistical facts of the growth and development of our industrial life and show, if possible, that our marvelous industrial growth for the last 40 years can not be maintained nor will it continue to increase under this Democratic tariff bill as it has increased in the past under the system of Republican protection.

ENORMOUS INCREASE IN IMPORTS UNDER EXISTING LAW.

The imports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, were in value $1,812,621,160. That is an increase in imports of $159,356,226 in a single year. The increase in imports since the fiscal year of 1909, under the new tariff, has been $501,330,936. And yet with that enormous increase in imports this bill makes a sweeping reduction in duties and transfers to the free list a billion dollars and more of products. It is amazing that any political party in the face of those statistics can propose such a revolutionary measure as this tariff bill. The percentage of imports free of duty was nearly 55 per cent for the last fiscal year. In other words, $987,289,994 in value of imports came in free of duty, while $825,331,166 were dutiable. In 1850, under the much-vaunted Walker tariff, after which the pending measure is fashioned in some respects, only 9.32 per cent of the imports were free, as compared with about 55 per cent at the present time. The average duty on all imports in 1850 under the Walker law was 23.16 per cent, whereas the rate now is only a little over 18 per cent. In 1908 the average rate of duty was 23.88 per cent, showing a reduction since that time of nearly 6 per cent. That is what was accomplished by the existing law, concerning which so many falsehoods have been told and so much misrepresentation made as to lead many persons to think that it imposes even higher rates than the old law instead of this very large reduction. In 1854, under the Walker tariff, the per capita of duties was $2.46, and at the present time the per capita is only a little over $3, so that with this enormous increase in imports the average tax varies little from 1854. The imports under the Walker tariff averaged about $8 per capita, as compared with over $17 per capita in the last fiscal year, and yet this bill makes enormous and sweeping cuts in duties in order to still further increase these very large importations. All the world knows how this country suffered as a result of the Wilson tariff law in 1896, but the average rate of duties now is over 2 per cent lower than was the case under the last Democratic tariff, when the business of the Nation was paralyzed and 3,000,000 persons thrown out of employment. The imports of manufactures under the existing law have increased about $200,000,000 since 1909. In agricultural products and provisions there has been an increase in imports of about $75,000,000, and yet this bill places nearly all the agricultural products of the North on the free list.

Not only is this destructive blow delivered to the agricultural industry of this country, but Porto Rico and Hawaii are also given blows from which they can not recover. Hawaii, under our labor laws, can not produce sugar in competition with Java, Borneo, or Cuba. Porto Rico is in the same way. Porto Rican coffee is sold in Cuba, but that market will be lost as a result of the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty due to placing sugar on the free list. Cuba will be able to sell its sugar in this country without any duty, and she will buy her manufactured products in Europe, as she did before the reciprocity treaty went into effect. All financial interests are showing the effect already, but the prosperity prevailing in Europe will alleviate the blow temporarily, though it will come in full force without long delay.

This bill I regard as the most injurious tariff measure ever taken up for consideration by Congress. It is a partisan and sectional measure, the outcome of secret caucus methods such as never ruled before in the Senate of the United States. In his book, Our New Freedom, President Wilson says that there is no excuse for caucusing in Congress, and in a speech in Indiana preceding his election he emphasized that point by asserting that there was no necessity for secrecy in congressional proceedings. And yet this vastly important measure, affecting in one way or another every citizen of the United States, is wholly the product of secret and caucus methods. No public hearing was ever given on this bill. Hearings were allowed by the House committee before the bill was framed, and before anyone could possibly know of many of its features. It was then drawn up in secret and considered for weeks in a secret caucus and then brought up immediately for consideration in the House. When it had passed that body an effort was made in the Senate to obtain public hearings, but they were refused by the Democratic majority. We succeeded in getting permission for those interested to file briefs, but it is doubtful if a single person concerned in drafting this measure ever read those briefs. Certainly little attention was given to the facts put forward in them for the consideration of the committee.

After the Democratic members of the committee finished their secret work, a party caucus took up their draft of the bill and continued its secret consideration for weeks more. Then the committee was called together and the bill reported and the minority given five days to prepare for its consideration in this body. Not in the history of Congress has there been anything equal to that record in the way of dark methods in the preparation of a tariff measure.

DISCARDING SEPARATE BILLS.

For two years and more we have been hearing our opponents advocate the advantage of tariff revision schedule by schedule, and several such bills came to this Chamber from the House. We said at the time that those bills were largely buncombe, passed without proper consideration and for political effect, and so the facts have proved. Not a word is now heard about revision of the tariff schedule by schedule. But even matter such as that providing for an income tax, or for taxing the sale of cotton for future delivery, not bearing any relation to the tariff, is made a part of the bill. The sweeping changes that have been made in the bill now before the Senate, as compared with some of the popgun bills of 1911 and 1912, conclusively demonstrate the disastrous effect that would have followed the enactment of some of those measures. President Taft wisely used his veto power to prevent such a wrong.

This bill threatens disaster to many American industries as complete as we had under the last Democratic tariff law. It is because of the experience under that law that business men are practically certain of what is to come under this proposed law. As stated by the president of the Louisiana Cane Growers' Association, assurances were given before election that the sugar industry would not be injured. A similar promise was made in regard to all business, and may voters were misled by such statements, but there is no longer any question about the injury to the sugar industry, wool industry, and all manufacturers of the finer grade of chemicals. The fact that the time of putting the bill into effect, in regard to free sugar, is deferred three years, in order, as the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee said, that the sugar growers would have time to liquidate, is proof of the certain effect. This bill will wipe out at least $200,000,000 investment in the sugar industry alone to help the Sugar Trust and sugar refiners, who have been agitating at such large expense to bring about this result. In the wool industry labor is paid the highest wages in the agricultural world, but the banks have stopped loaning money to the wool-growers because wool is going on the free list, and already wages are declining and men are being thrown out of employment in that industry, as in others. With wages two and one-third times greater in this country than in the United Kingdom and with shorter hours, according to the report of the British Government, it is evident that but few industries can continue to pay such wages and exist under this proposed law. The average pay to men in the textile industries in England, according to the Government report in that country, is $6.74 a week, and for women, $3.70, and for boys under 20 years of age, $2.50, and for girls under 18, $2.14. The average pay for 1,500,000 workers in the clothing trade—that is, for those employed in factories, where the wages are higher than for those doing work at home, for full time—is for men, $6.78 each a week, and for women, $3.12 a week, and for boys under 20 and girls under 18 years of age, $1.36, and often employment is irregular. How can any sane man expect Americans to pay wages two and three times greater and compete under the rates of duty provided in this bill? That it can not be done is clear enough from evidence furnished from all directions.

Gov. Foss, of Massachusetts, who has been three times elected to his present office by the Democratic Party, and who was supported as a candidate for President at the last Democratic national convention, denounces this bill as a sacrifice of the interests of the Nation. He has purchased a site in Canada for his large manufacturing establishment in Massachusetts, and says that he will remove his business there if this bill becomes a law. Mr. William R. Hearst, another prominent Democrat mentioned as candidate for President, agrees with Gov. Foss. We all know what Democrats of Louisiana, Colorado, Montana, and other States vitally interested think of this measure. A former Democratic United States Senator from Colorado has denounced it in vigorous terms. How could he do otherwise when it sacrifices practically every important industry of that State, and also of every other Rocky Mountain State, as well as other States, excepting possibly some Southern States, and the experience of the past has demonstrated that those States have all flourished under the protective tariff to a degree unknown under free-trade legislation? Manufacturing is developing all over the South, crops are more diversified, and there is every reason to believe that if left alone under the protective tariff its prosperity will continue to increase with great strides. But this bill will hurt, instead of helping the South, as its originators seem to think will be the case. Cobden thought he was stating the truth when he declared that free trade would promote agriculture in the United Kingdom, whereas millions of acres of extremely fertile soil have ceased to be cultivated and a million less in number of persons are now engaged in agriculture in the United Kingdom than was the case when Cobden spoke, although the demand for such products there has doubled. Free trade was the death knell to a large extent of agriculture in that country, as it will be a severe blow to this country.

In the production of silk goods, sugar, cutlery, and many other items, Great Britain goes backward instead of forward, while the opposite is the case in every other nation with a protective tariff, and it must not be forgotten that every important nation on earth has such a tariff, excepting the United Kingdom, and its industries were built up under protection of the rankest kind. One great party in that country now favors the reimposition of such duties, and would be in control of the Government to-day but for the Irish party, which, while it favors protection, thinks more of home rule and is acting with the free-trade party to bring about that change. All indications are to the effect that Great Britain, though more peculiarly fitted for free trade than any other nation on earth, will in the future more and more incline to protection which she now carries into effect in many ways, such as her patent laws, and in protecting her live stock, and so forth. With less than half our population she has twenty paupers to our one, and expends vast millions of dollars for poor relief in various ways, including old-age pensions, and so on. The Democratic Party in this country is moving in the same direction by this legislation.

TEXTILE MILLS SUFFER.

Shares in the textile mills in New England have declined greatly as a result of this proposed tariff law. The Boston correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce, a free-trade newspaper, says:

> The enormous shrinkage which the market value of mill stock has undergone is regarded as conclusive proof that there is nothing feigned in the current expressions of concern.

The Textile Manufacturers' Journal says:

> A large proportion of the textile standard stocks are now offered for 25 points below the price of last year. And there are many stocks formerly selling far above par that have declined 25 to 50 points. The decline during the last two months has been most serious. But the full recession can be traced directly to the effect of tariff revision.

It is estimated that only 50 per cent of the mill capacity in woolen and worsted mills in New England is now employed, and that will be reduced 25 per cent by the time this bill takes effect. A New York financial journal states that there has been three billion shrinkage in the value of securities in five months, or 21 per cent of the active capitalization. Beet-sugar stocks in Michigan have declined 40 to 60 points. That is simply an illustration of what is taking place all over the country.

ONLY A MINORITY BACK OF THIS LEGISLATION.

Mr. C. N. Wallace, president of a New England manufacturing company, writing as to the effect of this bill, says:

> In some of our lines—woolen carpets, for instance—there has been a reduction of 25 per cent in the orders during the past three weeks, but apparently the end is not yet.

That is the kind of reports that are coming from all parts of the country. Mr. Wallace further says:

> I understand our bagging competitors are looking abroad for a place to locate their plant. As Americans we are loath even to consider such a matter, but may be compelled ultimately to do so. But we can not believe that the settled policy of the United States will be to legislate against its citizens.

The president of that company is entirely correct in assuming that the settled policy of the United States will not be to legislate against its citizens. It must not be forgotten that there was a majority of over 2,000,000 voters in the last election against the kind of legislation now being pushed through Congress, and against which Mr. Wallace protests. Division in the Republican ranks has placed temporarily in power the party responsible for this kind of legislation, but it is entirely safe to say that they will not remain long in power after sacrificing the interests of the American people in the way proposed by this bill.

TIME SHOULD BE GIVEN TO ALL CONCERNED FOR LIQUIDATION.

Protests come from all sections of the country from importers, merchants, and manufacturers against the loss that would be inflicted on them by putting these lower rates into effect without giving them an opportunity to dispose of products they have on hand which have been influenced in price by existing duties. No other great country in the world inflicts any such loss on its importers or manufacturers or producers. In both Germany and France a year's notice was given before rates took effect that might result in losses. In debating this bill in the House, Chairman UNDERWOOD, of the Ways and Means Committee, said:

> The President felt that it would be fairer to all concerned that these sugar growers be allowed three years in which to liquidate, as they have much paper in the banks; and they have suffered from two bad crops, and to put sugar on the free list to-day would damage them greatly. By giving them three years in which to liquidate we will give them time to get their houses in order.

The concession to the sugar growers in allowing them to die a slow death is perhaps merciful, but the privilege of selecting a slow or immediate death should be granted to other American producers.

A firm in Chicago which sells plate glass for windows to a large extent, and which it imports, sends a very just protest to the same effect. So far as importing foreign goods is concerned this firm may be benefited by lower rates, but it states the indisputable fact that putting such rates into effect immediately after the passage of the bill will inflict on it heavy and unjustifiable loss. The firm has to carry a large stock of goods for its jobbing trade, and when duties are reduced that stock will be depreciated in value without the firm first having opportunity to dispose of it. That is the same complaint that comes from dealers in all lines of goods affected by these reduced rates. It is a great injustice to put such rates into effect without giving sufficient time for the disposal of the stock on hand and to provide for new stock at the reduced rate.

NUMEROUS CHANGES IN THE BILL.

A great many changes have taken place since the passage, for instance, of the chemical bill in the last House. This measure differs materially from the bills passed heretofore. The first bill imposed mostly ad valorem duties. Specific rates were to some extent used in the second measure, and to a larger degree in this bill. The fact that many ad valorem rates have been abandoned for specific in this latter measure shows that the men who drafted this bill are beginning to appreciate that they did not know everything about the subject. Articles are now on the free list that were dutiable in former bills, and many other articles have been transferred to the dutiable list that were on the free list. There is no schedule that is in greater need of investigation by an intelligent tariff commission than the chemical schedule. European nations resort to such a commission for information on this subject, but, though we had a commission, the authors of this measure abolished it, and the numerous changes that have taken place since in the way of rates, and so forth, only demonstrate how fatal that mistake was. For instance, crude gum resin was made dutiable last year for the benefit of the Standard Oil Co., which controls the sale of the product in this country. But now, after the public has been heard from, that product goes on the free list. Still, bone black, which is produced in this country, and is dutiable now at 20 per cent, is placed on the free list for the benefit of the Sugar Trust.

The Steel Trust was cared for by the House in making ferromanganese dutiable, as it is the only manufacturer of the product, although all steel manufacturers use it. But the Senate committee put it back on the free list in compliance with the recognized public demand. Castor oil is cut from 35 cents a gallon to 12 cents a gallon, but linseed oil is cut only 5 cents a gallon. There is a Linseed Oil Trust which may account for the smaller reduction in duty. Peanuts, bananas, rice, and so forth, are made dutiable for the benefit of the South, but wheat, potatoes, and other agricultural products of the North go on the free list. Wool, sugar, boots and shoes, agricultural implements, and many other important products, representing great industries with hundreds of millions of dollars of invested capital, which were made dutiable last year, are now put on the free list. Machine tools, printing presses, and so forth, were put on the free list last year though industries also with hundreds of millions of invested capital, but this year they are put on the dutiable list, all of which serves to illustrate the shamefully reckless way in which Democratic tariff bills have been prepared.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator speaks of articles put on the dutiable list and on the free list in the bills. The Senator means in the bills that were reported to the Democratic House, and which were passed, but which did not become a law?

Mr. SMOOT. Those are the bills to which I had reference, Mr. President.

Last year we were told of the great virtue of legislating in the way of a different bill for each schedule. This year that method has been abandoned altogether, and one bill only introduced. Nothing more conclusive as to the lack of intelligent preparation and handling of this immensely important measure need be furnished than to recount the multitude of changes and vicissitudes through which it has already passed. There could be no greater evidence of the need of a tariff commission such as the Democrats abolished than the history of their procedure on this bill.

WELL-FOUNDED CRITICISM.

The Manufacturing Chemists' Association, which comprises 42 of the largest chemical manufacturers in this country, has protested against revision of the chemical schedule without careful and expert investigation, which can only be given by a nonpartisan commission. And the same arguments apply to every other schedule. This association says:

> The revision of rates is distinctly illogical in that the relation of raw material to finished products is persistently ignored. The relation of one product to another is apparently in many cases misunderstood, and there are many errors which undoubtedly would be eradicated in the light of expert consideration. It is an enormous task, and no adequate revision can be had under the ordinary method of revising.

The association calls attention to the numerous changes from the free list to the dutiable list on raw materials and the increase in duty in other cases on similar articles. The increased revenue provided for by the House of Representatives would result entirely from the increase of rates on raw materials and the income tax. Reducing rates on finished products and imposing rates on raw materials not produced in this country is disastrous.

The original chemical bill, which was House bill No. 20182, took 80 articles from the free list and made them dutiable, and on 17 other articles which are raw materials duty was increased. The estimated revenue was increased nearly $3,500,000 as compared with 1911, but the gain was all in the imposition of duties on raw materials, or from $1,826,955 to $6,081,060, an increase of over four millions. Duties on finished products were decreased more than $1,000,000, a double hardship on manufacturers. That bill would have brought inevitable disaster upon the chemical industry of the United States. Now this bill, No. 3321, as it left the House made nearly 100 changes in the rates in bill No. 20182, relating to chemicals, not to mention changes in classification, and so forth. Approximately 17 different raw materials or groups of raw materials which were free under the Payne Act and which were dutiable under bill No. 20182, with an estimated revenue of nearly $1,000,000, were restored to the free list. Materials or groups to the number of 13 or more which were dutiable under bill No. 20182, with an estimated revenue in excess of $1,250,000, were reduced in rates under this bill, which makes it less radical in regard to raw materials. But the duties on finished products as established by bill No. 20182 were materially reduced in this bill, though increases were made in nine cases. The average ad valorem rate of the schedule, which had been reduced from 25 to 16 per cent, is still further reduced. In the changes of classification, and so forth, the provision for a minimum duty has been left out, which takes away a safeguard against undervaluation. Hence the chemists naturally declare that the bill is worse now than it was before.

In over 50 cases the rates on finished products, as established by the bill passed in the last Congress, have been very materially reduced by the provisions of the bill passed in the House at this session, while an increase in rates was made in less than 10 cases. The 50 cases of decreased rates help largely to reduce the average ad valorem, and that they are entirely inexcusable is evident from the fact that there has been no change in the situation since the previous session of Congress. In 18 different cases the bill this year omitted the provision for specific duty in the alternative for ad valorem rates, which takes away a certain safeguard against undervaluation.

The House caucus was not in favor of putting sugar on the free list, but that was done because the President so requested. In the same way the Ways and Means Committee was in favor of imposing a duty on raw wool, the same as was done last year, but the demand was made for free wool and it was granted. The majority seems to have been ready at all times to sacrifice not only the industries of the country but the opinion of the majority in order to give expression to that of others.

The Democrats of the Finance Committee, in their weeks of consideration of the bill as it left the House, made hundreds of changes, counting the alteration of an entire paragraph or section as only one change. The Senate caucus inserted a new section and made many more changes, so that as the bill now appears there are several hundred changes in it as it left the House, counting the change of an entire paragraph only once, and so it goes. And yet we are told that a tariff commission is not necessary. In preparing a bill for political purposes, that is probably correct; but not when the interests of the Nation are to be considered.

A FEW OF THE INCONSISTENCIES OF THE BILL.

The criticism of the Manufacturing Chemists' Association and also that of the chemical engineers is just. Expert study is required in Europe to draft such a law, which deals with hundreds of different raw materials imported from all parts of the world. But no such study was given here, and many changes are made in rates, articles are put on the free list, changes are made from ad valorem to specific rates, and vice versa, without the information necessary, with consequent unfortunate results. These sweeping changes relating to the chemical industry, for instance, which is making great progress here and is only partially developed, could not come at a more unfortunate time. The action of the Democratic caucus of the House in voting against putting indigo on the free list and afterwards making that change at the recommendation of the committee, because of a hint from the South, illustrates the way in which the bill is made up. It is like other things which have been done, such as putting a duty on licorice root, now on the free list, and reducing the tax on licorice paste, and so forth, or taking peanut oil from the free list and making it dutiable, although it is used to a large extent as a substitute for butter. But while making that article used by poor people dutiable, in another paragraph they reduced the rate on perfumed soap and reduced the duty on vanillin, made in part from cloves, and put a duty on cloves. The bill reduces the duty on celluloid, made in part from camphor, and then imposes a duty on raw camphor, and, as it passed the House, imposed less duty on dextrine than on starch required to make it. That has been changed by the Senate committee, but many other inconsistencies are still there.

THE ALLEGED GREATER EFFICIENCY OF LABOR.

One of the modern arguments of our Democratic friends is that of the greater efficiency of American labor. In many industries the opposite is the truth. In Europe men work in the same industry for generations. They have a life training. But in the United States they move around from one place to another and can not be expected to acquire the same efficiency as if possessed of a life training and remaining in one establishment. A large proportion of the labor in our manufacturing industries is that of men who have come here from Europe, and it is absurd to say that such labor is any more efficient here than it is in Europe excepting, possibly, as to the effect of better pay, better living, and shorter hours.

The New York Times is one of the leading American newspapers supporting the free-trade theories of the present administration. The following is an extract from a recent cable dispatch to that newspaper from London:

The assertion that the efficiency of the British workman is far below that of the American, which was made in the recent report issued by the Secretary of Commerce, is disputed on all hands by British employers. The manager of one of the largest tin-plate manufacturing firms in Great Britain said:

"I should like to know on what basis the American figures were obtained. The men in the British tin-plate mills work continuously in shifts of eight hours and are very skillful. In fact, a great number of workers in American tin-plate mills are Welshmen who were trained in British mills. If the American output is greater, his work is not so good. British tin goods are of superior finish. Our exports to the United States are increasing, notwithstanding the keenest competition and the tariff."

B. Hunter, of the firm of Swan, Hunter & Richardson, Ltd., builders of the steamship Mauretania, said:

"It is not correct to say that American shipbuilding is cheaper than the English or the wage bills lower. Although at the present moment the difference in the cost of British and American built ships is smaller than usual, the price is still higher in the United States than here."

Harold Cliff, secretary of the Oldham Master Cotton Spinners' Association, said:

"It is inconceivable that, as the American report alleges, it would take 255 skilled Lancashire operatives against 47 Americans to create $100,000 increase in the value of raw material."

Bolton spinners and manufacturers asserted that, whatever Americans said, British cotton workers were more efficient than American.

No wonder the British masters ridicule the assertion about the greater efficiency of labor in this country, and particularly statements contained in a recent publication of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to the effect that the cost of production is much cheaper in this country than in Europe. Such statements are so amazing that it is almost unbelievable that any sane American who keeps himself in any wise informed about labor cost in this country and in Europe should entertain them for one moment.

A SECTIONAL AND MONSTROUS FREE LIST.

Wheat, flour, corn and corn meal, meats, potatoes, swine, cattle, sheep, and various other farm products go on the free list, including sugar. Then of the manufactured products—wire, type, steel ingots, and so forth, steel rails, printing paper, nails, spikes, horseshoes, leather, boots and shoes, pig iron, hoop or band iron for baling cotton, certain kinds of leather gloves, bituminous coal, cash registers, linotype and typesetting machines, sewing machines, typewriters, shoe machinery, sand blast and slug machines, agricultural machinery, all sugar-cane machinery, bagging for cotton, and various other manufactured products, the raw materials of which are dutiable in most cases—go on the free list. But rice, which is produced in the South, is put on the dutiable list. It is a food product which, it is claimed, is the cheapest of all kinds of food. It is used by poor people generally. In Porto Rico it is consumed to the extent of 100 pounds per capita. In China and Japan the consumption is over 200 pounds per capita. It can be used instead of corn and wheat. But corn, wheat, potatoes, and other such products go on the free list, while rice is made dutiable. If protection were being extended to agricultural products in general there would be ample reason for imposing a duty on rice, and I do not want to be understood as objecting to the duty imposed. But when other products are put on the free list with the pretense of reducing the cost of living there is not a shadow of reason why rice should not be treated in the same way. The labor required to produce it is of the cheapest kind and, as the cheapest of all foods, it should be on the free list if other food articles go there.

In the bill passed last year machine tools, printing presses, and so forth, were put on the free list. In this bill they are made dutiable at 15 per cent. Of course, it was a monstrous piece of work to put machine tools or printing presses on the free list, but it is as great a crime now to put beet sugar, wool, boots and shoes, sewing machines, typewriters, wire, and so forth, on the free list. The exports of boots and shoes from Great Britain have increased enormously in recent years, and the number of persons employed in that industry in that country has more than doubled in 20 years. There are 40,000 women employed in the boot and shoe industry in England, and over 21 per cent of them earn less than $2.40 a week for full time of about 54 hours a week. A man working full time earns from $6.22 to $7.20, and it is with labor paid such wages that the 215,923 persons employed in that industry in this country are to compete hereafter on a free-trade basis. There are nearly 70,000 persons producing wire, over 12,000 producing typewriters, over 20,000 making sewing machines, 81,000 paper, 67,000 leather, 60,000 agricultural implements, and those and many other manufactured articles go on the free list, but rice is to be protected with only a comparatively few hundred persons employed in the industry. In rice cleaning there were only 1,777 persons employed in 1909, and that was a less number than were employed five years earlier. But rice is a southern product, as are peanuts, and both have protective duties, though wheat, potatoes, and the other northern products go on the free list, to say nothing of the great sacrifice in manufactured products. Citrate of lime, now on the free list and not produced in this country, is made dutiable. Nearly 6,000,000 pounds were imported in 1912. It is used in medical compounds and temperance beverages, and perhaps that may explain why a duty is placed on it.

LOWER DUTIES ON FINISHED PRODUCTS—RAW MATERIALS MADE DUTIABLE.

While this bill decreases duties greatly on finished products, it follows the extraordinary course of imposing duties on raw products not made in this country. This means a double hardship on the American manufacturer. It not only removes his protection against the more favorable conditions of manufacture existing in foreign countries, but it renders those conditions more difficult to meet, if not making competition impossible by taxing the basic principals which enter into the finished product. As a large manufacturing concern testified before the House committee, when they attempted to compete with European manufacturers at their home market they were met not only with conditions of lower cost of labor and raw materials, but a high protective tariff in every country but the United Kingdom. In Germany, for instance, where manufacturers have adopted all improvements to be found in America, they are protected by a tariff ranging from 25 per cent to 60 per cent on manufactured products. But by the admission of manufactured products free of duty, or practically so, as provided for in many cases by this bill, the American manufacturer is not only debarred by a prohibitive tariff in Germany, Canada, and other countries, but he must meet these foreign products when admitted to this country either free or at a low rate of duty, and which will be sold here at low prices to get rid of surplus products.

It is not questioned that a large establishment producing at full capacity can manufacture at a less proportionate cost than one producing in a limited capacity. Hence it pays such an establishment, when necessary, to sell a certain percentage of its products at bare cost, to keep fully employed, as it enables it to produce the remainder of its product at less cost. For these reasons foreign establishments can well afford to send their surplus products to the United States and sell at cost or less, which our manufacturers can not meet without cutting wages and overcoming other conditions that now seem insurmountable. Many raw materials cost more in this country than abroad, more capital is required because of the greater labor cost, while interest and transportation rates are higher. The foreigner has the advantage of low water rates, aided by his home government, as in the case of Germany, whose rates on its railroads, and so forth, are less on goods for export than on those used for any other purpose. It is impossible for an American manufacturer to overcome these advantages on the part of the foreigners without a protective tariff.

NECESSITY FOR HOME PRODUCTS.

It is of vast importance to this country that it should not be dependent upon foreign nations for necessities, such, for instance, as chemicals. In the case of great disasters, war, and the like, our people must depend on American manufacturers. In such disasters as the Galveston flood, the Johnstown flood, the San Francisco earthquake, the Spanish-American War, and others, it was imperative that there should be a source of supply of necessaries immediately accessible. Such a supply can only be obtained when there is sufficient encouragement for home manufacture of these products. A great number of manufactured products can not be produced in this country in competition with similar foreign products unless a sufficient duty is levied to offset the higher cost of manufacture here. There can not be any dispute as to this higher cost, due to the higher wages paid to skilled and unskilled labor, higher salaries paid to chemists, engineers, and all other experts and professional men; higher first and maintenance cost of machinery, buildings, and general fixtures, due in general to the higher wages in this country. The crude materials for many products are not available in the United States, and the imposition of duty on them in many cases, as is proposed in this bill, simply means increased handicap to the American manufacturer. With free raw materials and protective duties the American industries will continue to develop as they have done in the past. To encourage such development is not only in the interest of the many thousands connected directly and indirectly with these industries, but it is also to the advantage of the Government and the consumer. It is an established fact that many of these products which are not manufactured in this country are selling at excessive prices, while many other products can be enumerated which are selling 30 to 50 per cent lower now that they are manufactured here than was the case before. The duty on those products, which made home manufacture possible, not only did not increase the selling price, but it was the actual cause of bringing down such prices to reasonable figures. The increased importation of dutiable products has clearly demonstrated that the tariff on such products is not too high.

There is, for instance, probably no line of human industry in which this country is more justified in seeking protection than in the chemical industry, nor is there any line in which we are more distinctly led, up to the present time, by Europe. Nevertheless, we have been making great strides in this industry in recent years. Many branches of the chemical industry are just struggling to get ahead at the present time, and it is most unfortunate that they should be dealt such a shameful blow as is proposed by this bill.

This talk about infant industries is misinterpreted by our opponents. If the foreign competitor has the same advantages in machinery and in other things as does the United States producer and pays only one-third as much wages, the American can not continue to compete without protection, be they infant or old-established industries.

With low ocean freights to eastern points and combined ocean and inland freights to interior points lower in many cases than the inland rate alone from the seaboard factories, coupled with cheaper labor and free raw materials abroad, this bill produces a situation for American producers which will seriously threaten the existence of many industries and which will be more acute in the Cuban, Hawaiian, and Porto Rican markets. Canada, on our northern border, will have a great advantage with its protective tariff, and in other ways serious injury will be done to American interests.

THE DUMPING CLAUSE.

A dumping-clause provision was made in the bill as it came from the House, but it has been rejected by the Senate Democratic caucus. There is no ground for such a course as is shown in the case of the Canadian dumping provision, which is enforced in this country by the examination of the books of manufacturing concerns by agents of the Canadian Government, without objection by manufacturers. There is no doubt concerning the practice of these foreign trusts and manufacturers in dumping their surplus products into this country at prices far below the foreign market rates, and far below any price at which domestic producers can compete. This fact was recognized in the report on Schedule A made by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House at the last session of Congress. It is further generally known that articles imported into this country, and subject to an ad valorem duty here, oftentimes are entered at much less than their real or market value in the country of export. This is peculiarly true of the chemical industry. The direct effect of the imposition of an adequate dumping duty would be to prevent fraudulent undervaluation to a large extent, as the test of value would be the fair market price for home consumption in the country of export or in this country. Hence, the proposed dumping clause would help to prevent such unfair competition on the part of foreign manufacturers, as is not provided for by this act, and to give American manufacturers equal opportunity in preventing fraud, such as manufacturers in Canada have, and in those countries which maintain dumping duties. It is surprising under these circumstances that this dumping clause should be eliminated by the Senate committee, the only reason for such course, apparently, being the lack of consideration for American industries and American workmen. The dumping clause is all the more necessary because of the substitution of ad valorem for specific rates. Where specific rates are imposed there is less need of any such legislation.

TRUSTS FAVORED IN EUROPE.

Instead of legislating against trusts European governments favor them, particularly Germany. It has giant factories, one of which employs 10,000 persons, not counting the great number of distributing agencies maintained all over the world. Many of the German organizations are in "cartels" and international agreements which make the United States a dumping ground. This kind of organization also exists in England, where one chemical organization has 7,000 employees, and, in fact, controls several thousand other employees in a consolidation of 40 or more individual establishments. One organization in France operates 17 establishments in that country. These great combines work together to destroy competition here, to which end this bill greatly contributes by taking away protection from American producers and workmen. The American market is the most favorable, for which purpose it is exploited by foreigners, and with an insufficient protection and unguarded against dumping, the chemical industry, for instance, has developed only in part. But with still lower duties and raw products made dutiable even when not found in this country, development here will cease, and we will become dependent upon Europe with the dire consequences that may follow in the case of war or other trouble with ocean transportation.

WHEN FREE RAW MATERIALS ARE NECESSARY.

President Cleveland said: "We have in our platform and in every way possible declared in favor of the free importation of raw materials." Secretary Bryan, in speaking on this same subject, said: "We can make no permanent progress in the direction of tariff reform until we free from taxation raw materials which lie at the foundation of our industries." But notwithstanding those Democratic declarations the bill now before this Chamber imposes duties on raw materials necessarily imported. It is true that many products which were dutiable in this bill as it passed the last Congress have now again been restored to the free list. When criticism was made of the fact that many raw products were put on the dutiable list our opponents defended that course. Now that they have restored some of them to the free list they resort to the income tax as an excuse. If there were any foundation for such an excuse it would apply just as well to the articles heretofore free that are now made dutiable as to those that have been restored to the free list.

IMPORTERS GIVEN MORE THAN THEY ASKED FOR.

The importers figure largely in this tariff reduction. The Italian Chamber of Commerce, in New York, which is an organization helped by the Italian Government, and looks after the interests of its fellow countrymen in Italy, appears to have been able to get pretty much what it asked for. That chamber proposed a duty of 10 per cent on partly refined argols containing not more than 90 per cent of bitartrate of potash, but the bill as reported reduces the duty 5 per cent lower than the Italians asked for, making it 5 per cent, and they imposed 2½ cents a pound on a higher grade, as asked for by the same Italian organization. That chamber asked for 2½ cents a pound on cream of tartar and got it, although the duty was reduced from 6 to 5 cents in 1909, with a large increase in imports as a result.

The bill puts a duty on licorice root, a raw material not produced in this country, equal to 14.28 per cent, which is the equivalent of a specific duty of one-fourth of a cent a pound, and then on extracts of licorice in paste, and so forth, it has an equivalent ad valorem of 7.91 per cent, a higher percentage on the raw than on the finished product. The Italian Chamber of Commerce, speaking for the foreign interests, asked for 15 per cent on licorice extract, but the framers of this bill imposed only 7.91 per cent. The chamber asked for a reduction on ground sumac to an equivalent of 10 per cent, but the bill puts it on the free list. But bergamot oil, not produced in the United States, is taken from the free list and made dutiable at 20 per cent, and the same is done with the oil of limes, spike, lavender oil, juniper, jasmine, fennel, and other oils. If they were produced in this country there might be some excuse for this 20 per cent duty, but now it is simply an inexcusable tax.

The Italian Chamber of Commerce wanted the duty reduced on castile soap, and they got what they asked for. They also asked for reduced rates on medical preparations containing alcohol, and the bill cuts the duty one-half, as recommended. Calcined magnesia was reduced from 7 to 3½ cents a pound, as recommended by the chamber. It also asked to have sulphur free, so sulphur, refined or sublimed, was put on the free list. The chamber asked for the reduction of the duty on ground talc, of which over 20,000,000 pounds were imported in 1912, and the duty was reduced as requested. In the same way sienna, crude, was reduced to 5 from 10.63 per cent, and when powdered the same duty is imposed; and the same 5 per cent duty is imposed when ground in oil or water.

FREE TRADERS FAVOR AD VALOREM RATES.

As no important nation in the world imposes ad valorem rates, it is very natural that so many protests should be lodged against such unwise legislation. Even the United Kingdom, which levies duties on a few articles for revenue purposes, changed to specific rates a few years ago. Every Secretary of the Treasury, with the exception of Walker, in 1846, has favored specific rates. The experience of all nations demonstrates that such rates are practically the only way to prevent undervaluation frauds—and they also enable the importer to know what he has to pay, and they better protect the American competitor. When prices vary the specific rate does not fluctuate, but when prices are high and a protective rate less needed the ad valorem rate imposes higher duties, and the opposite when prices are low. As a rule ad valorem rates tend to fraud and help to destroy respect for the tariff. The Italian chamber's protest against ad valorem rates was natural, as it holds that the duty on olive oil, for instance, should be specific, as qualities and grades vary so greatly as to make it practically impossible to comply with the requirements as to value. The Senate committee accepted the advice and made the change. Ad valorem rates lead to litigation and help unscrupulous importers to take unfair advantage.

A SPECIFIC DUTY REQUIRED ON ALUMINUM.

A company in Michigan engaged in the manufacture of motor cars protests against the imposition of ad valorem instead of specific rates on aluminum. It is produced mostly in one grade and should be required to meet a fixed rate of duty at all times, and especially in hard times when prices are low. This firm says that it favors the removal of the tariff from aluminum, but, as this is not to be done, it thinks that the duty should be specific. The same argument applies in this matter as to all others in regard to specific and ad valorem rates. The prices fluctuate constantly, and the collection of an ad valorem duty would be attended with greatly increased difficulties and expense, and would tend to hinder importers and hamper and annoy them in obtaining prompt delivery. Ingot aluminum is a raw material used in fabricating industries, and the price should be stable so that the selling price of the manufactured articles could be made with an absolute knowledge of the cost of the raw materials. This could not be done with an ad valorem duty, based not on the contract price but on the price of aluminum at the time of import instead of at the time of purchase, and the finished product would be increased in cost to the extent of an increased price of the raw material made between the date of its purchase and actual importation. This would hamper the manufacturer in making prices to the customer, as the price would be dependent on the fluctuating cost of the raw material. Users of aluminum make contracts months in advance of their actual requirements in order to be assured of an adequate supply, and with a specific duty there would be no trouble, but with an ad valorem duty it would permit the fixing of fictitious prices by those who might control the product. There is no sound reason for changing specific to ad valorem duties, and it is to the credit of the Senate committee that it has not agreed to all of these proposed changes. The same course should be followed wherever feasible in every other case where ad valorem rates have been substituted for specific.

THE EXPERIENCE OF GERMANY—THE SUGAR FRAUDS.

The German Government in forming its last tariff consulted 2,000 technical specialists, representing various subdivisions of trade and industry, and took every means to gain information and find out the opinion of the leaders in every branch of trade. But here when men offer such information they are derided and charged with lobbying. It was the opinion of all these persons in Germany, with rare exceptions, that the duty should be specific, and the German Government accordingly imposes specific rates, as does France and other governments. It is difficult and often impossible to determine the value of imported goods. No one knows this better than the heads of the Treasury Department in this country who have had experience in that line. Perhaps this practically unanimous opinion of our Secretaries of the Treasury and the fact that the governments of other countries favor specific duties have influenced our Democratic friends in adopting ad valorem rates. The same reasoning that leads them to favor practically free trade while all other countries are working in the opposite direction, with the possible exception of the United Kingdom, would lead them to adopt ad valorem instead of specific rates of duty. It has been stated that the sugar frauds in New York show that specific rates are not a guaranty against such practices. But dishonesty can not be absolutely prevented by any form of duty. The sugar frauds were not the result in the slightest degree of specific rates. Men will sell themselves at all times, but the opportunities for sale are infinitely less under the specific system of duties than under the ad valorem.

CHANGE FROM SPECIFIC TO AD VALOREM RATES.

One of the worst features of this bill is the change in the duties on cotton goods from specific to ad valorem rates. It seems to be a theory of the tariff-for-revenue advocates that ad valorem rates help their cause. Our internal-revenue rates are all specific. As the Tariff Board remarked:

> From the point of view of protecting the domestic manufacturer by equalizing the difference in cost of production at home and abroad by means of tariff duties, the system of specific duties is the natural and logical method. Market values fluctuate continuously, according to the prices of the raw material. The cost of manufacturing this material, however, remains relatively constant and does not change with such fluctuations. That is, the difference in the cost of production is a relatively constant quantity, and, consequently, a duty assessed in ad valorem terms would inevitably be at one time in excess of the difference in the cost of production and at another time less than the difference in the cost of production, according to the temporary and speculative changes of the market.

It is a simple matter to adopt the specific system. It is equitable and fair. But the pending bill throws to the four winds the experience and discriminatory thought of the world in this respect and proposes an arrangement which has been cast aside as insufficient from the point of view of the producer, who is interested in obtaining honest revenue from imports.

AN IMPORTER'S SMALL INVESTMENT.

An importer invests very little money in this country. He gets a letter of credit in New York, from a foreign banker, which he furnishes to the foreign manufacturer, as much as is necessary to cover the goods he purchases. When they are sold he is relieved of even the small expense of his letter of credit; but the manufacturer in this country has to invest a large sum of money and incur many risks, not the least of which is the unfair competition he meets with from numerous trusts and combinations that export goods from Europe. In not a few cases it has been shown that buyers in this country of foreign chemicals have had to sign an agreement not to reexport any part of their purchases. That, of course, was due to the fact that the products were sold for less here than is charged in Europe.

PROTECTED GERMANY OUTSTRIPS FREE-TRADE BRITAIN.

The celebration of Emperor William's quarter of a century on the German throne has led to the publication of much statistical information, showing the wonderful progress of that country under a protective tariff. In the last 25 years alone Germany's exports have risen from $798,000,000 to $2,146,000,000. The tonnage movement in its shipping was 42,000,000 tons in 1888 and 137,000,000 in 1912. In 1888 that country produced 81,000,000 tons of coal, including lignite, but in 1912 259,000,000 tons were produced. In the same time crude iron has increased in production from 4,300,000 to 17,800,000 tons, and the imports of raw cotton from 913,000 bales to 2,276,000. The great electrical industry in that country has been practically created in the last 25 years, the capital invested in which has increased twentyfold. The general machinery trade has been revolutionized and its products enormously increased, while the efficiency of all the leading industries has been multiplied several times over by the introduction in the past 25 years of improved machinery. While the efficiency of the individual workingman has been greatly enhanced by machinery, the number of working men and women has been greatly increased, as is evident from a gain of about 19,000,000 in the population since 1888. Emigration has almost ceased in recent years, and that has been altogether due to the protective tariff. Emigration in free-trade Great Britain increases rather than diminishes, notwithstanding the enormous number that have already left that country. Germany has overtaken and gone far ahead of Great Britain in iron and steel, chemicals, and many other industries, the result of affording protection to her home producers. No better demonstration could be furnished of the magnificent results achieved under a protective tariff than by the contrast between Germany since she adopted protection in 1879 and free-trade Great Britain, although the British had an enormous advantage in their vast investment in foreign fields before Germany established her tariff.

FREE TRADE THROWS 1,000,000 AGRICULTURAL WORKERS OUT OF EMPLOYMENT.

By free trade the United Kingdom has thrown away steady employment for a million men in agriculture. Enormously decreased agricultural production has forced a great army to migrate to the cities or seek a living in other lands, and the country has not secured cheaper food but dearer, while millions of acres of land have ceased to be productive. That is the result of an unbalanced condition of agriculture and manufactures. Keir Hardie, a supporter in the British Parliament of the free-trade Government, in writing last January of conditions in the United States, said:

> Living there has more freedom than at home, and the very fact of the wages being higher leads to a greater self-respect and a higher all-around standard of living. Men walk with more independence in their gait than they do with us, and their opportunities, generally speaking, for getting on in the United States are such as do not exist in the United Kingdom.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if Keir Hardie was not a member of the royal commission which investigated the matter of labor costs and wages both in Europe and in the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. Both in England and in the United States; and the commission also made investigations in Germany and Italy.

Mr. GALLINGER. The commission, as I remember, was in existence four or five years, making that investigation; and the Senator has quoted the substance of the report.

Mr. SMOOT. Those are the words that were uttered by Keir Hardie on his return to his own country. After investigating the conditions in the United States, after visiting the homes of the people, after visiting the manufacturing concerns in all parts of the United States, he went home, and, it must have been in humiliation, acknowledged in those words the superior condition of the working people in this country as compared with the working people of England.

With the exception of the United Kingdom, all leading nations maintain a flourishing agriculture both for economic reasons and for defense. Germany's agriculture under protection has prospered as much as her manufacturing industries. The same is true of France, Italy, and other countries. Such a thing as legislating to ruin a great industry, as, for instance, the sugar industry in this country, or any other agricultural industry, would not be entertained for a moment in Germany or France. But here we have the party in control of the Government deliberately setting out not only to extinguish the sugar industry, which promises so much for the future benefit of the Nation, but also that of nearly every other northern product of agriculture. Will it make living cheaper?

Under the last Democratic tariff law the workmen had to resort to soup houses, supported by municipal and charitable organizations, to keep life in their bodies, and there is every prospect, as soon as the tide of prosperity now enjoyed the world over recedes, of a similar condition under this proposed law. Since the passing of control in Congress to the Democratic Party enormous losses have resulted from the depreciation of securities of all kinds, and the tightening coils of depression are seen on every hand. But the chastening has only begun. James J. Hill, who is not a Republican, in writing of conditions in Germany, where every industry needing it is protected, said:

> How to meet German competition to-day is the study of every intelligent leader of industry, of every cabinet on the Continent of Europe. A large share of her world-wide success is due to symmetrical national development. The agricultural industry has not been slighted. Behold a contrast that throws light upon the idle host of England's unemployed, marching despondently through streets whose shop windows are crowded with wares of German work. Between 1875 and 1900, in Great Britain, 2,691,428 acres which were under cereals and 755,225 acres which were under green crops went out of cultivation. In Germany during the same period the cultivated area grew from 22,840,950 to 23,971,573 hectares, an increase of 5 per cent.

THE FREE-TRADE BLIGHT—BISMARCK'S REMEDY—FRANCE'S EXPERIENCE.

England could not produce sufficient food to feed all of her people, but that should make her land all the more valuable.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator right there if the prosperous condition of agriculture in Germany is not due very largely to the financial systems established there, such as the Landschaft and other land-credit organizations and rural banks throughout Germany, and not to the tariff?

Mr. SMOOT. Not in the least, Mr. President; and if the Senator will follow me, I think before I get through I will convince him that that is not the case.

As I say, England could not produce sufficient food to feed all of her people; but that should make her land all the more valuable. Her farmers have the best market for food products in all Europe right at their doors, with a great army of men unemployed, willing to work at such low wages that it is difficult to understand how they can live on them; yet, under such circumstances, millions of fertile acres are abandoned, and every year adds to their number, while Germany and France increase the area of cultivation, and agriculture in both countries prospers to an unwonted degree. But in neither country are the natural conditions as favorable as in the United Kingdom. Bismarck said in a speech in the Reichstag in May, 1879:

> Is not the moment approaching when our agriculture will be no longer able to exist, because corn (cereals) is pressed down to a price at which it can not be remuneratively produced in Germany—taxation, the cost of living, and the cost of land being as they are? When that moment comes not only agriculture but Prussia and the German State will go to ruin as well.

Under the inspiration of Bismarck, the German Government established a protective tariff and has maintained it without a break ever since. Each time a revision takes place its protective features are strengthened instead of weakened. And the result is seen in the enormous development of its commerce, while agriculture has prospered at the same time. France went through the same experience. There was a persistent fall in the price of agricultural products in that country, which was arrested by the tariff of 1892 and of preceding years. Since that time the French farmers have been even more prosperous, if anything, than those of Germany. It is common to hear free traders explain the decline of agriculture in England by attributing it to the opening of new land on this continent and in Australia and elsewhere and the cheapening of transportation. That explanation might have been accepted had it not been for the wonderful prosperity of the agricultural classes on the Continent, where they are under protective tariffs. They are subject to precisely the same influences from America, Australia, and elsewhere as the farmers of the United Kingdom. But with protective tariffs European continental nations have prospered both in manufactures and in agriculture, while that has not been the case in the United Kingdom. Not only have a million men been driven from the farms in England, but many manufacturing industries, such as the silk industry, sugar refining, and others, have greatly declined because of the competition of other nations as a result of the English free-trade policy.

NEW ENGLAND'S DECLINE IN FARMING—REDRESS IN THE WEST.

Many farms in New England declined in value and others ceased to be cultivated because of the opening of the agricultural sections of the West. These conditions are more equal now, but with free trade in farm products and hundreds of millions of acres in Canada and elsewhere opening to development, the farmers in the West will suffer without any redeeming feature. Those in the East, when unable to cultivate their farms under as favorable conditions as formerly, removed to the West and took up land there, while others engaged in manufacturing pursuits. A large number of our farmers have already gone to Canada, and when this bill becomes law there will be an increased number, all of which means an absolute loss to the United States.

We must all admit that what this country needs is more intensive farming, and nothing will bring it about quicker or contribute so much to increasing the fertility of the soil as the production of sugar beets. This is not a matter of speculation but of absolute demonstration in Germany, France, and in other countries. Germany did not produce, on an average, any more per acre of farm products before she began the cultivation of sugar beets than does the United States to-day. But under the influence of the beet-sugar culture Germany now produces 30 bushels of wheat to the acre, on an average, to our 15; 50 bushels of oats to our 30; 208 bushels of potatoes to our 106; 39 bushels of barley to our 24; and 29 bushels of rye to our 16. Throughout the beet-sugar countries of Europe, Germany's experience has been duplicated, and the same thing is taking place in this country. But the destruction of this industry, as proposed by this bill, will prove a tremendous loss to the agricultural industry.

WHAT AN EXPERIENCED DEMOCRAT SAYS—MIDDLEMEN'S PROFITS.

Mr. James J. Hill, who has made a lifelong study of agricultural conditions, in writing on this subject, said:

> Only one-half the land in private ownership is now tilled. That tillage does not produce one-half what the land might be made to yield without losing an atom of fertility. An industrious, fairly intelligent community can raise from the soil food enough for the needs of 490 persons to the square mile. Adopting that ratio, the 414,498,487 acres of improved farm lands in the United States, on the date of the last official report—an area materially enlarged by the present time—would support in comfort 317,350,405 people, enabling them at the same time to raise considerable food for export and to engage in necessary manufacturing employments.

Thus it is evident that there is no sound reason to excuse the importation of wheat, flour, corn, and other farm products, on which the duty is removed by this bill to the advantage of the foreign producers.

Hay is made dutiable at $2 a ton, a reduction of 50 per cent, though nearly 700,000 tons of it were imported last year. The House committee estimated that 1,200,000 will be imported next year under this reduced duty, though that is probably an underestimate.

MAKING THE FARM LESS ATTRACTIVE, AND THE DISASTROUS EFFECT.

We have heard a great deal about making the farm more attractive and inducing more people to go into agriculture instead of leaving the farms and engaging in work in towns and cities. But this bill will have an opposite effect from that of helping agriculture, even should it conduce to lowering prices on farm products along the coast, because of cheap ocean transportation rates; it would have a deleterious effect on consumption generally, and on all industries. If the farmer's crops are limited, as they will be if not profitable, the result will be disastrous to commerce in general. Railroads will employ fewer men, the demand for home products will diminish, and there will be surplus help in many lines. It will cause a further increase in the ranks of the unemployed in cities, lower wages, strikes, disorder, and discontent generally. There is no pretense of furnishing new employment as a result of this free-trade measure, and whatever we import to a larger extent in the way of foreign goods will necessarily throw the persons now engaged in producing such goods in the country out of employment. That is largely what caused 3,000,000 persons to be idle under the last Democratic tariff law.

KILLING THE BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Of the many monstrous provisions of this tariff law perhaps the worst is the one designed to annihilate the production of sugar in this country. The demand for such legislation comes principally from the cane-sugar refiners. They have expended money in agitating for free trade in sugar in order to kill off the growing beet-sugar industry, which has caused them to reduce prices and threaten the destruction of this industry. A more unwise step could not be taken. Not only does the growth of sugar in this country cheapen the product, but it increases the production of the soil for other crops and keeps at home the vast sum that would be sent abroad to pay for sugar raised by half-civilized labor in Java and other foreign countries. There would be no assurance of cheaper sugar under free trade after the American producer is destroyed.

It would probably be the same experience as we have had with coffee, which was put on the free list and the price has doubled, although in the case of coffee it was not then a home product, though it is now produced in Porto Rico. But we can produce all the sugar we consume as easily as any other nation on earth. The Agricultural Department says that there are 247,000,000 acres of land in this country adapted to the cultivation of beets for sugar, and we could produce from 1,446,000 acres all the sugar now consumed. By importing sugar the money all goes abroad, except the refining cost, which is very small, and the profit is absorbed by the Sugar Trust and other sugar refiners. But by home production the money is retained in this country and distributed over a great area with incalculable benefit. An illustration of the effect of home culture may be seen at Logan, Utah, where, before the beet-sugar industry was established, land was selling at $100 to $150 an acre, and it now sells for $225 to $350. Some of that land averages from 25 to 30 tons of beets per acre, and the yield of other crops has been doubled. Every line of business has increased from 50 to 100 per cent since the beet-sugar industry was established there. Farmers with small pieces of land make a comfortable living and have homes of their own all through the beet-sugar section. They use the pulp from the beets to furnish feed for the cattle and sheep, and thus business in every direction is stimulated and prosperity prevails. That is only an illustration of what takes place in a section where the cultivation of beet sugar is carried on.

It seems almost incredible that any party should make itself responsible for such a great calamity as putting sugar on the free list to benefit a few refiners on the seacoast. The average prices of other farm products have increased while sugar has declined. For instance, for 10 years, beginning with 1900, the average wholesale price of 33 articles of farm and food products increased from 14 to 89 per cent, and sugar beets increased in price 26.8 per cent, but the sugar itself declined in price 7 per cent. The per capita consumption of sugar is over 81 pounds annually now, and 40 per cent of that enters into the manufacture of confectionery, and so forth, making a per capita consumption of the remainder of 48 pounds. No one anticipates the slightest reduction in confectionery and such things as a result of the removal of the duty on sugar. On the remaining consumption free sugar would apparently make an annual per capita saving of 64 cents, but when the beet-sugar industry is extinguished the sugar refiners will control the business and the consumer would not benefit, as experience has shown.

SUGAR DECLINES IN PRICE AS A RESULT OF PROTECTION.

In 1880 the average wholesale price of standard granulated sugar was 9.8 cents a pound. The sugar refiners then had exclusive control, but in April of this year, with the competition of beet sugar, Willett & Gray report: "All refiners are now asking 4.20, less 2 per cent." In 1910 the world's selling price of sugar increased 50 cents a hundred pounds, but the United States was not involved in that increase because of the home and Cuban production. Last November and December the refiners quoted sugar at $4.90 per 100 pounds in New York, while beet sugar sold, delivered, in Minneapolis and St. Paul at $4.65; Chicago, $4.40; Detroit, $4.64½; all subject to a discount of 2 per cent for cash. The tariff of 3.50 cents a pound was taken off in 1890, but the average price of sugar between 1890 and 1891 declined only 1.62 cents. With 40 per cent ad valorem duty in 1897 the price was only thirty-eight one-hundredths cent higher, or 38 cents per 100 pounds, than with free sugar. That shows how the trust absorbed the profits. Sugar now is about the same as in 1893, when on the free list.

They have absorbed a considerable part of the reduction made in Cuban sugar, and they also have for a long time forced the sale of Louisiana sugar for the same price as the Cuban sugar, less freight to New York. They deduct from the price given to Louisiana planters the freight to New York, and then they refine that sugar at New Orleans and pocket the freight charge. It is a species of robbery. The Louisiana planters are beginning now to produce sugar fit for consumption without going through the hands of the refiners. They have new machinery for that purpose and threaten to become independent of the trust, hence this desire of the refiners to extinguish the Louisiana cane-sugar industry, as well as the beet-sugar industry.

THE VALUE OF THE HOME SUGAR PRODUCT.

The sugar produced last year, and the by-products in the United States, was of the value of $117,000,000. If the industry is killed and that increased sum sent abroad or lost to home producers, it will be a tremendous injury to the Nation. Over 63 per cent of the value of Porto Rico's crops is sugar, and the island purchases $40,000,000 worth of American manufactured goods. Porto Rico will suffer as well as Louisiana and all of the sugar-producing States in this country. Hawaii will suffer in the same way. The planters there now are forbidden to employ Chinese labor, and if sugar is put on the free list they can not compete with the coolie labor of Java and other such countries. That will mean another great loss in the sale of goods to Hawaii, and Cuba will suffer in a like manner, as the reciprocity treaty will go out of existence when sugar goes on the free list.

R. G. Wagner, of Milwaukee, testified of a visit he made to Germany in 1911, where he inspected a 700-acre estate devoted to sugar growing, where women were paid 31 cents a day, and men 43 cents, in addition to a quart of milk a day and 25 pounds of potatoes a week and sleeping and working quarters, they being compelled to work 12 hours a day. In sugar factories common labor was paid 48 cents a day, and the best skilled labor $1.44 a day. Those rates are less than one-third the prices paid for similar labor in Wisconsin. But in Java, Borneo, and other oriental countries, where sugar is raised to a large extent, and where the production can be greatly increased, wages a mere fraction of those paid in Germany are doled out to the laborers in the sugar fields. And it is such wages that sugar producers in this country would have to compete with, and they could not conduct their business with profit under such competition.

The Denver Chamber of Commerce protests that while food prices have gone up 50 per cent in 15 years the price of sugar has declined as a result of the protection given to that industry, in the same way that the price of tin plate, steel, and other things declined when protected at home. Fifteen years ago the domestic supply of sugar, even including Porto Rico and Hawaii, scarcely amounted to 500,000 tons, while last year it was 2,000,000 tons. That is the result of the tariff, which has encouraged production. The Denver Chamber says that if the American manufacturer is destroyed by this bill sugar will go up in price again, and that is the truth. In Oshkosh, Wis., recently, $200,000 was raised for a beet-sugar factory, but all work has been stopped because of the threat in this bill to put sugar on the free list.

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

The National Sugar Refining Co. of New Jersey is one refining establishment in the country that has opposed free sugar. It says:

> Free sugar, or excessive reduction of the tariff, will cause a large reduction in supply, demoralize a business in which hundreds of millions of dollars are invested in this country and its possessions and dependencies, and give the foreign producer possession of the market on his own terms. Prices would rise as a result. The 1912 consumption was 3,500,000 tons, of which 100,000 tons paid full duty. The average price was below the European price. We would lose our preference in the Cuban trade, to which we export over $60,000,000 in value of goods, and Porto Rico and Hawaii would suffer.

Chairman UNDERWOOD, of the Ways and Means Committee, said that Mr. W. P. Willett, of New York, is "a recognized sugar expert." Chairman HARDWICK, of the House committee which investigated the sugar question, said of Mr. Willett: "He is the greatest sugar statistician in America, and one of the greatest in the world." This is what Mr. Willett said on this subject:

> The sugar trade of the world is not free and open and clear, and it is subject to bounties and restrictions and conditions. What we want to do is to get independent of all that, and we can do it. Increase the domestic product, the Porto Rican, the Hawaiian, and the Philippine domestic cane and beet and we would get the cheapest sugar on earth. The increase in our local supplies is of greater importance in legislating than a reduction of duties. To decrease the price of sugar to the consumer, increase the domestic production as rapidly as possible.

The Democrats from the time of Jefferson have always imposed a duty on sugar. Even Calhoun advocated a duty on sugar, though not produced in South Carolina. Secretary Carlisle opposed putting sugar on the free list, and the last Democratic platform asserted that the party "will not injure or destroy a legitimate industry." No Democrat would even assert that sugar is not a legitimate industry. The refiners always insisted on a duty until hurt by the domestic beet-sugar product. To continue their great profits they now want to destroy the domestic industry. Every enlightened nation, with the exception of Great Britain, encourages and protects the beet-sugar industry, and even in England there is a strong agitation now in favor of protecting the industry in that country. It is one of the great mistakes that country has made not to produce its own sugar, when its soil is well adapted for the purpose.

REFINERS PREDICT THE ANNIHILATION OF THE BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

J. H. Post, president of the National Sugar Refining Co., testified that with free sugar they could lay down refined sugar in the market at a price at which beet sugar could not survive, except possibly at a few places in Colorado, California, and Utah. The beet-sugar industry, he said, would be wiped out. Mr. Atkins, president of the Sugar Trust, testified that in 1892, the first full year of free sugar, the refiners increased their margins from 0.82 to 1.035, and next year to 1.153. That was done under free sugar, showing how the trust acted when it controlled the market. Mr. Atkins testified that Louisiana could not produce sugar without some protection, and that free sugar would cripple the beet-sugar industry and would "almost destroy it." Secretary Heike, of the Sugar Trust, testified that free sugar would destroy the cane and beet industries. Horace Havemeyer testified that with free sugar the beet and cane industries in this country would "cease doing business." J. D. Spreckels said that "if the duty were taken off sugar that would mean the annihilation of the beet-sugar interests in this country." Morey, Nibley, and Wilkinson agreed with that statement. Mr. Spreckels said that if the beet-sugar industry were killed there would be a shortage of sugar, and Mr. Atkins said that free sugar would "put up the price of imported raw sugar." Mr. Willett testified that to kill the home industry would not cheapen sugar. Mr. Post testified:

I would like personally to see free sugar, but looking at it for the country at large I think that it would be a very unfair proposition.

W. G. Gilmore, a partner of Arbuckle Bros., said:

It would be to my advantage as a refiner of cane sugar to take off the duty on sugar. I think that we would make more money. If they produce 1,500,000 tons of beet sugar we will have to quit business.

W. A. Jamison, another cane-sugar refiner, said that if there was no duty on sugar he thought the beet industry would not be so prosperous, and the refiners would sell more sugar. W. B. Thomas, chairman of the board of directors of the American Sugar Refining Co., known as the trust, said:

We have good competition now from beet sugar. If the beet industry were destroyed we would extend our sales, as cane sugar then would take the place of beet sugar.

C. A. Spreckels said:

The beet-sugar growers make the competition severer all of the time. I have been carrying on a campaign to reduce the tariff, which is not beneficial to the cane-sugar refiners. I want free trade.

That explains the situation as to the cane-sugar refiners. Mr. Spreckels testified that he used one of his employees, Mr. Lowry, to agitate in behalf of free sugar. Mr. Lowry organized himself into what he called a "wholesale grocery association," and, with Mr. Spreckels's money and the aid of the Democrats, circulated literature all over the country in behalf of free sugar. These so-called "wholesale groceries" were only concerned, according to Mr. Lowry, in putting sugar on the free list. They had no concern with flour and meats and other things, but they were willing to expend money freely to break up the competition of the beet-sugar men. The sugar refiners seem to have caused the Democratic Party to change its long-established policy of imposing a duty on sugar and now to favor its going on the free list. When the Democrats were last in power they changed the law which provided for free sugar and imposed a duty on it. Now they take off the duty and make sugar free. Why? Let the sugar refiners answer.

THE LEAD INDUSTRY HURT.

The proposed reduction of the rates on lead would be very injurious to the lead-producing States and, in fact, to all other States and allied industries. The duty on lead in ore is one-half of 1 cent a pound as fixed by the House and three-fourths of a cent as amended by the Democratic caucus, instead of the 1½ cents of the present law, with an estimated increase of imports of over 7,000,000 pounds of lead-bearing ore as compared with 1912. On dross lead in pigs, and so forth, there is a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem imposed as compared with an equivalent specific duty now of 94.26 per cent. There is a wide variety in value per pound of lead at neighboring ports, as shown by the Treasury figures. In 1911 the average at New York was 1.88 cents, at Perth Amboy, 2.10 cents, and at Paso del Norte, 2.12 cents. This serves to show the importance of specific rates. With an equivalent ad valorem under the Wilson law more than double that proposed in this bill, many western mines were closed, and others operated at a loss. The Wilson law did not increase the revenue to any extent, but the imports of lead ores were 55,775 tons in 1895. The highest under the McKinley law was 10,000 tons. There was also a great increase in imports in lead in other forms, showing what may be expected under the reduction in this bill, twice as great as that made by the Wilson law. The United States consumes 30 to 35 per cent of the world's annual yield of lead, and the production in this country in 1911 was equivalent to 32.7 of the world's production. Utah produces 15 per cent of the country's total of lead, and 5 per cent of the world's total. But no lead mine in the State could produce at a profit except for other metals. It costs 4 cents a pound to produce and deliver that lead in New York, and except for the value of the other metals obtained at the same time the cost would be 8 cents a pound.

Without the lead-silver mines the production of precious metals in this country would fall away rapidly, showing the importance of keeping them in active operation. The injury that would follow in all kinds of business, and the demoralization in all departments of trade and commerce that would follow the closing of those mines, need not be dwelt upon. Canada pays a bounty on the production of lead, so as to maintain a steady value. Mexico pursues a liberal course in favoring its lead miners, though wages there are low. The American, to compete with the Mexican, as stated by a competent witness before the Finance Committee, has to sacrifice cleanliness, safety, ambition, and a place for his bones to lie when death comes. Mining is the basis for much of the prosperity of our agricultural districts. The largest part of the freight tonnage for the railroads is made up from the products of the mines, to which the silver-lead mines contribute a very large proportion. Between 5,000 and 6,000 men are employed in such mines in Utah, receiving $3 to $4.75 for eight hours' work. Our miners can not work for the low wages or live under the abject conditions peculiar to Mexico; hence if Mexican lead is allowed to undersell our market, many western mines must necessarily close.

HOW THE LEAD PROVISION INJURES IDAHO.

In the Coeur d'Alene district of Idaho 117,000 tons of lead are produced annually, or more than 30 per cent of the United States production, and the industry in that State has been developed altogether under the protective tariff. Lead mining there is the sole support of a community of 12,000, most of whom own their own homes. The pay is $3.60 to $4.75 a day of eight hours. No private corporation can employ an alien unless he has declared his intention to become a citizen. It is an American community. Besides the men in the mines there are thousands of others employed, transporting ore, smelting it, and in the distribution of the refined product. The value of that ore is nearly $14,000,000 and furnishes a livelihood for 40,000. The mines in that State are carried on at a small profit, and any reduction in the tariff on lead will lead to the vanishing point in many cases, and to the point in others below the equitable return, causing distress and paralysis to business. In the three years 1909, 1910, 1911 there was a deficit of 0.366 of a cent per pound of the lead produced. That was made up by the silver, which left an average surplus for the three years of $2,315,158 per annum, or about 8 per cent on the investment. Crediting the silver, the cost of production and marketing was 3.413 cents a pound, and the average selling price was 4.401 cents. Deducting amortization payments left less than 5 per cent return on the investment.

After investigation W. R. Ingalls, a recognized expert, says in his book, Lead and Zinc in the United States, that the cost of producing lead in the Idaho district is in the neighborhood of 4 cents a pound, when silver is worth only 50 cents per ounce. The price in London for long periods has been lower than 3 cents a pound. With a duty of one-half or three-fourths of a cent a pound on lead in the ore and 25 per cent ad valorem on pig lead, instead of 1½ and 2½ cents a pound, the industry in this country will be but a small fraction of what it is to-day, and only the richest of mines can be operated. The average price of pig lead in London from 1880 to 1911, inclusive, was 2.85 cents a pound. Freight to New York would increase the price to 3.1 cents, and a 25 per cent duty would make the price 3.88 cents. But the lead imports nearly all come in ores and bullion from Mexico to be smelted in bond. It is that lead that will be retained. The proposed duty on lead bullion shows a reduction of 69.26 per cent.

CHEAP LABOR IN MEXICAN MINES—LARGE IMPORTS CERTAIN.

Besides their cheap labor Mexican producers have a great advantage in transportation. From the mines to the smelters and then to New York makes a total cost of transportation of $10 per ton of pig lead. From the Coeur d'Alene mines to New York costs $23 per ton, giving the Mexican mines an advantage of 0.65 cent a pound. The consumers are not likely to derive any substantial benefit. The largest consumption of lead is in the form of white-lead pigment, the price of which bears no fixed ratio to the price of pig lead. From 1895 to 1897, when the duty was one-half the present rate, the price of pig lead was 1.229 cents per pound lower than from 1898 to 1911, but the price of white lead was only 0.490 cents a pound lower. In the fall of 1907 pig lead declined 2¼ cents a pound, but white lead fell only three-fourths of a cent a pound. Imports will have to increase greatly to receive as much revenue under the proposed rate as under the existing law. That will mean millions of dollars sent out for lead instead of paying it as wages to American workmen.

The ad valorem 25 per cent proposed in this bill would have admitted at all times during the last 10 years foreign pig lead, so that it could have been sold much below the price of the domestic lead. The average London price during that period was 3 cents a pound, making the cost, duty paid, 3.75 cents a pound. The average New York price was 4.57 cents. The largest producers would have been unable to meet that competition except by a sweeping reduction in wages. The prices in London and New York are substantially parallel—a low price in London means a correspondingly low price in New York. With an ad valorem duty on pig lead, the duty would be least when protection is most needed. The duty should be specific. Miners are paid $3.50 and $4.75 a day in the West for doing the same work for which 75 cents are paid in Mexico.

WILL DECREASE THE PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER.

The effect of the proposed reduced rate would be to close many mines under development and decrease the production of gold and silver. Smelting charges would be increased because of the lack of ores of the kind necessary for such work. The successful recovery of gold and silver from refractory ores depends on smelting them with lead ores, and the deficiency of such ores would cause an advance in the smelting charges and discourage precious-metal mining. The mines now work on a low margin, and many at a loss. There are always a large number of mines that do not pay, which are in the course of development, and under this large reduction in duty such development would cease. The decline in the production in the United States would lead to an advance in the world's prices. In the meantime the mines would be closed, many flooded or caved, thousands of miners out of employment, railroads would suffer, smelters also, farmers lose markets for many products, and the injury would be severe in many communities and States. Millions of dollars would be sent abroad to purchase lead, the price of which would advance, and the country would lose much and gain nothing.

The gold production in the United States has declined. It was $91,685,168 in 1912, $96,890,000 in 1911, and $99,673,400 in 1909. At the same time there is a large increase in gold used in the arts, amounting to $33,756,554 in the United States in 1910, as compared with $24,445,797 in 1908 and $18,061,553 in 1900. The only mining States where precious-metal mining pays are those that have the benefit of lead production and lead smelting. All of the lead produced in the far Western States comes from gold and silver ores, and shows a profit of only a fraction of a cent a pound. And this includes the benefit of the existing duty of 1½ cents a pound. The tariff has been the deciding factor between profit and loss in mining. The mines of Tonopah and Goldfield, Nev., offer a case in point. They now produce more than one-tenth of the country's annual gold product. But in their infancy they had to depend upon lead smelters to handle their product. If it had not been for the transportation and smelting facilities designed for handling low-grade and lead-bearing ores, it is doubtful if these mines would ever have tided past infancy. The Government can not consistently shut its eyes to the needs of an industry in which the tariff on lead seems to be the deciding factor between profit and loss. The lead-ore producers of the Rocky Mountain States have recommended a cut of 29.04 per cent in the rate of duty on lead in pigs, bars, and bullion, the form in which most of the imports are made, placing it on the same basis as lead in the ores, but there should be no greater reduction. The increasing use of both gold and silver in the arts leaves a decreased quantity for coinage or export. Some $40,000,000 comes from lead mines and smelting. There is nothing akin to monopoly in the mining industry. Excluding placers and copper mines, there were 8,352 nonproducing mines in the United States in 1910 and 2,845 producing mines. The expenses of operation and development as compared with the value of the product left a deficit of $5,199,938. The only States in which the expenditures in developing gold and silver mines have not greatly exceeded the surplus of products mined are the ones that have had the benefit of neighboring lead production and lead smelting.

For 10 years the annual revenue on lead has been $734,628, or 80 per cent more than the revenue as estimated in the bill introduced in the last Congress, House bill 18642. Hence the present duties are competitive.

ZINC IMPORTS INCREASING—WAGES AND CONDITIONS IN MEXICO.

The present duty on zinc is a revenue duty, averaging $250,000 annually, and the imports have increased under the present law. There is no monopoly or no foreign or cheap labor in the industry in this country. The disturbance of conditions in Mexico has lessened imports. There are many small producers of zinc. There are 15,000 men employed in that industry, receiving from $2.59 to $5 a day. From 66 to 70 per cent of the cost of manufacturing zinc is expended in mining and concentrating. It costs $39.61 to produce and deliver to the smelters a ton of average Joplin zinc ore. In Mexico the cost is $20.96 to produce and deliver 1½ tons containing the same quantity of zinc, the difference being principally in wages.

Consul General Hanna, of Monterey, Mexico, reported that wages in zinc mines were 50 cents a day in gold for a 10-hour shift. He reported that "miners live in caves, holes in the ground, or in thatched huts made of stones or sticks and covered with palm leaves or other such material." He stated that the shelter was lamentably insufficient in the time of rain, and that the men wore clothing of the rudest materials, leather sandals bound with thongs to protect the feet, and they had a limited variety of food, such as wheat or corn tortillas, beans, and coffee, and goat meat at intervals. At certain places in Mexico ore can be placed on the surface at a cost of $2 a ton, and at other mines it costs from $6 to $7 a ton. From a mine where large quantities of ore are shipped, though badly situated as regards transportation facilities, it can be laid down at smelters in the United States for $22.57 a ton, containing 40 per cent of zinc.

The consul at Saltillo says that the better ore in the Bonanza district contains 40 per cent of zinc, while other ore contains 30 per cent, and the wages vary from 37 cents to 75 cents a day, making the cost of mining $2 a ton.

The consul at Chihuahua gives the cost of mining and hauling to the smelters in Kansas as $12.32 a ton, American currency, for one mine, and for another $13.57, and for still another $9.75. That ore contains 35 to 45 per cent of zinc. The consul says that the living conditions of workmen are extremely humble. A man and his family live in a one-room shack, mud house, stone hut, or dugout. Their food is dried meat, tortillas from boiled pumpkin, beans, and coffee. The meals are cooked over a little fire made between stones and the family sleeps on blankets on the floor.

INCONSISTENCY ON WOOL—A SHAMEFUL COURSE.

The United States is suited by nature for the production of wool in great variety and large quantities, but owing to higher wages and the difference in living in this country as compared with other woolgrowing countries the industry can not be successfully maintained here without a protective duty. The total value of the product of the country for the year ending October 1, 1912, was $75,819,251. That industry is to be crippled by putting wool on the free list. This is done in defiance of the Democratic platform not to injure or destroy legitimate industries, and also of the President's assurance that the Democratic Party does not propose anything approaching free trade. How is free wool in the Democratic free bill of 1913 reconciled with the 20 per cent duty of the Democratic bills of 1911 and 1912? On wool manufactures a duty is proposed of 35 per cent ad valorem by the House, which has been changed in some respects by the Senate committee, being made lower on stockings, hose, and half hose, and 5 per cent higher on plushes, velvets, and other pile fabrics. But on such fabrics made wholly or in part of wool, or hair of the Angora goat, or other like animals, the duty is cut from the 50 per cent fixed by the House to 40 per cent. This serious cut in the protection afforded to this industry means serious consequences, as is shown by the stoppage of work to a large extent in many mills and the preparation of some manufacturers to close their business in this country and operate in Europe.

The Democratic House of the last Congress twice originated and passed bills providing for a duty of 20 per cent on wool. Twice the House agreed to a compromise with the Senate by which that rate was increased to 29 per cent, and once it actually passed such a bill over the President's veto. There was no promise of free wool in the Democratic platform nor in the speeches of the party leaders.

If reports are true, the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee at this session agreed to a duty of 15 per cent on wool, which was changed to free trade in wool at the suggestion of the President. At any rate, a handbook issued by the Ways and Means Committee before the duty on wool had been eliminated at the request of the President contained figures estimating what the revenue would be on the 15 per cent ad valorem duty. We have had as high as 63,964,876 sheep in this country at one time, and sheep furnish a very valuable meat product consumed more by the working people than perhaps any other meat. But this industry will also be largely extinguished by the admission of such meat from foreign countries and wool and sheep free of duty. The value of the manufactures of wool for 1909, as returned by the census, was $507,166,710, and $87,962,669 were paid out in wages in woolen and worsted mills. Those are now producing only about 50 per cent of their capacity, which will be still further reduced when this bill becomes a law. Foreign manufacturers, according to trustworthy reports, have taken orders in this country for vast quantities of woolen goods to be delivered when this bill takes effect.

THE WILSON LAW HIGHER, BUT IT BROUGHT DISASTER.

The Wilson tariff law, under the Cleveland administration, imposed on cloths, knit fabrics, and so forth, equivalent ad valorem duties of about 48 per cent, as compared with 35 per cent in this bill. The industry under that former Democratic law was paralyzed, and an enormous number of workmen were thrown out of employment. Since that time wages have largely advanced, and nearly $40,000,000 more in wages are paid out under the existing law than was the case under the last Democratic tariff bill. This will give some idea of what is in store for the country by this piece of legislation.

Canada imposed a 35 per cent duty on woolen manufactures in 1898. In 1885 there were 241 woolen mills in that country, but in 1912, under this 35 per cent duty, there were only 78 such mills. Thirty per cent of the mills closed in 8 years after that rate was imposed, and 13 years after the passage of that law two-thirds of the mills in operation when it passed had gone out of business. In 1899 the woolen and worsted mills of Canada produced nearly 14,000,000 yards of cloth, and last year they turned out a little over 7,000,000 yards, while the importations on woolens and flannels, and so forth, increased from 7,434,027 yards in 1893 to over 24,000,000 yards in 1912. That was the effect of a much less reduction in duties than is provided for under this bill, and wages, cost of operation, and so forth, are less in Canada than they are in the United States. There are about $450,000,000 invested in the manufacture of woolen goods which will be seriously affected by this bill when it takes effect. The value of the product as given by the last census was $507,166,710. It is a great industry that has been built up under a protective tariff, and to strike such a disastrous blow at it means vast loss to a great number of persons. We know what the wages are in this industry in Europe. They are less than half as much in Great Britain as in this country, and if the wages paid in the mills alone were reduced one-half that would mean a loss of $45,000,000 to wage earners of this country, to say nothing of the enormous loss to the woolgrowers. It will not make woolen clothing cheaper to the masses.

OPENING THE DOOR TO SHODDY—SECTIONAL DISCRIMINATION ON GOAT HAIR.

Shoddy has been excluded from the United States by high tariff duties, and it was a wise policy, as it prevented the diseased rags of the world from being manufactured into cloth for the American people. This bill puts shoddy on the free list. We shall have plenty of shoddy goods for sale under this new law, as they are produced in Europe to a great extent. That will be one of the so-called advantages of this legislation.

A fair illustration of what governed in the preparation of this bill was shown by the action of the House in placing a duty on the hair of the Angora goat, while putting wool on the free list. They have always been included in the same paragraph in the tariff, and there is no reason for any distinction between the hair of the goat and the wool of the sheep. But the production of Angora goats is confined largely to Texas, and that is why a duty was retained on goat hair, while the wool of the sheep was put on the free list. There is comparatively a small production of goat hair in this country, and imposing a duty on it while making wool free was a discrimination of a sectional character highly discreditable to the party responsible for it. The Senate committee has listened to the public indignation expressed because of this discriminatory action of the House and has placed Angora-goat hair on the free list along with wool. As Turkey and South Africa, the only countries where these goats can be obtained, absolutely forbid their exportation, it is unfortunate that the industry should be afforded no protection in this country.

Wool and the hair of the Angora goat ought to be placed on the dutiable list. I shall offer at the proper time a substitute for Schedule K, providing for a duty on both.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Utah has now spoken about three hours, and while he appears to be reasonably fresh at the end of that long period of time, I apprehend that the Senator would prefer to continue his remarks to-morrow. I will ask the Senator if he would not?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am a little tired, and I should prefer to conclude my remarks to-morrow, if not interfering with the business of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should very much prefer that the Senator should go on until 6 o'clock. Is there any Senator on the other side of the Chamber ready to proceed?

Mr. GALLINGER. In rejoinder to the inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina, I will say that while we have a long list of Senators who propose to discuss the bill no one is ready, so far as I know, to continue the discussion this afternoon.

In that connection, Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he could inform this side of the Chamber as to the intention of Senators on the Democratic side to engage in the general discussion of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from New Hampshire, I will say that I am not able to now state definitely how many speeches will be made on this side of the Chamber in the general discussion, but I think very few, probably not more than two or three at the furthest.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will be observed that, so far as Republican Senators are concerned, we have been very diligently discussing this bill since the report was made, following the speech of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and I would suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that no progress out of the ordinary will be made by crowding us on this side.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not wish the Senator from New Hampshire to understand that I am seeking to crowd Senators on the other side. My inquiry was, whether, if the Senator from Utah suspended, there was anyone on the other side ready to take up the debate?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator, in response to that interrogatory, that there is no Senator on this side prepared to go on to-day; but we are arranging so that there will be a continuous debate, so far as it is possible to bring that about. We have no disposition to hinder the consideration of the bill; in fact, we want to expedite it as much as possible.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires now to discontinue his remarks until to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Rather than have it said, Mr. President, that there is any delay in the passage of this bill, I will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not saying that, and I do not wish the Senator from Utah to understand me as saying that.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I am a little tired; I have been talking now for about three hours, and I prefer to finish to-morrow. If I could get through to-night it would be a different thing, but I can not, and I should very much prefer to go on to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, Mr. President, I suggest that we proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, when we proceed with the reading of the bill there will be amendments offered probably from the beginning, and I think we ought to have the bill printed in the form that it is proposed to put it, so that we shall all have the data before us on our desks when the bill is taken up by paragraphs.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not proposing to take up the bill by paragraphs for consideration; I am simply proposing to have the bill read. As it will have to be read at some time, I do not see why we might not occupy the hour remaining this evening in reading the bill, not for amendment of course. I am not proposing to have read the committee amendments, but the bill has to be read, and we might just as well have it read this afternoon when we have the time.

Mr. BRISTOW. I had supposed the Senator would ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment. I had expected that to be requested.

because otherwise it would be read once and then would have to be read again for amendment, and the usual practice is——

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think it is necessary to read it a second time for amendment. I think it is customary to read a bill once.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] in presenting the report asked that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. SIMMONS. At that time.

Mr. GRONNA. At that time; and that was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. But that does not dispense with the necessity of reading the bill as a whole at some stage of the proceedings, and I was proposing that we should do that now.

Mr. BRISTOW. The formal reading of the bill having been dispensed with, it then will be read for amendment. Of course it will all have to be read, but from the very beginning of the reading amendments will be offered to every paragraph before the paragraph is adopted or rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the action of the Senate at the time of the presentation of the report dispensed with the necessity of the formal reading of the bill, of course I do not care to have it formally read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands, but the Chair does not know what the RECORD shows.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that I was not here at the time the bill was reported, and I was not aware that there was any order dispensing with the formal reading of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it should prove to be the fact that the formal reading was dispensed with, all the reading that would be required would be to read the bill for amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not understand that that is what occurred. The Secretary can find out from the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair said he did not speak with authority, but it was the understanding of the Chair that that was the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can refer to the RECORD and find out in a second.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that should prove not to have been done at that time, I will suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that if he will request that the formal reading be dispensed with I am sure we will all agree to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, Mr. President, at the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, I now ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill under consideration be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the formal reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that, of course, he is aware that those of us who expect to give more or less care to the reading of the bill and offer amendments to the various paragraphs have been waiting for the data referred to, otherwise it would necessitate a very great deal of clerical work in order to ascertain just what changes have been made, and that would be made useless, since the committee is going to furnish us the data. I understand the matter has been prepared by the various members of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. As I stated to the Senator from Kansas on Saturday, I think all the data have been prepared and are ready for the printers. The matter will go to them to-night, but the gentleman in charge of the work informs me that it is rather voluminous and the Printer says it probably will be Wednesday before we will be able to get the copies.

Mr. GALLINGER. Wednesday of this week?

Mr. SIMMONS. Wednesday of this week.

Mr. SMOOT. What document is the Senator referring to?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am referring to a comparative statement prepared along the lines of the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. SMOOT. Is that along the line of the handbook prepared by the House?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; not exactly that, and yet somewhat along that line. It contains in parallel columns the present law, the House bill, and the Senate bill, with data under each paragraph showing imports, exports, unit value, production, and so on.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that, inasmuch as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will consume a considerable part of the time to-morrow, I think there will be no difficulty in finding some other Senator who will take the remainder of that day and that we can well afford to wait until Wednesday morning, at least, for the data that have been promised and that are very important. I will venture to say that there will be no delay and that we would better have the data before the reading of the bill is commenced, because almost every item in the bill will be discussed.

Mr. SIMMONS. In view of that statement, I shall not make any objection to laying the bill aside at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to state, for the information of the Senator from Kansas, that by Wednesday morning at the latest there will be printed the comparison that I asked to have printed as a public document, and as soon as it is ready I will see that copies of it are placed on the desks of Senators.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that he can readily see that we ought not to begin to consider the bill by paragraphs until we have on our desks the data so essential to its intelligent consideration. That is the only reason I made the suggestion.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Kansas surely has not understood me as suggesting that we take up the bill now for consideration by paragraphs?

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The RECORD shows that when the bill was reported from the committee the formal reading of it was dispensed with. It has been dispensed with twice now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, do I understand correctly, then, that unanimous consent has been given that the bill be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated that I had no objection to that course.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not know whether or not the order had been entered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, to go on to another matter, Mr. President, this morning there came before the Senate the question as to the power of the Senate to order the printing of illustrations in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD without the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing. The then occupant of the chair, if I remember correctly, ruled that it could be done, and thereupon the Senate voted that it should be done. I have forgotten whether it was done by a vote or by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was a vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it was a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was submitted to the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was submitted to the Senate, and the Senate authorized it. There had been a difference of opinion expressed by different Senators before that was done.

I think the matter is one of considerable importance. I think the act of January 12, 1895, which was an act of Congress and not an act of the Senate or of the House, was passed for the very purpose of taking away from either branch of Congress separately the authority to encumber the RECORD with all sorts of illustrations and diagrams.

I was unable this morning to get a satisfactory answer to my question in relation to the matter, and so, in order to put in the RECORD my view of it, which, of course, will go for what it is worth and no more, I will read section 13 of the act of January 12, 1895, as it stands to-day:

SEC. 13. The joint committee shall have control of the arrangement and style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and while providing that it shall be substantially a verbatim report of proceedings, shall take all needed action for the reduction of unnecessary bulk and shall provide for the publication of an index of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD semi-monthly during the sessions of Congress and at the close thereof.

That is a statute of the United States. In my opinion, one of the motives that induced Congress to place that provision in the statute was that out of senatorial courtesy, or out of the desire of one Member of the House to accommodate another, the RECORD should not be unduly inflated with maps and illustrations. I think it was the intention of Congress to place it beyond the control of either branch of Congress to authorize this course, unless with the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing.

In support of that view I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 20, 1912, at page 2353, the proceedings in the House, as follows:

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I wish to introduce to the members of the committee here an object lesson on the full dinner pail that they may have the same for their inspection—— [Placing large illustration on Clerk's desk.]

The CHAIRMAN. To whom did the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN].

The CHAIRMAN. How much time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, that is a speech without words. [Laughter and applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BUTLER. I can see the force of that, Mr. Chairman.

On the next day, at page 2404 of the RECORD, the RECORD discloses the following, under the head of "Printing of illustrations in the RECORD":

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my speech of yesterday, in regard to the chemical schedule, printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the matter of illustrations, under the law, has to go to the Joint Committee on Printing, and the House can not control it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

I now read from page 1007, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives, under subdivision numbered 7024, as follows:

The insertion of maps or diagrams in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is within the control of the Joint Committee on Printing.

I am informed, and the record of the clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing will show, though I have not been able to get it from him this afternoon, that at a time between the occurrences in the House proceedings as given in the two passages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from which I have quoted, the request was made of the Joint Committee on Printing to print the illustration, and it was denied, and the Speaker of the House ruled that the House itself could not give the permission.

I simply wanted to put this into the RECORD, if there be any doubt about it, in order to express my opinion that the action of the Senate this morning in authorizing the placing of the map in the RECORD was null and void and of no effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I took the other side of this question, I desire to say a single word.

It is a forced construction of the law that the matter of illustrations is covered by this statute. The Joint Committee on Printing is authorized by section 13 of the statute practically to edit the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If the Joint Committee on Printing had carried out the provisions of that act, the RECORD would not have been half so large as it is from month to month. A great deal of extraneous matter goes into the RECORD that might well be omitted. But the idea that the printing of a table that a Senator uses in his speech is a violation of the provisions of that statute, to my mind, is not tenable. In the first place, what the Senator from Iowa used was not a diagram; it was a table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was a map.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was a table in which he made comparisons; and had I made that speech—which I wish I had been able to make, because it was an extremely able speech—I should have felt at liberty to have inserted the table in my speech as a part of it, just as I should have inserted any other table. To say that it comes under the inhibition of the statute is to my mind not tenable, as I remarked before.

In the next place, I can not believe that Mr. HINDS, or even the Speaker of the other body, if I may be permitted to allude to him, has any authority to say that the joint committee has jurisdiction over that matter. If we grant to the Joint Committee on Printing the right to formulate a code of rules, as they seem to have done, which is going to control our action as a Senate, the committee is going to legislate for us; and I am never going to agree to that myself.

I think the Senate acted wisely in voting that the Senator from Iowa could use the table which he had prepared as a part of his remarks; and while it may be wise to prohibit the introduction of some illustrations, I have been of opinion that if we should strike out a very considerable proportion of what goes into the RECORD and insert a picture now and then the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would be more popular than it is at the present time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, make it an illustrated daily.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I agree that the Senate acted wisely when it did that, if it had the power to do it. I am very glad to have in the RECORD this map, as I perversely persist in designating it, because I think it will be useful and full of information. It was a map, Mr. President. It hung on the wall in plain sight of all Senators, and was a map of the United States of America, divided into States. The purpose of the map was to show by the figures which were affixed to each State the products of the State, and what proportion of protection they enjoyed out of the tariff, or something analogous to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would the Senator from Connecticut insist that in every instance where we designate the States, alphabetically or otherwise, for purposes of illustration, it is a map of the United States?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not at all. It never entered my head to claim that the insertion of the names of the States in the RECORD would be a map.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought that was what the Senator said. I may have misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; on the contrary, the Senator from Connecticut stated that the map hung upon the wall; it was a map upon parchment or paper; and if I remember correctly, it was a colored map. It had the names of the States and various figures upon it. The Senator from Utah kindly suggested, and I believe some other Senator this morning suggested that he promised, that he would add to the map by writing on it some other figures to show something that he wanted to show, and the Senator from Iowa kindly gave him the use of the map for that purpose. It was a map, in my opinion, if I know what a map is.

Section 13 of the act I read before provides as follows:

And while providing that it shall be substantially a verbatim report of proceedings shall take all needed action for the reduction of unnecessary bulk.

In my opinion that clearly gives the committee authority to reduce the bulk of the RECORD, and, while substantially it must contain a verbatim report of the proceedings, if a Member of Congress should stand up and insist on repeating the same rhapsody over and over again it would be clearly within the province of the Joint Committee on Printing to cut it all out except the original in the interest of reduction of unnecessary bulk.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator how they can reduce bulk until the bulk is made? This so-called map is not in the RECORD at all, and I do not see how the Joint Committee on Printing can reduce bulk by excluding a map that is not in the RECORD. After the map is inserted, if the committee should take the responsibility to cut it out, as under this statute they might take the responsibility to cut out the speech the Senator made, possibly they might have some ground for taking that action. But until the bulk is an ascertained fact I do not see how the committee can reduce it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator takes the stand that in order to reduce the unnecessary bulk of the RECORD the committee first has to create the RECORD in a condition of unnecessary bulk and then withdraw a part of its own creation, I should not think that would be in the interest of the reduction of bulk or of economy of the Government's funds for printing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Manifestly the Joint Committee on Printing can not meet in the evening and take the notes of the official reporters and proceed to blue-pencil the proceedings so as to reduce the bulk. That is an impossibility and carries with it the point I have made, that it can not be done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In my opinion, it all comes right back to the sustaining of my contention about this matter; that is, that the members of the committee do not have to sit up nights in order to blue-pencil out what they have put in, but in my view of it the permission of the committee has to be obtained in advance before the map is put in. If they do not approve it, the unnecessary bulk is not created; the map does not get into the RECORD. Of course it is not confined to maps, but applies to any sort of illustration.

I say that under section 13 of the statute I think the committee had authority to make these rules; and if they did, there can be no question that Congress delegated to the Joint Committee on Printing authority to say what illustrations—whether maps or other illustrations—may go into the RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have finished, if the Senator does not wish to ask me a question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to say in this connection that I called attention this morning to the statute which the Senator from Connecticut has read again. Clearly the statute was intended to cover cases of this kind.

I think the Senator from Connecticut is eminently correct in saying that this is an illustration. It is a map. It is something that can not be reproduced from type, and therefore it is an illustration. We can not escape that conclusion.

The Joint Committee on Printing has had vested in it authority to determine upon the arrangement of the RECORD and to take steps to control its bulk. For instance, a President's message is offered in both Houses. The rule is that it can be printed only once in the RECORD. That is a perfectly reasonable rule, and yet it is a rule made by the Joint Committee on Printing. It is to regulate matters of that kind that this rule was adopted back in 1888. In 1895 Congress enacted the statute to which the Senator has called attention, showing that Congress never attempted to repeal the rule which was then in existence.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Was there not a previous statute, and had there not been other statutes prior to that, as far back as 1873, in relation to the same matter?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so; but at any rate this rule has been recognized on all occasions. As the Senator has pointed out, as late as February 21, 1912, the Speaker of the House of Representatives ruled that illustrations had to be referred to the committee.

The doctrine is laid down in Hinds' Precedents that—

The insertion of maps or diagrams in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is within the control of the Joint Committee on Printing.

I find that on August 21, 1911, at pages 4264–4265 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senator LA FOLLETTE had an illustration that he desired to have printed in the RECORD, a kind of map. After attention had been called to this rule and the matter had been discussed pro and con, Senator LA FOLLETTE made this motion, which was agreed to:

Mr. President, if the Chair, then, will submit the motion which I propose, it is:

That it is the sense of the Senate that the Joint Committee on Printing be authorized and directed to order the Public Printer to incorporate in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, the map which I offer at this time.

And that was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Florida if the action of the Senate this morning was not substantially a similar action? In other words, the Senate voted that the diagram, or whatever you may choose to call it—I call it a table—should be inserted in the RECORD. Instead of authorizing the committee to authorize the Public Printer, the Senate did it itself.

Mr. FLETCHER. This motion recognizes that the power was vested in the joint committee by act of Congress; not merely by the Senate, but by both the House and the Senate. The Senate to-day attempted to undo the act of the whole Congress by itself directing the printing of this illustration in the RECORD. Here Senator LA FOLLETTE recognized that this power was vested in the Joint Committee on Printing, and he simply got the expression of opinion of the Senate. It was merely advisory; it was not directory at all. It was merely advising the Joint Committee on Printing that the Senate thought it well to print the illustration in the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I must have misunderstood the Senator when he read what the Senate did in that instance. I clearly understood him to say that it was declared to be the sense of the Senate that the Joint Committee on Printing "be requested and directed," and so forth.

Mr. FLETCHER. "Be authorized and directed."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it was "directed," the Senator would not claim that it was purely advisory, would he?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; because the whole discussion preceding that was based upon the proposition that the Senate did not have the power or authority to put this illustration in the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator would not claim, would he, that the Senate had authority to "direct" the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I would not. I think perhaps the last word is erroneous; but it had authority to authorize the committee to allow it to be done. The whole discussion indicates that it was merely an expression of view on the part of the Senate that the Joint Committee on Printing should grant the request, and allow the illustration to be printed, which was done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember very vividly the request made by the Senator from Wisconsin. It was I that objected at the time, calling attention to the law, and then the motion was made. After the motion was made the Joint Committee on Printing met, and the motion was presented to them for their action. The joint committee passed upon it, allowing the matter to be printed in the RECORD, and so instructed the Public Printer.

Before an illustration or a map can be printed in the RECORD, the Public Printer requests that an order be issued from the Joint Committee on Printing; and he would not have printed the map at that time without the order. I do not know whether or not he will print this map in the speech of the Senator from Iowa without some kind of an order from the Joint Committee on Printing; but I think it was a very bad precedent to establish, Mr. President; and we will have a great deal of trouble hereafter if this action stands without some kind of modification.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in my view the Senator from Utah has announced in the last few words of his remarks where the chief practical trouble about this difference of construction comes in. The Public Printer has to get permission from somebody if an illustration is to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The clerks in the Secretary's office are puzzled about it; and where a statute of the United States prescribes that the Joint Committee on Printing may do certain things, the clerks look to them for an order to the Public Printer to do those things. When the Senate assumes authority of itself to do the same things, neither the Secretary's office nor the Public Printer knows whom to obey.

I suppose in this particular instance there will be no conflict of authority, because I have no doubt the Joint Committee on Printing, after the Senate showed what it wanted done this morning, will issue the order; but then it will all be left in the dark, so far as the Public Printer and the Secretary's office are concerned, because both have authority, and in the future no one will know whether the Senate can at any time override the Joint Committee on Printing or whether the United States statute authorizes the Joint Committee on Printing exclusively to issue such orders.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to read section 13 once again. I was here when this statute was enacted, and I remember it was called the Manderson bill. I never heard the question raised that it applied to tables and diagrams which illustrated a Senator's speech. I never have supposed that it did.

The joint committee shall have control of the arrangement and style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—

I do not know what that means; I confess I do not; I do not know when they are going to do it unless they do it before it is printed.

Shall have control of the arrangement and style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and while providing that it shall be substantially a verbatim report of the proceedings—

Which that table was—shall take all needed action for the reduction of unnecessary bulk.

Can anyone interpret that language to give the Joint Committee on Printing the right to decide that a table which is used to illustrate a Senator's speech must be first submitted to that committee and that it must summon the members of the joint committee who might be out of the jurisdiction and hold up a Senator's speech indefinitely as a result? I fail to interpret the language to mean that. I think the Senate acted wisely. I hope the Senate will not reverse its action.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think the Senator states the point when he says that this would be construed to include tables which a Senator used in his speech. A table would be nothing when reproduced in the RECORD, except some lines at right angles to each other and some figures and letters, all of which can be reproduced from the ordinary stock of the Printer's office. An illustration, an illustrated map particularly, is an entirely different thing; it has to be engraved specially in order to be put in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would add to my suggestion that there is not a word in the statute relating to an illustrated map. It is an assumption on the part of the joint committee that they have jurisdiction over a matter the statute did not give them jurisdiction over. If the committee is to control that matter the statute ought to be amended.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The statute does not use the word "illustrations" or the word "maps," nor is there a provision which uses the words "tables and figures." The statute speaks in general terms of reducing the bulk and gives the committee authority to prescribe the style and make-up of the RECORD. It is not necessary under that language to assume that the committee has to sit up every night and tell the Public Printer right on the spot exactly what the next morning's RECORD shall be. But I assume the committee provides a general system of rules—that the RECORD shall be a document of certain dimensions, at least as to length and breadth, the kind of type to be used, and so forth, leaving the thickness subject to us.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, just a word in connection with the suggestion that there may be something in this map that ought to appear in the RECORD or that the map itself ought to appear. I think it would be pretty well agreed that everything that is shown on the map can be set out in the RECORD. For instance, it shows each State and the production of each State. All the figures and the whole data as shown by the map can be covered without inserting the map. It will be no detraction from the speech at all if the map is not inserted.

Another reason for this rule, Mr. President, is that if illustrations are to be ordered inserted in the RECORD by the Senate without any reference to the committee we are liable to find ourselves here inserting colored illustrations, and the Printing Office is not prepared to do that kind of work. It has to be done outside, and there would be a delay of the RECORD—it might be for weeks—in inserting illustrations, because they are to be set forth in various colors, and so forth. That is one reason why this matter ought to go to the committee, and I am sorry that the precedent is about to be set that it can be ordered without a reference to the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon me? Why could we not have a regular cartoonist and a daily illustrated RECORD, with proper headlines and loving and lovable caricatures of our friends across the Chamber? Why not employ Berryman for that purpose? He would be a very good man.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that shows the importance of a motion to reconsider. I move that the action of the Senate be reconsidered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the importance of this matter may well be stated in a few words. The Printing Office has outline maps of the United States to-day with mortised spaces in which it can insert figures. It will cost the Government of the United States $5 to reproduce this table, which I call it, which the Senator from Iowa used in his speech. It may be an important question to be reconsidered and acted upon, and while I shall interpose no factious opposition to it I really think that it is made a great deal more of than the facts of the case warrant.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the motion was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved by the Senator from Florida that the Senate reconsider the action taken with reference to the table or map ordered to be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Colt	Lane	Smoot
Bacon	Fall	Lea	Sterling
Brandegee	Fletcher	Lewis	Swanson
Bristow	Gallinger	Oliver	Thomas
Bryan	James	Page	Thompson
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Robinson	Tillman
Catron	Kenyon	Sheppard	Warren
Chilton	Kern	Smith, Ga.	Williams

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is necessarily absent. I will let this announcement stand for the rest of the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-two Senators have answered on the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the names of the Senators who have not responded be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. JONES, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, and Mr. VARDAMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and Mr. BORAH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have responded to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the presence of absent Senators.

Mr. GALLINGER. Pending that motion I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope not.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn, there being on a division—ayes 17, noes 21.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no quorum voting.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, a quorum is not needed on that question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that I hand to the Secretary the names of the Senators who are engaged in committee work on what is known as the lobby investigating committee rather than call out their names, as I wish to explain their absence.

Mr. GALLINGER. No business can be done in the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nothing can be done except to secure the presence of a quorum or to adjourn.

Mr. LEWIS. Is it determined that there is no quorum present?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no quorum present.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. WEEKS, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. OLIVER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. OLIVER. I call for a division.

The Senate refused to adjourn, there being, on a division—ayes 15, noes 22.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire if a quorum is present?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet.

Mr. STONE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent that the order instructing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators be vacated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the order will be vacated.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to have the motion I made noted as pending, leaving the matter before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was about to appeal to the Senator, inasmuch as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is not present nor the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who occupied the chair when the action was taken, that he allow the matter to go over. I will say to the Senator that I think by a little diplomacy this matter can be arranged so that there will be no trouble to-morrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to say in that connection that the Joint Committee on Printing meets to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, and I have no doubt the whole matter can be disposed of then. That is one reason why I wanted to have the motion to reconsider acted on to-day.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 8 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 22, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 21, 1913.

MINISTER.

Albert G. Schmedemann to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Norway.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Jeremiah Neterer to be United States district judge for the western district of Washington.

POSTMASTERS.

ILLINOIS.

Benjamin F. Neal, Toledo.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 22, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. FLETCHER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LANE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Union, Oreg., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Local Branch No. 61, United National Association of Post Office Clerks, of Portland, Oreg., remonstrating against any change being made in the eight-hour law relative to employees in the postal service, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the petition of Joseph Bernhardt, of Portland, Oreg., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to certain applicants the right to settle upon and purchase from the United States for the sum of $2.50 per acre the land which they applied to purchase from the Oregon & California Railroad Co., should the same be decreed or declared to be forfeited to the United States, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 2801) for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed lands of the public domain.

Mr. JONES. This bill is submitted by the Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash., together with resolutions of the club. It relates to public lands occupied by settlers within the primary or indemnity grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad. I move that the bill and accompanying resolutions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

By Mr. LANE:

A bill (S. 2802) to authorize any farmer or association of farmers, any fruit grower or association of fruit growers, or other person or persons to manufacture, denature, and sell alcohol, and providing penalties for a violation thereof.

Mr. LANE. The bill permits farmers, fruit growers, and others to use the waste produce of their farms, such as vegetables and fruits, for the purpose of making it into denatured alcohol without the restriction of the present law. There are millions of bushels of fruit and vegetables which go to waste in this country, and which farmers are denied the use of, and from which they make no profit, for the reason that the restrictions of the present law are so great they can not take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It seems to me the bill should go to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can go to the Committee on Finance. It will be so referred.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 2803) relating to the syndicating or otherwise supplying to newspapers, magazines, or other periodicals admitted to the privileges of the mail as second-class matter, reading, editorial, illustrative, or other matter, and forbidding the insertion therein of matter specially paid for unless plainly marked "advertisement," and prescribing penalties for the violation of the provisions herein; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 2804) to amend section 87 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2805) granting an increase of pension to Jennie A. Norton (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 2806) relative to the appointment, pay, and rank of chief warrant officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2807) providing for a special study by the Secretary of Agriculture of diseases among sheep and goats and making appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 2808) authorizing negotiations with certain countries regarding the exportation of goats to the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2809) granting an increase of pension to Alfred L. Cain; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 2810) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Nicholls; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 2811) to establish a fish-cultural station on Long Island, in the State of New York; to the Committee on Fisheries.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,000 to make suitable provision for the heirs of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, who was killed at Tampa, Fla., September 20, 1910, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 139, submitted by Mr. FALL on the 19th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government, both for himself and his property.

Mr. FALL. I have no desire, Mr. President, to debate the resolution at all nor to precipitate any discussion upon it. I can not see that there is any necessity for a reference of the resolution. It is short and is easily understood. It was a part of the platform of one of the great parties in the last campaign. It was presumably discussed and understood before the people, and apparently by a large number of them approved, or, at any rate, acquiesced in.

As I said, I do not care to go into a full discussion now nor to precipitate any debate upon the subject. I note, however, that on yesterday the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, was prepared to move the reference of the resolution to that committee. I think no Senator here can have any more respect for or confidence in the ability of the Foreign Relations Committee to handle matters of this kind which are necessary for consideration by a committee before being considered by the Senate than I have, but in view of the history of this resolution I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. BACON. I could not hear a word the Senator said. I do not know whether other Senators were more fortunate or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state to the Senator from New Mexico that the resolution is before the Senate in its regular order.

Mr. FALL. I am informed by those more familiar with the rules than I am that unanimous consent is not necessary for the consideration of the resolution.

My suggestion, if the Senator from Georgia did not hear me, was that the resolution should be passed; that there is no necessity for a reference of it. As to the resolution, it is easily understood. Every Senator here knows exactly what it is, and presumably those on the other side particularly knew exactly and know now precisely what the purpose of it is.

I am sure there will be no objection to the passage of the resolution from this side of the Chamber, and I hope none from the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I am not authorized, however, to speak for the Senators on this side.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say to the Senator that I would not consent to the passage of the resolution at this time. I do not know exactly how far the resolution goes. It seems to me to be a most important one.

As I understand the resolution it means about this: That if some person is not satisfied with conditions in the United States and wants to go to a foreign country and engage in business and gets into trouble there, he can embroil in war all the people of the United States by an attempt to protect him and his property. I am not in favor of the policy if that is the effect of the resolution. I would not want to consent to its passage at this time without consideration. It should be considered most carefully.

Mr. FALL. I understand the effect of the resolution to be this: At least one of the great parties of the United States stood ready before the last election and said to the people that they propose to follow the time-honored doctrine of this country, as I have always understood it, that where an American citizen, even in a foreign country, was obeying the laws of that country and was legally there in that country, pursuing his daily avocations or his business pursuant to the laws of that country, not at fault himself, he was to be protected to the full extent of the power of this Government to protect him in his property, in his life, and in his liberty. I understand this is a reiteration of that doctrine, and it is with that understanding that I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smoot
Borah	Hollis	Page	Sterling
Brady	James	Perkins	Stone
Brandegee	Johnston, Ala.	Pittman	Sutherland
Bristow	Jones	Poindexter	Swanson
Bryan	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Burton	Kern	Ransdell	Thompson
Catron	Lane	Robinson	Thornton
Chilton	Lea	Saulsbury	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Lewis	Sheppard	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lippitt	Sherman	Vardaman
Colt	Lodge	Shields	Warren
Cummins	McLean	Shively	Weeks
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Williams
Fall	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Works

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the city and is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to state that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] are unavoidably absent from the city. I desire this notice to stand for the remainder of the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered on the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss now, nor do I understand it to be the desire of the Senate that there should be a discussion, as to the question of the correctness or the incorrectness of the proposition contained in the resolution. What may be an abstract and correct statement of a principle it may not be expedient to express and announce without reference to the particular circumstances at the time and without reference to the application which may be sought to be made of it.

A declaration of principle which is correct in itself may, when intended to be applied to a particular situation, require elaboration and amplification. Otherwise the purpose of the declaration may be misunderstood, and an improper construction may be put on the words of the declaration.

Everyone knows, Mr. President, that we are now in a position of very grave responsibility. Everyone knows that there are conditions which make that responsibility to those of us who sit here to-day one to which no man who values his obligation can shut his eyes. In view of the gravity of the present situation I think I may safely say that any enunciation in which it is proposed that there shall be an expression by the Senate affecting the present situation, should be most carefully considered by us under the particular advice of the committee which the Senate has constituted for that purpose with reference to questions of that character.

Words are very serious things at times, and this is one of those times. The words which should be uttered should be carefully considered and weighed. Therefore, Mr. President, without discussing the question at all as to whether or not this resolution enunciates the truth, or whether there ought to be an expression of the truth at this time, I respectfully say that the resolution should be considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. LODGE. What portion of the resolution—I have not a copy of it before me—is it that the Senator from Georgia thinks is incorrect or wrongly stated?

Mr. BACON. Has the Senator understood me to suggest that there was any part of the resolution that was incorrect or wrongly stated?

Mr. LODGE. I am trying to find out.

Mr. BACON. Well, if the Senator had listened he would have heard that I had expressly stated to the contrary.

Mr. LODGE. I listened to every word the Senator said.

Mr. BACON. I stated expressly that I did not intend to discuss the question whether it was or was not; and I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts heard that.

Mr. LODGE. I did, and I do mean to discuss the resolution. That is just it.

Mr. BACON. Very well. The Senator can proceed, if he chooses to do so.

Mr. LODGE. I want to discuss the resolution, and I am asking what there is in the resolution—I am not now speaking of the expediency of passing it—that is not sound?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am addressing myself solely to the question of expediency, and not to the question as to whether or not there is a correct enunciation of a sound principle.

Mr. President, if we are to consider this question now, of course, there will be consideration as to whether or not the resolution is sufficient in itself or whether it should be added to and amplified in any way. We could not shut our eyes to the fact; we all know what the purpose of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is. The Senator from New Mexico desires that this shall be an enunciation on the part of the Senate of the proposition that the United States Government should by force undertake to redress any wrong which may be recognized as having been committed in Mexico upon American persons or upon American property.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. FALL. I think the Senator from Georgia possibly is considering matters from another standpoint when he attributes to the Senator from New Mexico purposes which the Senator from New Mexico has not expressed on the floor at this time or at any other time. I think that the Senator from Georgia is attributing to the Senator from New Mexico motives possibly to which he certainly has not given utterance with reference to his purpose in introducing the resolution. If the Senator from New Mexico had added a second resolution to this, as under the circumstances he might well have done, authorizing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry out the purposes of the resolution when, in the discretion of the President, such course might be necessary, then the sentiments attributed to the Senator from New Mexico by the Senator from Georgia might have been correct, but so far the Senator from New Mexico has expressed no such sentiments.

Mr. BACON. Well, I may have drawn an incorrect conclusion from the utterances which the Senator from New Mexico has made upon this floor. If so, of course I do not wish to misrepresent him. I had certainly understood from what I have heard the Senator heretofore say that that was substantially his attitude. If it is not, of course I do not wish to attribute anything to him which he does not profess.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator have reference expressly to the speech I made here on July 22 of last year and to the remarks which I made subsequently, and particularly to those made prior to the meeting of the Baltimore convention?

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from New Mexico. I do not know how far he desires me to yield.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Georgia has attributed to the Senator from New Mexico certain purposes in offering this resolution, and he says now that he arrives at the purposes of the Senator from New Mexico by virtue of other expressions which the Senator from New Mexico has made on the floor; and I ask the Senator if those other expressions to which he refers were those made in July of last year and prior to the Baltimore convention.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not recall the exact dates of the speeches with which the Senator from New Mexico has entertained the Senate, and I think I made the proper amende, if such may be needed, when I stated that if I had in my construction of what the Senator had said misrepresented him I did not wish to be understood as insisting upon that construction of his language. I do not know how he could expect me to go further than that. I will say to him very frankly that the general impression which has been made upon myself—I do not know whether or not it has been made upon other Senators—by several utterances of the Senator upon this floor, the dates of which I can not recall, has been to the effect which I have indicated; but I do not wish to misrepresent the Senator, and, of course, I shall not insist upon that if he disclaims it.

But, Mr. President, the Senator purposes to limit the Senate to an expression of this kind at such a time without a consideration as to whether or not there should be, if any expression is made at all, additional expressions in connection with the resolution to prevent any misunderstanding of any declaration now made. I do not know that any resolution on the subject is required. If there is anything of the kind necessary, it seems to me much better that it should be put in a concrete form. This resolution would refer to the Balkan States as well as to Mexico. If the Senator from New Mexico has in view only Mexico in making the utterance, and if the conditions are such as to require any declaration from us, let us have it in a direct, concrete form, where we can meet it and judge of it and weigh it; but the proposition I make is that a matter of this gravity, involving such serious interests and considerations, should not be acted upon by the Senate without a reference to the committee charged particularly with that subject.

I am sorry that my very learned and distinguished and honored colleague upon that committee, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], would so far permit his present attitude of energy—I started to say "bellicose" attitude, but I am afraid the Senator might not relish that word—to lead him astray from what I have always heretofore understood him to be very carefully guarding; that is, the propriety of everything of this kind, before it is considered and passed upon by the Senate, receiving the careful attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that a matter of this kind should not be hurried to the consideration and expression of the Senate without the opportunity for that careful consideration and examination which can not be given by the Senate at large at such a time, and which can only be given by the patient and careful examination which the committee has the opportunity to give to it.

Mr. President, if I stopped to analyze this resolution and to discuss the propriety of its approval from the standpoint of its correctness—I care not whether it is founded on the Democratic platform or upon something else—there might be some very just criticisms made upon it. For instance, what constitutional right has a citizen of the United States in Mexico? What constitutional right has a citizen of the United States in the Balkan States?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BACON. I will yield for a question or a suggestion, but I do not yield now for a speech. The Senator will have his opportunity later.

Mr. FALL. Very well; I will answer the Senator later.

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator for any suggestion he wishes to make.

Mr. FALL. I understood that the Senator had asked a question which I thought in my very feeble way I might be somewhat prepared to answer offhand, but I will answer it in my own time.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not indicate his purpose when he rose. I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall answer now.

Mr. FALL. I think possibly, Mr. President, that it might be better to allow the Senator to conclude his remarks, and then I will have an opportunity to answer.

Mr. BACON. I do not intend, unless the sense of the Senate should indicate that such is its desire, now to enter into an elaborate discussion of this question.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, allow me to disabuse the mind of the Senator of the idea that I want to make a speech. If I want to make a speech, I can make it in my own time and not by interrupting him. Therefore I thought the statement of the Senator that he would yield to me for a question or for a certain purpose, but not for the purpose of making a speech, was a little uncalled for. I will have the opportunity, I presume, of making a speech; but that is not my purpose. The Senator asks what constitutional right has an American citizen abroad? I think that has been decided so often that the question easily answers itself.

Mr. BACON. I did not have even a remote allusion to the Senator in the suggestion I made, to which he is replying with so much heat. I was speaking about myself, and not about him. It had been suggested that something might be said after I finished my speech, and I simply said I did not propose to make a speech. I do not know that that utterance should give any particular offense to anybody or excite any particular feeling. That is all I meant.

Mr. FALL. Allow me to assure the Senator from Georgia that the Senator from New Mexico has taken no offense and has not imagined that any offense was intended at all; but the Senator's words were that he would yield to the Senator from New Mexico for certain purposes, but not for the purpose of making a speech. The Senator from New Mexico did not interrupt for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection whatever to that, Mr. President. The Senator went on, then, to say that he would speak after I had finished my speech. I simply meant to say that I did not intend to make any speech at this time. I do not know why it was necessary to recur to what had previously occurred and take up unnecessarily the time of the Senate upon such a matter as that.

I do not propose at this time, Mr. President, to go into an elaborate discussion of this question. I do not think it is the proper time for it. I say that, if this is a matter recognized by the Senate as one which should now have the consideration of the Senate, it should come to the Senate in a proper form after consideration by the committee charged with that work. Therefore I do not propose now to discuss the resolution unless it is developed, as I have said, to be the sense of the Senate that it should be now discussed; and, Mr. President, if it is now to be discussed, I shall insist that the resolution shall be put in a shape to relate to that which doubtless the Senator had in his mind when he introduced the resolution. The Senator did not have the Balkan States in his mind, although there is a war over there, nor did he have in his mind any other country in which war might break out to-morrow. Every Senator will recognize that the Senator had Mexico in his mind; and if we are going to pass a resolution which is intended to apply to Mexico, let us be honest and put it in shape to mean exactly what it says and to say what it means, and not by indirection or by general expression seek to commit the Senate to the declaration of a principle the application of which is intended for a particular purpose, and not for a general purpose.

Mr. President, I will not move to lay this resolution on the table, because the Senator has given notice that he desires to say something and I have no desire to cut him off; but I do say that, if the temper of the Senate is such that they think the matter should be considered, I desire that it shall go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and if such is not the desire of the Senate, then we might end it in another way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had no intention of being "bellicose" in the question I asked, nor am I aware that I have opposed the reference of this resolution to the committee; but I had a curiosity to know just what there was in it which was objectionable. It now appears that there is some fault to be found with the phraseology and the use of the word "constitutional."

I take it that the American citizen's constitutional rights go with him to the border, but when it comes to his constitutional rights going with him throughout the world, I should personally have phrased it differently; I think I should have been inclined simply to say "the rights of American citizens." However, I have no desire to discuss this resolution on that particular point. It is taken from the Democratic platform, which I understood was in large measure prepared by the present Secretary of State and by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is entirely capable of defending his own phraseology from every point of view if he happens to be responsible for it.

The intent of the first sentence of the resolution is plain enough. It is that the rights of American citizens, constitutional on the border and international in the rest of the world, should protect them. I for one am not ready to vote against that proposition. I think it is perfectly sound. The other statement is that every American citizen is entitled to full protection in a foreign country, both for himself and his property. I take it that is an equally sound proposition, and I should be sorry to vote against it, because I think the American citizen abroad is possessed of all the rights that are given him by treaties and by international law and is entitled to the protection which is given him by the law of nations. I can not conceive why anybody should want to question that.

Those are the two general propositions. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] doubts the expediency of dealing with the matter at this time. I am not speaking of the reference, which is one method of dealing with it. That which I speak of now is the substance of the resolution, and I wish to call attention to the fact that in the same platform from which these words are taken there is also this statement:

> Our platform is one of principles which we believe to be essential to our national welfare. Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign.

Mr. President, is it possible that we can not consider and, if necessary, act upon two abstract principles like these, because those very principles are now being violated in a neighboring country? It seems to me that would be an unfortunate attitude to take at this time.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. BACON. Of course, there is always latitude of construction in any language which may be used. In view of the application which is doubtless in the minds of all Senators when we are called upon to pass upon this resolution, in the expression—

> And every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government, both for himself and his property—

I want to ask the Senator if he would understand that to mean that if an American citizen 200 miles from the border, or 500 miles from the border, had property which he had purchased there, he himself bearing the management and control of it, and there should be an outrage committed upon that property and the American citizen, if you please, should be imprisoned, does the Senator understand that to mean that it would be the duty of the United States Government, if this proposition is recognized as a correct one, to send an armed force to liberate him?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not, Mr. President. Those principles do not commit us to war.

Mr. BACON. That not being the case, the Senator at once is brought to confront the fact that in giving utterance to a principle of that kind, in view of the present conditions, we should give utterance to it in such a way as not to commit us to something to which the Senator himself says he would not agree.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if I may "butt in"——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LODGE. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. STONE. If an American citizen were imprisoned in a foreign country and despoiled of his property, and if he could not be speedily released by diplomatic intervention through peaceable means, I for one would be willing to send an armed force into the country to take care of him.

Mr. BACON. There are too many "ifs" in what the Senator proposes, though.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when I replied to the Senator from Georgia he asked if that meant sending down an army. It does not, in my opinion, for there are many steps which precede the use of military force. There are, in the first place, the usual diplomatic methods of enforcing our rights, which, of course, must be exhausted before further steps are taken. If such occurrences have existed in Mexico as have been referred to by the Senator from Missouri, it is our duty to put into operation every recognized engine of diplomacy for the protection and rescue of any American citizen under such circumstances.

No doubt a point can be reached where a nation so maltreats, outrages, wrongs, and possibly kills the citizens of another nation that if diplomatic methods fail the only resort is to armed force. We are not, perhaps, in that situation to-day. I trust and believe we are not. But, setting aside the question of the wording of these propositions—which, even if they might be better phrased, are perfectly clear in their intent—I think the announcement to this country and to Mexico that we will not pass a declaration of general principles of this sort is a very serious thing to do.

The resolution is here. We can not escape it. We must act upon it. To fail to act upon the resolution, or to lay it on the table, or to reject it, would be practically equivalent to saying that we are not prepared to protect our citizens in Mexico. Therefore it is not a question which can be brushed aside as an unimportant declaration of general principles upon which it is not expedient at this moment to act.

To my mind it would be a very serious thing for the Senate to refuse to take proper action upon the principles set forth in the resolution and proposed for our action. It can not be that we have reached the point where we are unable or unwilling or afraid to affirm general propositions of this kind, which have nothing to do with war, of course, but are simply abstract declarations of the right and the duty of the Nation to protect its citizens abroad. It may not be necessary to make such declaration in a resolution; but the resolution is here, requiring action, and I think proper action should be taken upon it.

Of course I have no objection to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I think that is the proper course. But I do not think the resolution should be lightly dismissed, because negative action will be much more serious than affirmative action upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the resolution is to be passed it ought to be amended. It reads:

> That the constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders, and go with them throughout the world.

The Constitution of the United States can not go with any American citizen throughout the world. It stops at the border. It does not make any difference who worded the resolution originally, or whether it was in a Democratic platform or not. That is a mere ad hominem crumb. It is absurd for any legislative body to make the assertion that the constitutional rights of its citizens exist upon the territory of foreign countries. What was meant, I suppose, was that the constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders, and that their rights under the law of nations should go with them throughout the world.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word more. Farther on it reads:

> And every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government.

That also is not sound international law. I suppose what was meant was must be given the full protection of the law of nations by the United States Government.

If the resolution were amended so as to read in that way, it would be only an abstraction. It would be the utterance of a truth which nobody would dispute anywhere, at any time. But I differ with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] when he draws the conclusion that because it is an abstraction it might be useless. I think it would be a very good thing to strengthen the arm of the Secretary of State with a resolution of this sort at this time, properly amended.

I do not think we need make ourselves absurd in the wording of the resolution, however, simply because somebody else, somewhere else, worded it wrongly at the beginning. The persons who chose this language were not considering then the delicate international question involved. They were considering simply the appearance of the thing to the American people. The adjective "constitutional" has become so constantly a prefix of the word "rights" that I suppose it slips in by force of habit of thought.

I think that to utter an abstract truth of this sort, which no nation can dispute, which no lawyer can dispute, which no American would dispute, and send it out as a resolution of the United States Senate, would be the greatest possible aid that we could give to our diplomatic forces in wrestling with the problem at our southern border; and all the more so because it is worded in such phraseology that it may apply to anybody, anywhere, as well as to Mexico and the forces operating there.

I agree with both the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that before the resolution passes the Senate it would be well for it to be considered in the Committee on Foreign Relations. My chief reason for desiring it to be considered there is that it may come back properly and accurately worded, in such a way that we may for all time stand by it as an accurate and correct expression of the abstract principle involved.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, if there is an amusing feature to the discussions that are heard from time to time on the floor of this Chamber, it is caused by the dogmatic utterances which sometimes mark the expressions of individual Senators.

A nice appreciation of the correct use of language should indicate to the mind of any observing Senator that the use of the adjective "constitutional" before the word "rights" in the first line of the resolution is quite proper, and is not subject to the criticism even of the purist in speech.

There are various rights of an American citizen. There are private rights, personal rights, statutory rights, and beyond all of them, and far more important than the rest, are the constitutional rights, the fundamental rights upon which American citizenship is based.

Reference is made to the thought that the constitutional rights of American citizens do not extend beyond the borders of the United States. I am astonished that such a statement should be uttered by any occupant of a chair in this Chamber. In every treaty made by the United States Government with a foreign power there are provisions guaranteeing to the citizens of the United States in the territory of that power the same rights that they enjoy in their own territory. Moreover, by express language in our Constitution, every treaty made with a foreign power becomes the supreme law of the land.

When the declaration embraced in the resolution was made, it was intended to emphasize the attitude of the United States, if it found enactment in our laws, that these fundamental, constitutional rights of citizens of the United States should attach to their persons and their property in every part of the world.

As for myself, I am prepared to vote for the passage of the resolution now. I doubt whether there is a Senator upon this side who would hesitate to vote for its adoption. Yet very properly the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has called the attention of his colleagues to the eminent propriety of observing the precedent, which has rarely been disregarded, of submitting the resolution to the appropriate committee—the Committee on Foreign Relations—because it does touch the question of our right with foreign powers under our treaty engagements.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in connection with what has just been said, three plain instances, I think, will furnish a complete reply.

The Constitution of the United States gives to every citizen of the United States the right to bear arms. Nobody would contend that that sort of a constitutional right accompanied an American citizen in France or Germany. The Constitution of the United States gives to every American citizen the right to resort to the writ of habeas corpus. It gives to every American citizen the right to be tried by a jury. Those are constitutional rights. Nobody would contend that either one of them would exist in a country which had neither habeas corpus nor trial by jury. All that America could claim for her citizen in such a country would be that he should be tried fairly by the laws of the land in which he was alleged to have committed the crime.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the declaration in the pending resolution touches a subject that has given me a great deal of concern. A great many of the citizens of California are in Mexico. Many of them have lost their property; some of them have lost their lives; and still others of them are imprisoned in that country, I think, without right or warrant of law.

The question is, By what means should this Government protect them? We can not conceal from ourselves the fact that the resolution is directed to the relations of this country with the Republic of Mexico. The country will so accept it. Foreign countries will so look upon it. Are we prepared to declare at this time, as set forth in the resolution, that this Government should give full protection to its citizens in Mexico, both for themselves and for their property? What is meant in the resolution by "full protection"? It must necessarily mean that if at this moment our citizens in that country can not be protected by diplomatic means, we should go to war to protect them.

This question has been presented to me at various times personally by people who are suffering under the conditions that exist in Mexico. They are insisting, a good many of them, that this country should resort at once to intervention for their protection. That may be so. We may have reached a condition where it is absolutely necessary for us to take that step in order to protect the citizens of this country in Mexico. But I submit, Mr. President, that before we make a declaration on the part of the Senate of the United States to that effect we should consider this resolution or any declaration that we propose to make seriously and carefully before going to that extent.

So far as the resolution simply declares a principle it is unobjectionable. Everyone recognizes the fact that it is the duty of this country to protect its citizens abroad as well as at home. I am not disposed to cavil about the use of language or to split hairs with respect to it. It does not make very much difference whether the right of an American citizen in another country is a constitutional right or some other kind of a right. His Government, of course, should protect him in his rights, whatever they may be.

I do not agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] that the Constitution of this country extends beyond its borders or that the rights he is talking about are constitutional rights.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I fear the Senator from California did not honor me with his attention when I was attempting to express some views a moment ago. I never declared, I never meant, that the Constitution extends beyond the domain and the frontier of our own country except indirectly by treaty engagements, where the principles of the Constitution, so far as they affect the citizen, are guaranteed to him in the various countries with which this country has negotiated treaties.

Mr. WORKS. Then, Mr. President, the right on the part of an American citizen as it exists in another country is not a constitutional right; it is a treaty right guaranteed to him not by the Constitution but by the treaty with another country, and that may, by virtue of the language of the treaty itself, protect him in his constitutional rights as he would enjoy them at home.

I agree with the Senator from Georgia that the resolution should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that it should be considered deliberately and carefully before making any declaration on this subject. If it involved simply the matter of making this declaration as a matter of principle, we could do it without any hesitation; but if it is a declaration of principle that is to affect our relations with the Republic of Mexico, that is quite another thing, and it would undoubtedly be construed in that way.

Therefore I am not in favor of action upon the resolution now or hastily, but should very much prefer to see it go to the appropriate committee.

Mr. FALL. It is rather singular to me, Mr. President, that there should arise any discussion at all upon the adoption by the United States Senate, and the immediate adoption, of this resolution.

Words have been put in the mouth of the Senator from New Mexico, Mr. President, on more than one occasion in the Senate with reference to the discussion of foreign affairs, particularly relative to the conditions in Mexico. On the first occasion when the Senator from New Mexico undertook to call the attention of the Senate to the conditions existing in Mexico he endeavored to impress upon the Congress of the United States that unless some strong policy was declared and preparations made if necessary to carry it out by this country with reference to Mexico or any other country on this continent in the condition of Mexico, this country would eventually be dragged into a war.

The sole purpose of the Senator from New Mexico from the first word that he has uttered in this Chamber down to the present time has been to prevent war with Mexico. Every effort of the Senator from New Mexico with the last administration was to urge upon it the necessity of realizing the conditions in Mexico and of taking such action as, in the judgment of the Senator from New Mexico, would prevent war.

This matter has been allowed to drag along, until now we are told the situation is so delicate that we should not make a declaration of this broad principle which has been recognized as the American policy, and, as applied to individuals, to a certain extent setting forth the constitutional right of every citizen of this country.

The Senator from New Mexico is not responsible for the conditions in Mexico. It is delay, reference to a committee, failure to report back by the committee, failure of the administration to act when action was necessary, failure of the administration to carry out its warnings to the people of this foreign country which are responsible for the conditions which now exist in Mexico, and continued failure is going to result in what you, gentlemen, know will come about.

This is a Republic. It is not a centralized Government, where the people act through one man. We hesitate as a Republic, and rightfully so; we hesitate more than any other nation on the globe to protect our citizens because of the fear that we may bring on war. We hesitate to protect them in their rights to property and in their treaty rights, and a treaty by the Constitution is made the supreme law of the land. We hesitate, and, as I said, rightfully so and naturally so, because this is a Republic. Finally we are aroused. How? By some great disaster like the blowing up of the Maine; and then we are aroused to such an extent that instead of mediation, instead of interposition, instead of intervention quietly, with the entire armed force of the United States the people of this great Nation, being aroused, pursue the enemy to the uttermost corner of the earth and carry on a war—a war for civilization.

It is in your power, and it has been in the power of the last administration and the power of this administration up to the present time, to prevent war. It is not just or politic for any administration to say to foreigners or contending factions threatening battle or disturbance along our border that "you must not fire a shot into American territory nor injure anyone upon this side of the line," placing our armed forces in a position to enforce this warning; and when the injunction is violated and we are defied, our territorial rights invaded, and our citizens killed as in Agua Prisbo and El Paso, fail entirely to punish such outrage and direct defiance of our order.

Strong action taken two years ago would have prevented war. The demand of Mr. Madero for proper assurances to this country that he was able to and would protect the rights of American citizens, which proper assurances could have been demanded then, would have prevented war. A determined policy on the part of this Government at any time during the last two years in dealing with these conditions would have prevented war. The protection of American citizens who were killed or who have been held for ransom on the border, such protection being extended through the armed forces, if absolutely necessary, would have prevented war instead of precipitating war.

But the policy of the last administration and, so far of this administration, the policy of the Congress of the United States, has been to delay, with the hope that something might happen to avoid the necessity of the United States, declaring that they would protect American citizens wherever they were.

Mr. President, I am a little bit astonished at the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] advancing the argument he has made here as to constitutional rights. Of course, the Constitution of the United States declares inalienable the right of American citizens to bear arms. Still we know perfectly well that means that the right to bear arms is subject to local rules and regulations in every State or in every municipality of the Union.

I call his attention to the fact that the constitutional rights of American citizens to protection, and not through the courts of Mexico, has been passed upon by this country. In what are known as the Laffragua letters every argument which the ingenuity of the Senator from Mississippi and of his colleague from Georgia or any distinguished gentleman on the other side could use upon this subject was used, and was used, if they will permit me to say, with the same ingenuity that they might advance. It was the same argument used by Mr. Laffragua, the minister of foreign affairs of the Mexican Republic and afterwards minister to this country. The right of the Mexican Government to force American citizens into the local courts, under the treaty of 1831, which is yet in force for the protection of American citizens in Mexico, was insisted upon by Laffragua, was fully passed upon, and it was decided by this Government that conditions changed, and that, although the general rule was as stated, this general rule only applied during times of peace and to peaceable conditions, and not when conditions were such as exist at the present time; that under such conditions American citizens would not be expected to appeal or submit first to local tribunals, but would receive directly the assistance and protection of their Government and not be relegated to a miserable Mexican court to try out his rights.

Now, Mr. President, so much for this general argument. In 1860 the great Democratic Party went on record before the people of the United States in almost identical language with that which is now embraced in the resolution:

> Resolved, That it is the duty of the United States to afford ample and complete protection to all its citizens, whether at home or abroad and whether native or foreign.

Mr. President, there has been a time when I myself took great pride in the fact that the Democratic Party of the United States stood for American citizenship at home and abroad. I want to say as an American citizen that I am yet proud of the fact that in its last convention the Democratic Party, presumably after due consideration, in as full knowledge of conditions in New Mexico as is possessed by the Senator from Georgia or any other Senator, because those conditions existed then, and with the conditions in Mexico in view and not the conditions in the Balkans, adopted exactly this plank in your platform. But I say that it applies to American citizens in the Balkans, as we have before this made it apply to them in Armenia and in other countries of the world.

It is not only in Mexico, Mr. President, that this country has interposed by its armed forces by the authority of the Congress of the United States and without such direct authority to protect American citizens in their property rights and to protect their lives and their liberty. Hundreds of cases can be referred to in which the United States has gone into foreign countries with its armed forces and with its ships of war and there demanded, and has committed acts of war in, the protection of the property and the rights of its citizens.

Now, the Senator from Georgia undertakes to put words into my mouth. I call his attention to the speech which I made in the Senate on April 22. At that time the Senator sought to put me in the position of seeking to bring on war, a war for filthy lucre, by stating that he would not agree, as he intimated that I desired, to send the armed forces of the United States into the Republic of Mexico for the protection of the dollars of those citizens who had gone across there.

My reply was then:

> If I intimated that an army should be sent into Mexico for any purpose, I do not recall it. The Senator has stated that if I want to know whether he is willing to send an army down to Mexico to secure these damages he wanted me to understand he was not. I say with perfect and equal frankness to the Senator that if it becomes necessary to protect one American citizen in Mexico or anywhere else to send 200,000 men there to do it, I am in favor of sending American troops there to do it, not to collect a dollar, but to protect an American citizen, wherever he may be.

I called his attention then and I call the attention of the Senate of the United States again, and I call the attention of the Secretary of State of this great United States again to the fact that Americans in Mexico are not mere adventurers who have gone across the line to make a few dollars from Mexico and bring them back. It is not alone for the protection of property rights of the American citizens that those of us who understand the conditions have asked this Government to make declaration of its policy at least through this high lawmaking body.

Five thousand American citizens, Mr. President, many with children born on Mexican soil, making homes there under concessions by which the Mexican Government guaranteed to them their American citizenship and like citizenship of their children born in Mexico, with protection of lives and property, of their little farms and homes—American citizens living in Mexico, who drove out the Apaches from the Sierra Madre where no Mexican dared to go, have been thrown out, their houses burned to the ground, themselves driven at the muzzle of rifles from the Mexican Republic, and no redress has been asked or offered. The Senate of the United States has passed two resolutions providing funds to remove these people from the danger zone and to provide for their temporary needs until they could obtain employment on this side of the line, where they sought refuge, with the accumulations of a lifetime taken from them by armed banditti without protest from this Government.

A year ago the Senate passed a resolution, concurred in by the House, appropriating $20,000 to pay the expenses of sending trains down there to get these people out of Mexico, and a few days later it passed a bill appropriating $100,000 to support them until they could obtain work with which to support themselves. These were American citizens. Let me repeat that their children, although born on Mexican soil, under the laws and concessions of the Mexican Government have all the rights of American citizens. It is not only the capitalist who has gone across the border for the purpose of "mulcting" Mexico that is appealing for protection.

Mr. President, the United States has developed Mexico. Citizens of the United States have built practically every street railroad, every electric line, every power-transmission line, and practically all the railroads. They have developed the mines and have now invested in Mexico one hundred times as much in productive property as the Mexicans themselves have, and all that is asked is that the Senate of the United States shall reannounce the American doctrine that an American citizen behaving himself in a foreign country is entitled to the protection of his Government.

Mr. President, the writers on national law are those I think whom our forefathers followed and whom our statesmen have generally followed in expounding the American doctrine. We have not followed the writers on civil law, but rather our statesmen have founded their doctrine upon those laid down by Vattel and Grotius and the other writers, and I hope they will continue to build upon that foundation.

Mr. President, when this country becomes so thoroughly commercialized, so thoroughly selfish within its own borders, that it will not render absolute protection by its armed forces, if necessary, to its American citizens abroad, then I ask you what will be the spectacle if this United States of ours were in a great war with some country which was our equal or our superior?

One of the axioms of the old law writers is that the prince is entitled to the loyalty of his subject wherever that subject may be. Even if in the remotest corner of the earth, when the subject hears that his prince is in danger he is supposed to hasten home and to offer his sovereign his life in defense of the liberty or life or the property or the rights of that sovereign. And conversely it is true that a citizen of this country wherever he may be—in Russia, or in Japan, or in China, or in Nicaragua, or in Mexico—has a constitutional right, because this is a Republic founded upon a Constitution—has a constitutional right to rely upon his sovereign, his Government, for protection.

This Republic of ours is and should be responsible for the protection of the citizen where he stands, obeying the local laws of the land, and I tell you, Mr. President, that when any country grows so weak that it will not extend that ultimate protection to that citizen, the days of that republic or that country are numbered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to ask the Senator practically the same question I asked the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator insists upon the right of a citizen in Mexico to protection by this Government. I have been unfortunate in misunderstanding him in the past, and therefore I ask the question now, Does the Senator contend under that proposition that if an outrage is committed upon a citizen of the United States, say 500 miles in the interior of Mexico, and he is imprisoned, the duty of protection devolves upon this Government, the duty to send an armed force for his release?

Mr. FALL. If such armed force is necessary for his release, if no other method will secure his release, he is entitled to the assistance of the last citizen of the United States to release him.

Mr. BACON. Then, as I understand the Senator from New Mexico, his proposition is this: The Senator states that there have been a great many of these outrages, a great many instances in which citizens have been imprisoned, a great many instances in which their property has been destroyed, and the Senator says that so far our diplomatic efforts in the direction of redress and protection have failed. Does the Senator mean from that to deduce the conclusion as now the position occupied by him that it is the duty of this Government to send armed troops into Mexico for the purpose of liberating those men and for the purpose of getting redress for the property thus destroyed?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Georgia reminds me of that of one of the greatest lawyers that we ever knew of in our southwestern country, of whom it was often said that if you would grant his premise, you must give him the decision. In the first place, the Senator from New Mexico has not said that the diplomatic efforts of the United States Government to avoid the present conditions have failed.

Mr. LODGE. They have never been attempted.

Mr. FALL. They have not been attempted. Nothing has been done to protect American citizens in Mexico.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico makes that statement very broadly, and for me to permit it to pass unchallenged might be construed as consent to its accuracy. I am very certain that the Senator is absolutely without warrant in making that statement, if there is any truth in men. I know not only has there been under the present administration, but that under the past administration there was the most constant effort made through our consular officers and through our diplomatic officers for the purpose of securing protection for our citizens there and for the purpose, so far as it was reasonable and practicable, of securing redress. Of course everybody will recognize the fact that in the disturbed condition of affairs in Mexico, with their people rent in twain, with one part of the country under the domination of one faction and another part of the country under the domination of another faction, they were not in a condition then to furnish the money to repay the millions and millions of dollars which would be necessary to recompense for the destruction of property; but it is a fact, and I assert it as a fact on this floor upon the faith of the truth of statements made to me by officers of the Department of State in the last administration and by officers of the Department of State in the present administration, that there have been such efforts continuous and unceasing.

They may not have availed; but it is not true, Mr. President, that the Government of the United States, either under the past administration or under the present administration, has been indifferent to the rights and interests and protection of the lives and property of citizens of the United States in Mexico. I know, not only from general statements made by officers of the State Department of the past administration to me and to other Senators, but also by statements made to me by officers of the State Department of the present administration, as to these general efforts, but I know in particular instances, Mr. President, where citizens of my own State are in that country and where they have business enterprises that numerous times, in response to my appeal, both in the past administration and in the present administration, efforts have been made to insure the safety of the persons of those people—I say "those people"; I mean our citizens—and to provide, as far as possible, for the protection of their property. So when the Senator from New Mexico gets up here and makes the statement to go out to the world that there has been no effort made through diplomatic measures to protect the persons and property of our citizens, it must be denied, Mr. President, and the Senator must be put upon his proof.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I might reply by suggesting——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FALL. I will in just one moment. I might reply by suggesting to the Senator from Georgia that if he were put upon his proof there might be a tale involved of the efforts in behalf of citizens of his own State which I think would corroborate what I have said to some extent. One of them was in this city recently. He was here with a delegation of some 15 men making representations to the State Department. I think the Senator is aware of that fact. I have a letter from that constituent or client of the Senator, as well as having had a conversation with him.

Possibly, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from New Mexico do not agree as to what a "diplomatic effort" or a "necessary effort" might be. We are so far apart, apparently, in our ideas upon this subject that it seems impossible for the Senator from Georgia to understand the Senator from New Mexico, although, in the opinion of the Senator from New Mexico, his language is not ornate, but is usually plain.

Mr. President, I am aware of the fact that on more than one occasion where, for instance, as in Madera, within the last day or two, Americans were surrounded by a lot of bandits and threatened with being wiped out, the department here has cabled to the City of Mexico, 1,200 miles south of Madera, with all the railroads blown out between Madera and the City of Mexico, with three-fourths of that great country, as the State Department knows, in the hands of the insurgents—they have cabled to the City of Mexico representing to them that Americans were in danger in Madera and asking them to use efforts, if possible, to secure the liberty of those Americans so endangered. Mr. President, I myself have some documents directly from the State Department, and the efforts of the State Department in the last administration and in this administration have been along those lines entirely, along the lines of making representations to the Government in the City of Mexico.

The great trouble is that apparently some of our Senators, who should be most thoroughly informed, seem to think that the City of Mexico is Mexico, and that all you have to do is to appeal to whomsoever happens to be temporarily in command in the City of Mexico, however unable we may know him to be to afford protection, even granting that he desired to do so, and to rest content, and say that we have exhausted the efforts of diplomacy and have done all that we could do to secure the protection of American citizens. Mr. President, I do not agree that that is the ultimate end even of diplomatic effort.

Now, I want to say one other thing. I have noticed within the last week one occasion in which it was reported in the newspapers that the Secretary of State called upon the Secretary of War to communicate with Col. Brewer along the Texas border, and through him to demand of the insurrectionists the release of certain Americans. I hope, Mr. President, that this newspaper story is absolutely true.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. BACON. Just in that connection I wish merely to say that my information has not been in accord with that now stated by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], to the effect that the efforts of the American Government through the Department of State, either in the former administration or the present administration, have been limited to representations made at the City of Mexico, as suggested by the Senator; but from matters that came within my personal knowledge, aside from general statements, I know that efforts have been repeatedly made through our consuls to try to deal with whatever force was then the active militant force in the particular neighborhood and try to secure protection for our people.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. On the matter of consuls, I will say that I know the consuls have been so treated in connection with their dispatches here, or were last winter—I do not know how it is now—that they were afraid to exert themselves. They did not think that zeal and energy would be rewarded or recognized by the State Department at Washington; and I have no reason to suppose that that condition has been changed.

Speaking of diplomatic efforts, I certainly want no war; but I do want our international treaty rights exerted to the full through diplomatic channels. I wish to ask the Senator from New Mexico if it is not true that the German minister in Mexico recovered 100,000 marks, or whatever the sum was, and made them pay him 100,000 marks for the murder of a German subject?

Mr. FALL. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. I would like to know if it is not also true that a member of the German legation went before a court-martial and rescued from that court-martial an American citizen who could get no relief from our representatives in Mexico because they were not backed up at home.

Mr. FALL. That was in the City of Mexico. Mr. President, I think I have given some——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I desire to express my gratification at the lively awakening of my friend from Massachusetts on this important subject and to congratulate him. The speech he has made just now is one that appeals much more strongly to my heart than the speech he made about a year ago when this subject was up.

Mr. LODGE. I did not make a speech a year ago on Mexico, although I was against military intervention, Mr. President. I have maintained silence until this time. I had hoped that when a new President and a new Secretary of State came into office they would pursue a different course, and I am disappointed that they have not done so.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I owe an apology to the Senator from Massachusetts for having used the term "bellicose" in connection with himself. I want to say, as my justification, that I have been hearing some such belligerent expressions from him in private conversations of late as those he has now uttered, which caused me to use the adjective, for which probably I ought to apologize to him, but the Senator will recognize now my justification.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from New Mexico will allow me for a moment——

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I only want to say that if it is belligerency to insist that every diplomatic effort shall be put forth for the protection of American citizens, then I am belligerent, and I always have been.

Mr. BACON. I have faith in the statements made to me by present officials of the executive department of this Government that every effort is being made which it is practicable to make now. There is nothing which rests more heavily on the minds of those charged with this duty and this responsibility than the difficulties which are presented by the present situation in Mexico and by the plight of our citizens who are there. But, Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will pardon me—I am afraid I am interrupting him unduly——

Mr. FALL. I should be glad if the Senator would allow me to conclude, unless he desires to continue at this moment; and if he does, of course I yield to him.

Mr. BACON. I merely want to say, with the permission of the Senator from New Mexico, recognizing his courtesy in that regard, that it is a very easy thing to make general statements.

Mr. FALL. I want to say to the Senator, inasmuch as that is apparently in answer to the statements I have made——

Mr. BACON. I am talking of the statements made by the Senator from Massachusetts now.

Mr. FALL. That I will call his attention to enough specific statements, I think, to occupy him a little while, if he will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will just wait a moment, I will give him specific statements right up to within the last day or two, and verify them by the record.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, before I take my seat I desire to say that I had no reference to the statements made by the Senator from New Mexico, not having reference when I used the word "statements" to the question of statements of specific facts. I was speaking about statements of propositions such as the proposition suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I was simply proceeding to speak of the ease with which these propositions can be presented, and how difficult it is to determine upon the specific acts to be performed to carry out these propositions. It is that which I had in mind, and not what the Senator from New Mexico now refers to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FALL. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me——

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from New Mexico if he will allow me a moment of his time to make an inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]?

Mr. FALL. I would be very glad to do so, Mr. President, if——

Mr. LEWIS. May I be permitted to ask the Senator from Massachusetts at what time did the event occur to which he has alluded when some American citizen was deprived of the protection of the American flag and was saved by a German?

Mr. LODGE. I think it was within the last two months. I can not give the exact date, but I can procure it.

Mr. FALL. It was reported by one of the Secret Service men of the United States Government, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. Can the Senator from New Mexico give, approximately, the date?

Mr. FALL. Yes, sir; it happened more than four months ago. The Senator from Massachusetts was mistaken by about two months.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will allow me before he sits down, I should like to state one proposition which I have never seen reversed by the present administration, although it was enunciated by the last administration, to the effect that American citizens injured and shot on American soil should find their redress before Mexican courts.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from New Mexico whether the occurrences to which both he and the Senator from Massachusetts allude have transpired since the present administration came into power?

Mr. FALL. No, sir.

Mr. LEWIS. It was previous to that time?

Mr. FALL. It was.

Mr. LEWIS. Now, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, did the Senator from Massachusetts make a protest to the Republican administration, of which he was a member, against this outrage against which he now raises his voice?

Mr. LODGE. I did not; for the very simple reason that I did not know of it until about six weeks ago. Those matters are not made public.

Mr. LEWIS. Was the Senator from Massachusetts at that time a member of the Foreign Relations Committee under the previous administration?

Mr. LODGE. I was.

Mr. LEWIS. Did he not have an opportunity of obtaining information from the Department of State as to what had transpired?

Mr. LODGE. I did not have information of that case. They did not give it to me.

Mr. LEWIS. Has the Senator from Massachusetts, as a member of this body, taken such information as he now has to the State Department and asked from the present administration relief for the American citizen?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois seems to think this is a question of party. There is no question of party about it. I blame my own party quite as much as I do the Democrats to-day.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Massachusetts is the party to whom I am now alluding. I want to know what that party from Massachusetts did in the matter.

Mr. LODGE. What did I do? I did everything I possibly could. I did not attack the administration then in power and I have not attacked the administration which is now in power.

Mr. LEWIS. I have asked the Senator if, since he became possessed of the knowledge, he has made any appeal to the present administration or to the State Department for the relief of the person to whom he has alluded?

Mr. LODGE. The person to whom I have alluded was already relieved.

Mr. LEWIS. Then there was no cause of complaint.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I ask that the debate be carried on under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. FALL. I must insist that I have the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield the floor to the Senator from New Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico has the floor. The Chair will try to preserve order.

Mr. FALL. As suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] seems to think that in some way this debate is tinged with partisanship or by partisan politics. Mr. President, it is an effort on the part of a Republican Senator here to have the Senate of the United States indorse a plank in the Democratic platform.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has referred to the exhaustive efforts made to protect Americans in Mexico. Now, I will call attention to one case under the last and under this administration.

The present defender of the Federal post at Juarez is a bandit known as Inez Salazar. Salazar upon one occasion took the town of Paral, in Mexico, and there captured an American citizen, Thomas A. J. Fountain. He threatened to shoot him immediately, although he was taken in uniform. The consular agent of the United States at Paral, Mr. J. A. Long, immediately protested and communicated the circumstances to Marion Letcher, from the State of Georgia, the American consul at the city of Chihuahua, the consular agent at Paral being within the district of Chihuahua. The consul, I am glad to say, is one of the few American consuls in the Republic of Mexico who have attempted in any way to protect American citizens. Under instructions the consular agent at Paral informed this man Salazar that Fountain was under the protection of the United States, and that he should not be killed. The next morning he was shot through the head and killed.

In the meantime the action of the consul at Chihuahua had been reported to and partially approved by the Secretary of State. I say "partially," because the Secretary held that the consul's representation that the United States wanted the execution of Mr. Fountain suspended until an investigation should be had was the proper course to pursue.

Fountain was killed. The President of the United States sent a message to Francisco I. Madero, then the President of Mexico, to Pascual Orozco, then in insurrection in the State of Chihuahua, and to Inez Salazar, who at that time was one of Orozco's captains in the field, saying: "These acts must not be repeated. American citizens must be protected; and if you do not protect them the people of the United States will hold you responsible."

A few days since Inez Salazar, with his hands red with the blood of an American citizen, come over to El Paso, Tex., on this soil, where we have 2,500 or 3,000 American soldiers engaged in guarding the Mexican border for the Mexican Government at the expense of the United States. Mr. Salazar went to one of the most prominent hotels in El Paso and remained there. Just before he left he was arrested by a United States commissioner, Mr. Oliver, for violation of the neutrality laws in attempting to smuggle arms across the border. He was released under a $1,000 bond, which he promptly forfeited, stepped across the international line, and is there safe. This was the red-handed murderer whom the American people were going to hold responsible, according to the "diplomatic" statement of the last administration.

The attention of the present State Department was called to the fact that Salazar was across here on American soil, and that the President of the United States had notified him that he would be held responsible. The answer was, "But he said 'the American people,' not 'the American Government.'" That is one of the cases.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to ask him a question, because I really want information.

Mr. FALL. I am trying to impart it, so I will consent to the interruption.

Mr. BACON. I desire to propound this question to the Senator: After that notice had been given by President Taft, and when the man who had committed this undoubted and unquestionable outrage was found on American soil, if the President of the United States had desired to punish him under what law could he have done it?

Mr. FALL. I am not arguing the legal proposition. I am giving the Senator the results of his course, the results that he is trying to bring about, the results that he is demanding shall follow—that we shall pursue pure "diplomacy" and allow our murdered citizens to go unavenged.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator did, as I understood him, criticize the administration for not having carried out its threat. The threat was that if that thing was done the American people would hold this man responsible.

Mr. FALL. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me a second. The Senator criticizes the past administration, not the present one, because when this man appeared upon American soil the threat was not carried out, and the President shielded himself for failing to do so behind the statement that the threat was that the American people, not the American Government, would hold him responsible.

Mr. FALL. I did not mention the President's name in connection with this matter.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no; the Senator did not mention the President's name.

Mr. FALL. I am very sorry that the present occupant of the White House, in my judgment, knows very little about the situation. I believe when he is informed he will possibly follow another course.

Mr. BACON. But I am asking a question, Mr. President, and I hope the Senator will answer it. Suppose that not the President, but the officer of the Government charged with the duty, had desired to punish this man for this red-handed outrage when he was found on American soil, in what way would he have proceeded to do it?

Mr. FALL. This man is the leader of the insurrectionary forces on the opposite side of the river. At the present time there are 284 soldiers from the Mexican side of the river incarcerated at Fort Bliss, within 2 miles of where this man was. He could have been placed with them, where no longer, as a human tiger, could he have sought the blood of American citizens.

Mr. BACON. If the man was found on American soil, and he was to be proceeded against, he must have been proceeded against under some law, either military or civil. I am asking the Senator to point out under what law that could have been done.

Mr. FALL. I am telling the Senator. I say, under the same law under which these other soldiers are held at Fort Bliss as prisoners. They are held there as military prisoners, under military law, which has been invoked in their case.

Mr. BACON. That may have been an omission.

Mr. FALL. I do not propose to go into any discussion with the Senator as to details. In answer to the Senator's challenge to me to do so, I am now citing instances in which diplomacy has not been used, as I claim, or, if used, has failed.

Another instance, Mr. President: Within the last few days the acting American consular agent in the town of Cananea, Mr. Charles L. Montague, was threatened with deportation from the Republic under article 33 of the constitution of Mexico. Mr. Montague, as it happened, is the manager of the bank at Cananea. As the manager of the bank he refused to turn over to a certain constitutionalist official money deposited in his bank belonging to a Huerta sympathizer, who lived at Guaymas, without an order or a check or a draft or the consent of the depositor. At once it was sought by this official to have Mr. Montague deported as a pernicious citizen under the clause of the constitution which I have mentioned.

Article 33 of the Mexican constitution is in direct conflict with the treaty of 1831 between the United States and Mexico, which is in full force and effect, for the protection of American citizens. But without action by the State Department Mr. Caracristi, a citizen of Virginia, has been deported from the City of Mexico without trial, without even being allowed to go before any authority to prove his innocence, without having any question of his guilt raised except by a warrant served upon him, when he was hustled to the train and forced out of Mexico. At the same time Mr. H. H. Dunn, a correspondent for a syndicate of American newspapers, was deported from the City of Mexico, under article 33, without trial. Within the last two or three weeks another reporter for newspapers, a resident of California, was deported from the City of Mexico without trial. In each case the American ambassador was called upon, the American consuls were called upon, the protection of the American Government was called for by these American citizens, and in no instance has the American Government interfered even by making diplomatic representations.

In the Montague case, as it happened, Montague was not only a banker and an American citizen, but he was also acting consular agent of the United States at that point. Upon representations made to the State Department by myself, before a telegram had been received from Consul Simpich, at Nogales, the acting Secretary of State prepared a cablegram to Consul Simpich. That was sent to Simpich, but was changed in some respects to acknowledge the receipt of his cablegram. Simpich is one more American consul who is an American. He is located at Nogales. He is one of the best that we have in the foreign service, in my judgment. Immediately upon the facts being represented to Simpich, he called upon the constitutionalist government of Sonora to protect Montague as an American citizen and as a consular agent. The State Department of the United States approved his telegram in so far as it demanded the protection of a consular agent, but distinctly informed him that in making his representations he must bear in mind the distinction between an American citizen sought to be deported under article 33 of the constitution and an American consular agent.

I say that the American citizen working in the mines of Cananea for his $3 a day is just as much entitled to the protection of this Government as any other American citizen or any acting consular agent of the United States Government in Mexico. A consular agent is not a diplomatic officer. Therefore when some matter comes up with reference to a consular agent it is not a diplomatic question, as it would be with reference to an ambassador, a minister, or an attaché of an embassy or a ministry. The same rule of international law does not apply to a consular agent that applies to a person accredited to a country as a diplomatic agent. A consular agent is no more entitled to the protection of the Government than is a horny-handed American working in the bowels of the earth in the mines of Cananea.

I am glad to say, Mr. President, that other influences were brought to bear which, in conjunction with the representations with reference to his official capacity, have not only secured the release of Mr. Montague, but he is entertained every day as the guest of the men who were seeking to force him out of the country and rob his bank. All that is needed is strong representations, in some instances, and you will secure results. But you will never do it by undertaking to make a distinction, and this result never would have been brought about had that distinction been left in the minds of these people, between a consular officer and an American citizen.

Mr. Montague was protected because these men found that vengeance of another character would seek them; because 200 American citizens in Cananea said to the 50 Mexican soldiers: "Don't you touch Montague; he shall not be deported, neither shall you touch him;" and because there were several thousand good, true American citizens within 40 miles of the border who let it be understood that if Montague were touched Sonora would be an adjunct to some other country than the so-called Republic of Mexico, possibly in a very short time. Representations were made, and they had effect. The diplomatic representations alone, as usual, would, in my judgment, have gone unheeded.

The Senator has asked for specific instances. Mr. President, this debate, as I said in the beginning, has gone very much further than I intended. I thought there should be no argument. I can see absolutely no necessity for the reference of the resolution. Instead of attempting to precipitate trouble, I have invariably yielded here in the Senate to the great wisdom and the long experience of the Senator who is chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Against my judgment I have so far yielded in the past as with reference to the last resolution which I introduced in this body on the 27th day of last month, and as to which the Senator gave me his word that its consideration by the Committee on Foreign Relations should not be delayed. Nothing has been heard from it, Mr. President; yet I know that the Senator, in his great wisdom and from his long experience in foreign affairs, has concluded that that is the better course for the interests of the country generally, "diplomatically speaking." We must always put quotation marks around "diplomatic," and emphasis under it and over it, in dealing with matters here in the United States Senate. I know that it is not because of any desire that the resolution should not be reported back and discussed, but because the Senator believes it best for the interests of the country that the resolution should be retained in the secrecy of the Foreign Relations Committee.

I agreed at that time that the resolution might be referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee. If the Senators on the other side are not ready to reaffirm the policy which they announced, presumably after due consideration, knowing the circumstances as they existed in Mexico at that time as well as they know them now and as they knew them before, presumably meaning what they said when they further declared that this plank should be kept when they were in office, and should not be used merely to catch votes during the campaign; if the Senator still believes that under all the circumstances the resolution should go into the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and there should be amended by striking out the word "constitutional," or putting a comma somewhere in it, I shall not oppose the reference of the resolution. The American people will bring resolutions out of the Foreign Relations Committee before long, and will not submit much longer to a policy which puts a period or a comma between an American citizen and proper protection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. The resolution naturally appeals to anyone, and the recitation of instances which happened in Mexico wherein American citizens were maltreated makes any native-born American citizen feel indignant. As an American citizen and as a Democrat one is in favor of passing almost any kind of a resolution, even though it be a bit incendiary under the circumstances and in the heat of excitement. But there is a history back of this, lying deeper and farther, which rises up to annoy me as I listen to the discussion.

I quite agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the general statement that the power of the Government should accompany American citizens in all foreign countries is proper if it is perfectly worded, and we are all in favor of it. We have heard from the Senator from New Mexico recitals of incidents of injustice which have been practiced upon American citizens in a few cases.

A number of years ago I was down upon the northern border of Mexico, and I accompanied a gentleman who was engaged in mining over in the very little place the Senator speaks of now—Cananea. He recited to me, as an evidence of his great skill in acquiring the goods of this world, how he got into possession of copper-mining and other property in that country. He stated that he had been aided in getting hold of large possessions in that country by using undue financial influence with the Government; that by that means citizens of this country were acquiring large tracts of immensely valuable properties in Mexico, not by virtue of any such laws as we have in this country, but by bribery of officials and chicanery and skullduggery, if you please; and having gained possession at a very low rate, for 5 or 10 cents an acre, the land was afterwards sold for $20 and $30 an acre. Thus they were enabled to make a great deal of money, and——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the morning hour has expired, and——

Mr. LANE. I should like to say a little more about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, for the purpose of taking a vote on the resolution that has been under discussion, I am willing to lay the unfinished business aside, and also to enable the Senator who had the floor to finish his remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object, Mr. President. Let the regular order be proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection on the part of the Senator from New Hampshire.

PRINTING OF MAP IN RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. A motion was entered yesterday to reconsider the vote by which an order was made directing the printing of a map in the speech of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. That motion is still pending. I wish to understand what its status is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that a vote on the motion to reconsider is in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is in order now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. While I am not going to be captious about the regular order, the unfinished business is before the Senate and can not be interrupted by any proposition of that kind.

Mr. SIMMONS. Without a motion to lay aside the unfinished business, I do not see how it would be possible for anything else to take precedence of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he would not allow the unfinished business to be laid aside long enough to take a vote on that question, because it is a matter which properly comes up to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. If it is a mere matter of taking a vote, unless there is some objection to it, I will consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from North Carolina has served notice on me two or three times that he is going to insist on the tariff bill being considered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and I am insisting on it; but I understand that this is a matter connected with a speech of one of the Senators on the tariff bill, and he is withholding his remarks until the question can be settled.

Mr. GALLINGER. I insist upon the regular order being proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was under the impression that without any objection a vote could be taken on the question to reconsider. There being objection, the regular order is the consideration of what is known as the tariff bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I understand that the motion to reconsider will go over until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Until the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. At the conclusion of the routine business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. During the morning hour to-morrow the motion to reconsider will be in order.

STABLE MONEY (S. DOC. NO. 135).

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] asked permission on the 19th instant to have a document printed and leave was granted by unanimous consent. There are certain illustrations which go with the document, and he failed to include in his request the illustrations accompanying it. For that reason the matter is being held up. I ask unanimous consent that the illustrations accompanying the document be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator from Florida to ask that certain illustrations should be printed in a document by consent of the Senate, or printed in the RECORD?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not in the RECORD, but printed in a document offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. GALLINGER. By consent of the Senate?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Without reference to the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Oregon obtained unanimous consent to have the document printed, but failed to include the accompanying illustrations. I am now simply adding that as a part of his request.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply wanted to express my gratification that the Senate can order illustrations printed without a reference of the question to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. FLETCHER. I never questioned that in reference to a Senate document.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is right.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is quite different in its application to the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Simply because the Joint Committee on Printing has made a rule that there is a difference, that is all.

Mr. FLETCHER. It made no rule with reference to documents, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

MEATS AND CATTLE ON THE FREE LIST.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the provisions of the House bill to admit meat, hides, wool, and so forth, free, while imposing a duty on cattle and certain other live stock, were so clearly an attempt to deceive the farmers that the majority party in the Senate is to be congratulated for seeking to make the provisions more consistent. In doing this they have, however, added to the injury already provided for by the House, and instead of making meats, and so forth, dutiable the bill now adds live stock to the free list. With meats free it will help concentrate the control of those products in the hands of what are known as the beef barons and will help kill off small dealers and throttle competition. The expense of feeding and the shrinkage of carcass are eliminated in transporting beef, hence a large corporation with facilities for importing dressed beef can save a good deal in labor, feeding, and so forth. When no duty is imposed it will be a discrimination against the farmer and others raising live stock in this country. But if meat, and so forth, is to be admitted free it is better that the deception should be done away with and live stock also allowed to come in free. Eighty-five per cent of the corn raised in this country is used for live stock. The importation of meats and of live cattle will give a tremendous advantage to Canada, Mexico, Argentina, and other such countries, at the expense of the American producer. It will strengthen the grip of the large packer, and will not in any probability reduce the cost of meats a particle to the consumer.

THE VAST CEMENT INDUSTRY SHAMEFULLY TREATED.

The House reduced the duty on Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic cements from specific rates equivalent to 21.32 per cent to 5 per cent ad valorem, and even this 5 per cent has been cut off in the bill now before the Senate. The cement industry is one of the great mineral industries of the United States of the nonmetallic minerals that rank with copper and salt. Last year over 79,000,000 barrels of Portland cement were produced, employing a capital of $150,000,000. About 35,000 persons are employed in this industry, and there are about 200,000 dependent upon it for a living. It is a national industry. That is, it is not localized, and practically every State in the Union has cement works. Cement can be made almost any place where clay and limestone can be found. It is an industry that is the outgrowth of a protective tariff. In 1897, when the Dingley tariff law was passed, only 2,677,775 barrels of Portland cement were produced in this country, with a value of $4,315,891.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator from Utah allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Are we not now exporting cement?

Mr. SMOOT. I will give the exact figures just as soon as I reach them in my speech.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I say just a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say yes; to a limited extent.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I shall not interfere with the Senator's speech.

In the State of New Jersey our citizens are largely engaged in the manufacture of cement. Within the past three weeks the president of one of the largest manufactories of cement in the State of New Jersey, a man of large wealth, came to my office. He is a gentleman whom I know very well. I said to him, referring to him by his first name, "Earnest, do you feel that we are going to wreck all the industries in cement in New Jersey?" He is a Republican senator in the State of New Jersey, and is a protectionist. He said, "No; I think nothing of the kind. I had hoped that you might leave 3 or 4 cents a hundred on cement, but we are doing a fine export business to-day and will continue to do it. We really need no protection on our cement."

Mr. SMOOT. Before I get through I will cover what the Senator has said.

The production in this country has gradually increased from year to year until last year it reached nearly 80,000,000 barrels. At the same time the price, which before production began in this country was $3 a barrel, and was $2.13 in 1891, and $1.61 in 1897, was reduced to as low as an average of 81 cents a barrel in 1901. This enormous increase in production with a corresponding decrease in price offers no excuse for the removal of all duty and the opening of our markets to foreign competition. In times of world panics America is made the dumping ground of Portland cement by European nations, and this is particularly the case in view of the fact that Portland cement could form one of the most important articles of ballast for foreign vessels coming to this country for cargoes of the products of the soil.

The points of heaviest imports of Portland cement are Charleston, Savannah, Pensacola, Mobile, New Orleans, and Galveston, where foreign vessels come for outbound cotton cargoes. The same applies to the Pacific coast, where not only German, Belgian, and English cement comes in ballast in vessels coming for grain, but also Chinese and Japanese cement made by the cheap labor of the Orient, which, by the way, the State of New Jersey is not in a position to be interfered with by that trade as are California and the Western States, and all this in face of the fact that only within a few miles of San Francisco there are four cement works in actual operation. Two other plants have lately opened buildings in Washington, north of Seattle, and they also have felt the inroads of foreign cement. About two years ago 10 of the largest cement plants in Canada were consolidated in a single firm under one management. They are protected at home by heavy duties, and the removal of the duty here will enable them to dump cement into the northern border States at prices ruinous to the United States mills now supplying that district. The mills in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Washington would be seriously affected by this removal of the duty, and as the mills in these States produce to-day 67 per cent of the output of the whole country it can readily be seen what a detrimental effect such a change in the tariff, as proposed by this bill, will have on the entire industry. In 1906, under the rates of duty then in effect, 2,273,493 barrels were imported. By the increase in production and the reduction in price imports have greatly decreased. With such great competition at home and such low prices, with nothing in the way of a trust or combination, what possible excuse can there be for the removal of all the duty on this product involving the living of 200,000 persons?

HOW AMERICAN LABOR WILL SUFFER.

The payment of labor in this industry has constantly increased. According to the Government returns, the average was $430 a year in 1890 and $576 in 1909. This removal of the duty would practically close all cement works along the coast and near the Canadian border and also at such other ports as could be reached by water transportation. The cost of the production of cement is practically all labor. At least about 90 per cent of the cost is labor. There are no great profits in the industry now, as shown by the fact that 32 out of 110 works have gone into bankruptcy, and two or three failures have occurred since this proposed tariff change was brought to public attention. The advantage to the community at large in the development of this industry has been to make schoolhouses, theaters, and buildings and houses of all kinds to a large extent fireproof; to make old streets safe with good paving instead of wooden and brick paving; to make a great advance in the way of good roads, and the strengthening of bridges, and improvements in many other ways. The value of the cement produced last year was about $66,000,000, all but about 10 per cent of that amount going to labor, which, under this bill—a large portion of it—will be transferred to workers in foreign countries. Vice Consul General Poole, of Berlin, in a recent report on the cement industry of that country, says that the average yearly wage of workers in the industry was $280 a year, as compared with $576 in the United States, as shown by our census. The consul in Germany gives the value of the cement there as 85.3 cents a barrel, as compared with 84.4 for the same year in the United States. The prosperity of Germany and the great demand for cement there keep up the price. But this will not always be the case, and with the labor cost here 100 per cent higher than in Germany and with ships bringing cement to this country as ballast, the industry can not be maintained here at existing wage prices, in competition with Germany and other foreign countries.

WHITE CEMENT WILL ALL BE IMPORTED.

The production of white nonstaining Portland cement has grown rapidly in this country in recent years. In 1908 the production was 60,000 barrels and in 1911 over 135,000 barrels. Two companies engaged in the production of this cement have gone out of business, owing to the high cost of production. This product being white in color and nonstaining—by which is meant that when used as a mortar for setting, pointing, and backing fine-textured stones they are relieved from the staining which occurs when brought into contact with ordinary Portland cement—there has been an increasing demand. Ordinary gray Portland cement is burned with coal, while in the manufacture of white Portland cement the burning process must be accomplished by using fuel oil, which is a very substantial factor in its cost. The advance in the cost of this commodity was 33 per cent in 1912 over 1911, and contracts made for the year 1913 are at an advance of 55 per cent over the price at which fuel oil sold in 1911. The production of the cement in this country has caused a large reduction in its price. The increasing cost of its production and the removal of all duty will simply force Americans out of the business. The average selling price of white nonstaining Portland cement is now $2.75 per barrel of 400 pounds, at the mill, including the value of the package, and the present duty of 8 cents per 100 pounds, or 32 cents per barrel, is the equivalent of but 12 per cent ad valorem. This duty should at least be maintained.

The effect is shown in a letter of May 30 from Mr. C. Boetticher, president of the Colorado Portland Cement Co., before the Democratic Party in the Senate had agreed to remove all the duty. He says:

> Our business is very light; we are shipping only about one-half the amount of cement that we should ship at this time of the year. There are no improvements of any kind going on in this State at the present time.

Similar reports come from other parts of the country, and are simply an indication of what will take place when this proposed law takes effect.

THE AMAZING PROVISION AS TO LIME.

Lime furnishes another exhibition of the reckless way in which American workmen are treated by this bill. The duty now on lime is 5 cents a hundred pounds. This it is proposed to reduce to 5 per cent. The average ad valorem of the present duty is only about 10 per cent, which it is proposed to cut one-half. That the lime business is not profitable now is shown by the earnings of various companies engaged in its production. This proposed change seems to be for the benefit of the Canadian manufacturers. They are now protected by a duty of 12½ cents a hundred pounds, including weight of barrel, bag, or cask, or a duty 60 per cent higher than that imposed by the United States. Hence American lime is entirely excluded from Canada, but considerable lime is now exported from that country. In 1905 the imports were 46,148,700 pounds. There has been no change in duty since that time. In northern Maine over 800,000 pounds of lime were imported last year from New Brunswick, and the Rockland & Rockport Lime Co. said before the Ways and Means Committee that there were imported through the Portland customs district over 8,000,000 pounds last year. With this cut in the duty of one-half it will give the Canadian manufacturers practically control of the Atlantic coast trade as well as that of the States bordering on the Canadian line. The Canadian lime manufacturers can use water transportation and can ship their product in foreign bottoms to all of the principal consuming markets of the Atlantic coast, whereas the American manufacturer must use American ships, which pay higher wages, for this coastwise trade. Lime is manufactured in all parts of the United States, with very sharp competition, and there have been large losses in the business in recent years because of low prices. What possible excuse there can be for opening our border markets to the Canadian producers while their American competitors are excluded from the Canadian markets is beyond comprehension.

The imports of crude gypsum in 1901 were 190,000 tons, in 1909 they were 288,781 tons, and in 1912 they reached 426,500 tons. With such a large increase in imports there can be no excuse for the proposed reduction in the duty imposed by this bill. The imported article is quarried easily on the coast of Nova Scotia, is brought to the coast cities by cheap barge freight, where it is milled and then again transferred by water ready for distribution all along the Atlantic coast for use in the coast cities and for shipment inland. There was a large reduction in the duty on this product in 1909, since which time imports have largely increased.

A SMASHING BLOW AT THE GLUE INDUSTRY.

Glue has been treated in this bill in the same way as other articles which have increased enormously in production in this country as a result of a protective tariff, and which at the same time have been greatly reduced in price. The rates on glue and gelatin have never been high, thus allowing ample competition from abroad, which has increased in recent years. In 1899 the glue imported, valued at not more than 10 cents a pound, amounted to 2,706,304 pounds, while in 1910 the imports were 5,947,184 pounds. That clearly shows that there is no excuse for the provision in this bill to reduce the average rate of the tariff on imports, valued at not above 10 cents a pound, from 35.06 per cent in 1912 to an average estimated rate of 14.29 per cent. Such a violent change, as the manufacturers have protested, will practically destroy their industry in this line of goods and will be of no ultimate benefit to the consumers of the country in the way of lower prices, but will mean an enormous loss by sending abroad a large sum to pay for a product now largely produced in this country. It will tend further to hasten the concentration of the industry in a few hands. The American manufacturers not only compete with each other, but they have to compete with the great German syndicates and combinations, which under our laws would be held illegal and void as trusts. Under this change Germany will control the market, regulate prices, and dump surplus products into this country at prices with which the domestic manufacturer can not compete. The existence of these foreign trusts is not and can not be disputed. They were distinctly pointed out by the nonpartisan report of the Tariff Board.

The glue industry gives employment in this country to thousands of persons, and produced in 1909 nearly $14,000,000 in products. The average number of wage earners employed increased 77 per cent in the five years ending with 1904, and 14 per cent in the five years ending with 1909. The average rates on glue and gelatin have always been fixed at something less than the average rates on other products. Under that policy the industry has always been conducted on a competitive basis, but it is now proposed practically to destroy the industry.

GREAT INFLUENCE OF THE AGENT OF A GIGANTIC FOREIGN TRUST.

The chief advocates of low rates both before the House and Senate were importers, the chief one of whom said that he had been engaged for four years as general agent of a German and an Austrian glue concern, a well-known gigantic trust, adding:

I have no experience in glue manufacture and have come into possession of a few elementary ideas which, secondhand though they may be, derive their value from their source.

In a long letter to the Finance Committee this agent of the gigantic foreign trust tells of "saving $1,000,000 to the American people by the revenue from imports." The greater part of the glue imported comes in under the value of 10 cents or less a pound. To make a revenue of a million dollars from such imports would mean the practical annihilation of the American industry. Thousands of men would be thrown out of work, while millions of dollars would be sent abroad to pay for glue, and that would mean other thousands thrown out of employment here, because when the money is kept at home it is expended for American products. To call it a "saving" to impose $1,000,000 in tariff dues and send an enormous sum to Europe to pay for things that could better be made in this country is characteristic free-trade talk.

This agent of the gigantic European trust tells us that a protective tariff "is justified neither by constitution nor by moral law," and yet Germany and Austria have the most complete and effective protective laws in existence. Considering wages and cost of production, their rates are much higher and more effective than ours. The American manufacturer can not under the duties imposed by this bill, without a great reduction in wages, hope to meet the competition of this European glue trust. It is one of the strongest and most complete monopolies in the world and has the advantage of being able to do its work with the approval of the various European Governments. At present it absolutely controls the glue-manufacturing industry of Germany and Austria, has plants in Italy, France, Holland, Russia, and recently extended its operations to South America. The trust claims to control 75 per cent of the output of glue on the Continent of Europe and is largely engaged in the manufacture of gelatin. In view of the attitude of the American Government toward monopoly, this great reduction in the tariff rates on glue and gelatin for the benefit of this European trust is inexplicable.

There is no trust in this industry in the United States. Under present conditions the glue makers of this country are importing about 50,000,000 pounds of their raw material from countries with which the United States desires closer trade relations, and this interference with the glue industry here would greatly injure our trade with these other nations. Then, in the manufacture of glue and gelatin there is produced throughout the United States, as a by-product, an immense quantity of nitrogenous and phosphatic material available and used for fertilizing purposes. A tariff law that will disastrously affect the glue and gelatin industries of this country will deprive the farmers of many thousands of tons of fertilizer now procurable at a low cost. If the rates proposed in this bill are enacted into law a large quantity of raw glue stock now imported will go to Europe to be used there in making glue, which will be exported to this country, not only to the injury of our home manufacturers but also to the disturbance of freight rates between our country and other countries to which we desire to increase our exports.

WAGES IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

One importer tells of selling in the past "enormous quantities of French gelatins in this country, where now he is selling very little, entirely due to the superiority and low prices of the domestic manufactured article." That is very good testimony to the beneficial effect of a protective tariff, but he has the assurance to ask for a reduction in duties so that he can recover his lost trade, and the Democratic Party seems to be anxious to oblige him. Consul General Dillingham, reporting from Coburg, Germany, in 1911, stated that the maximum wages paid there to men in the gelatin industry for 60 hours' work was $4 a week. To allow as low as 12 per cent duty as protection against such wages is monstrous, and that is the proposed rate on gelatin valued at not above 10 cents a pound.

The American manufacturer now has to comply with the exacting requirements of the pure-food law, that has greatly increased the cost of production, but the European manufacturer does not have to comply with similar requirements in his own country. The glue that is exported from this country is a packing-house product, a specialty, to produce which only the packing houses have the raw material. It is not a competitive glue, and is a very small proportion of the production of the country. The assertion has been made that the glue manufacturers are controlled by the meat packers. There is no truth in that statement. I have in my possession sworn affidavits from about two-thirds of the manufacturers showing that they are entirely independent. The imports of glue not above 10 cents a pound in value were $186,988 in 1902 and $455,029 in 1910, showing a competitive condition. The average consumer would not be benefited by reduced rates. The cost of glue as a component part of other products is relatively small. Only the purchasers of large quantities would benefit from lower prices, but, as experience has shown, when the foreign trust gets a hold here prices would go up. American competitors could not exist long when this trust desired their extinguishment. Glue has not advanced in price in the last three years, though the raw materials have greatly advanced in cost. That shows the benefit of keen home competition, which will be destroyed by subjecting our market to the control of this immense foreign trust.

AUTOMOBILES—EXTRAORDINARY CHANGES—FOREIGNERS FAVORED.

Just why the European manufacturers should have any consideration whatever in fixing this or any other duty is beyond the comprehension of any fair-minded American citizen. But they figure very extensively in this fixing of the rate on automobiles, occupying many pages of the hearings, and filing threats which if made by American manufacturers in any other country would be considered insolent and, no doubt, meet with proper retaliative treatment. The boards of trade of Belgium, Germany, France, and Italy, through their attorney, stated that they would watch the spirit of Congress in reference to automobile provisions and would retaliate if their protests against the existing rate did not receive consideration. It was admitted by their attorney that the wages paid in this country by automobile manufacturers are from two to two and one-half times more than are paid in Italy. In fact, they are from three to five times as much as the wages in Italy, and in about the same proportion to the wages paid in Belgium, England, or any other country in Europe.

This attorney for the foreign manufacturers declared that if the duties on chassis were reduced, as requested by the foreign manufacturers, to 25 per cent, they would quadruple imports of chassis. Another one of their attorneys asked for a duty of 33 per cent, and is given 3 per cent less, or 30 per cent. The Italian Chamber of Commerce in New York, a subsidized Italian organization, states in a letter that it—has for its principal duty the protection and the promotion of the Italian commerce in general, and has to try to obtain from the Government of the United States the best advantage to the great current of business from Italy to the United States, and that may produce the most benefit to the Italian producer.

This Italian chamber asked for merely a reduction of 5 per cent, but our Democratic friends in this Chamber conceded 15 per cent to them.

A number of the leading automobile manufacturers in Italy said, in a joint letter to the minister of commerce of that country, that the group of American importers which composed their agents in this country had called—for moral and material help for the purpose of putting an ease end at the campaign in question.

Which means that these American importers called upon their principals in Italy to furnish means to push the campaign here for lower duties, and they got what they wanted, as is clear from this statement:

The invitation of the American importers was welcomed in Italy by the manufacturers, and the same are now asking you to try your very best to have the Italian Government favor the request of the American importers of Italian automobiles.

The Italian Chamber of Commerce said that it had not asked for more than 5 per cent reduction on complete automobiles, and it furnished this reason in reply to the Italian manufacturers, who made complaint because a greater reduction had not been requested:

We have to consider that before making a great reduction on the Italian automobiles, for which entrance in this country is not less than $2,000,000 a year, we have other products more important for the Italian commerce. The silk, for $12,000,000; olive oil, $4,500,000; vegetables, $3,500,000; cheese, $4,000,000; leather, $1,200,000; marble, $1,500,000; coral, $500,000; chemical products, $1,500,000, etc.

The Italian Chamber of Commerce seems to have been very successful in getting lower duties on all these products, with many of them on the free list.

It is ridiculous to put a duty of 45 per cent on automobiles valued at $1,500 or more, and then to admit at 30 per cent chassis and finished parts. The bodies of automobiles are too bulky, and subject to damage in shipping, and too expensive to ship by reason of their bulk in proportion to their value. Hence European manufacturers, as a rule, do not make the bodies, and as long as they can send chassis into this country at 30 per cent, the 45 per cent duty on any kind of an automobile would be of no value as a protection to American manufacturers. One of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House said that—the automobile chassis is practically the finished car, with the exception of the body and the tires.

That is the truth. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee said:

The automobile is the chassis; the balance is merely a carriage body.

Hence the duty of 45 per cent is meaningless. The chairman of the Democratic congressional committee, in an interview in the Detroit Free Press, which has been generally quoted and not contradicted, says:

We put the tariff down to the point where the representatives of the automobile importers told us they could compete, and we expect that they will take advantage of the reduction on parts and import in sections for assembling here.

That is the truth of the matter, and this reduced duty on automobiles is made, not for the benefit of American workmen and manufacturers or the American people, but for the benefit of workmen in Italy and other countries that will be able to send their goods here under this proposed law.

IMPOSING A DUTY ON BANANAS—TEXTBOOKS FROM THE ORIENT.

There were imported in 10 months of last year bananas of the value of $10,856,554. This fruit is consumed by poor people and is produced in the United States to a very limited extent in Florida and some other southern points. The imposition of a duty on such a product, while sugar, wheat, flour, potatoes, and other food products produced in the United States to an enormous extent are put on the free list, is a most extraordinary proceeding. A few more bananas may be produced in the South, but the time will never come when anything more than a mere fraction of the consumption now of bananas can be produced in the United States.

According to the report of the British Government, wages in the printing industry in the United States are two and one-third times higher than in the United Kingdom, but the wages there are materially greater than elsewhere in Europe. There are about 400,000 persons engaged in printing and publishing in the United States, practically all of whom will be affected by the provisions of this bill putting books used in schools and other educational institutions on the free list. There is no limit as to what may be used as an alleged "educational" institution. If all such books can be printed outside of the United States and brought in free, it will mean a material reduction in the wages of printers or the loss of an enormous industry in the United States for the benefit of foreign publishers and workmen. Good printing is now done in the English language in both China and Japan, and as the printing of such books would largely be merely the work of copying what has already been done in this country, we may expect, under this provision, that many of our textbooks in future will come from the Orient.

INCONSISTENCIES AS TO FISH, COAL, IVORY, AND BOOTS AND SHOES.

Canada pays a bounty to her fishermen, but they are to be allowed to send their fish into the United States without the payment of any duty, which means the extinguishment to a large extent of the fishing industry of this country.

Canada imposes a duty of 60 cents a ton on bituminous coal coming from the United States, but she is to be allowed to send coal mined in Canada to this country free of duty. In the same way Canada imposes a duty of 10 cents a pound on tea coming from the United States, but a large proportion of the tea consumed in this country comes in by way of Canada free of duty. However, that is the course in regard to agricultural products and other things put on the free list by this bill. As there are already two or three hundred American establishments in Canada producing manufactured goods which are dutiable in that country, it is fairly certain that the number will be doubled after this bill becomes law, because all of those manufacturers will have the advantage of a protective tariff in Canada, with the freedom of the American market in many of their products, and a duty that will not be protective to American manufacturers in their lines of industry.

It is as difficult to imagine any excuse for some of the duties imposed in this bill as it is to understand why other articles are put on the free list. For instance, a duty is put on ivory tusks. No country in the world imposes a duty on such ivory, and, of course, there is no thought of home production of that article. But $1,300,000 is imported, and taken almost altogether in payment for cotton goods sold in Africa. This ivory is used principally in making keys for pianos and other musical instruments used in schools, homes, and so forth, in developing higher ideals and making life more comfortable for a large proportion of our working people. To impose an unnecessary duty on this ivory not only will interfere with the sale of cotton goods in Africa, but will make it more difficult for the ordinary persons to get the small types of musical instrument in the production of which ivory is used. While a duty is placed on ivory, such articles as mother-of-pearl, tortoise and other shells, jet, whalebone, coral, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, lancewood, ebony, and so forth, remain on the free list. One New York firm last year sold $865,000 worth of cotton cloth in Africa and took ivory tusks in payment. The cloth went to Zanzibar, Mombasa, Aden, and Khartum. This duty should not be insisted upon.

Putting a duty on ivory and admitting boots and shoes free is an illustration of the inconsistency of this measure. In the manufacture of boots and shoes the following articles are used as raw materials, which are dutiable in this bill: Worsted cloths, cotton goods, velvets, velveteens, satin, cotton braid laces, silk braid laces, and buckskin, kid skin and bronze, kid-skin leather, and a number of other things. Putting the finished articles on the free list and leaving a duty on the raw materials is a characteristic feature in this bill. Bone char and animal carbon are duty free for the benefit of the Sugar Trust, but bones crushed or broken, or bone particles used in the production of bone char, are dutiable.

A HARD BLOW TO THE SOAP INDUSTRY.

The treatment of soap in this bill is indefensible. In House bill No. 20182 laundry soap was reduced from 20 to 15 per cent, while in this bill it is reduced to 5 per cent, and a duty of 20 per cent is imposed on essential oils used in the manufacture of soap. There is no soap trust to limit competition. Prices show no substantial change in a long period, though prices of other things have advanced. The price of soap is determined by the output, a large manufacturer being able to produce cheaper than a small one. There are large manufacturers in England who, with a 5 per cent duty, will take the seaboard trade in particular. Canada exacts the equivalent of 25 per cent duty on such soap. There were 436 establishments, according to the census, making laundry soap in 1909, but the laundry-soap catalogue shows 600 and more establishments, scattered in every State except Alabama, Florida, and North Carolina, while there is one in Mississippi, one in South Carolina, and one in Virginia. Materials such as essential oils and vegetable oil are now purchased through European markets, and the imposition of a duty of 20 per cent on them will give the European manufacturers an advantage in the purchase of such articles. They now have an advantage in the cost of labor, of alkalies, and of vegetable oils. Europe formerly held the trade with Porto Rico, Hawaii, Panama, and the Philippine Islands, but it is now controlled by the American producers. With a duty of only 5 per cent on soap that trade will soon pass into the hands of foreign manufacturers. In the exports of soap are crude saponified cotton-seed oil, "foots," shipped in barrels, used for textile purposes. Excluding our insular possessions, exports of soap have not increased in the last six years.

Imposing a duty of 20 per cent on essential oil used in the soap industry, with only 5 per cent on soap, is absolutely inexcusable. The distinction should be made between essential oil used by perfumers and the low-priced oil used in laundry soap to counteract the natural odor of the soap. Such essential oils are necessary ingredients and a 20 per cent tax on them is a rank injustice. The words "fancy or" are omitted in designating perfumed toilet soaps. They were inserted in 1909 to prevent the dumping of so-called nonperfumed toilet soaps manufactured abroad, when they are really fancy soaps. Pears' soap came in in that way until the courts interfered and classified it as a fancy toilet soap. England exacts a duty on such transparent soap of approximately 35 per cent. If this wording is not changed they can send their soap here at 10 per cent. The paragraph should contain "perfumed, fancy, transparent, and all descriptions of toilet soap," at 40 per cent. On castile soap the duty is reduced to 10 per cent; at present it is 1½ cents a pound. The imports of castile soap have increased largely at the existing rates and amounted to nearly 4,000,000 pounds in the nine months ending this year in March, showing that there is no need of any reduction in the rate. The soap industry has been built up with reliance on free essential oils. They have been upon the free list under all tariffs. The imposition of a duty upon the ingredients which enter into the manufacture of these necessities, and thus discriminating against an industry in which competition is so strong, is without any excuse whatever. The laundry soap manufacturers add to the basic tallow an oil which gives a greater lather, making the soap serviceable in hard-water districts and greatly improving the soap. The admixture of these oils is also made a feature. Some of the raw materials have been placed upon the dutiable list without any reason, and such a reduction of duty as is proposed would open our market to a very large inflow of foreign soaps, without any advantage to our people.

HOW THE BILL WILL INJURE COTTON MANUFACTURING.

The cotton industry suffers under this bill in the same way as other industries. As the United States produces about two-thirds of the cotton used in the world, it should be able to produce such cotton goods as are consumed in this country. But there is the same difficulty in this industry as in any other, with wages from two and one-third to five times greater in this country than in Europe and Asia, where cotton goods are produced. About $68,000,000 worth of cotton manufactures were imported in 1910, $48,953,231 in 1905, and $37,789,988 in 1900, showing the rapid growth in these imports. The only reason why a single dollar's worth of those goods is imported is because of the lower cost of labor abroad. We have the advantage in the raw material, though, owing to low transportation rates, such material costs as much to a New England manufacturer as it does to one in Europe. But notwithstanding the large importation of manufactured goods in ordinary years, this bill proposes a sweeping reduction in duties based on a miscalculation as to conditions in this country and abroad. Even those who have been active in agitating for lower duties are protesting vigorously against the rates fixed in this bill. Mr. Walter H. Langshaw, of New Bedford, Mass., has been one of the men criticizing existing rates on cotton manufactures, but he is protesting vigorously against the rates proposed by this bill. In a letter he says:

There are thousands of bales of cotton and cloth in storehouses which millmen would like to sell at cost; also some new mills. I have one, bought under "protective duties." Part of it has been stopped for two years, because we can not get cost for its product. I should like to find a customer at cost, or even 20 per cent less.

Mr. Langshaw says that five or six mills in New Bedford, completed about three years ago, have not earned a dividend, and their stocks are offered as low as $45 a share, with no buyers. There have been 125 failures in a few years in the knit-underwear manufacturing, and yet it is proposed to reduce the duties on such goods a good deal more than one-half. American goods of that kind can not be sold in even the West Indies and Latin American countries in competition with those of Europe, because of the higher wages paid here, and the consequent higher cost of construction, equipment, and maintenance, and therefore the increased cost of manufacturing knit underwear, which pays $35,000,000 in wages in this country annually. There is no combination and competition is keen, but on cotton underwear there is a cut in the duty of one-half, and on woolen of more than one-half. The imports of cotton hosiery in the fiscal year of 1910 were in value nearly $6,000,000, but duties are to be severely cut all the same.

ENGLISH MANUFACTURERS EXPECT TO INCREASE EXPORTS.

The conditions in the United Kingdom are quite different from those in the United States. The Fine Cotton Spinners and Doublers' Association of Manchester, England, with 3,000,000 spindles, recently declared an 8 per cent dividend on ordinary stock, with a 5 per cent bonus. The mills in Bombay, India, engaged in spinning and weaving, all paid dividends last year of from 4 to 30 per cent. Sir Charles Macara, president of the Federation of Master Cotton Spinners' Association, of Lancashire, England, recently declared in discussing industrial conditions in the cotton industry in this country and this proposed new law:

All American concerns have cost a tremendous amount more to capitalize than ours have cost. They are left with a big handicap. At present, despite their tremendous tariff, we have retained the finer end of the trade and there is every likelihood that in this branch of the industry the tariff reduction will benefit us, because it is very difficult for them to secure the skilled workers we have at our disposal. Their workers are of mixed nationalities and constantly migrating and they can not compete with Lancashire in fine fabrics. The reduced tariff will increase this end of our trade.

It is in the finer goods that our American producers find great difficulty in meeting foreign competition and most of these goods are produced in Northern States, which will explain to some extent the lack of interest shown by our Democratic opponents in that branch of the industry. Over 90 per cent of the cotton yarns produced in this country are No. 40's and under. Yarns over 40's are now on a competitive basis, as the imports average over 90 per cent of the domestic production and yet a slashing cut is made on this finer class of goods, which is nearly all produced in the North. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House is quoted as saying:

New Bedford mills are rich—they can stand it.

But with several mills in that city unable to pay any dividends he is evidently as much mistaken about New Bedford as about the rest of the country.

From an official report of the British Government we learn that in the cotton industry 16 per cent of the men in England, working full time, earn less than $5 each, with nearly the same percentage in the woolen industry. Nearly 44 per cent of the men in the cotton industry earn between $5 and $7.20 a week. Women largely predominate in that industry in the United Kingdom, and 13 per cent of them, working full time, earn less than $2.40 a week each, while 39 per cent earn between $2.40 and $3.60 a week. The average hours of labor in the cotton industry in England are 55.5 a week.

MUST COMPETE WITH ASIATIC LABOR.

Those are the wages and the hours in the country where the highest wages are paid outside of the United States, but in other countries wages are very much less. Japan, which has taken away our cotton trade in Manchuria and which, according to a report of its delegate at the recent meeting of the International Cotton Federation held in Paris, will soon control the trade of China and has "400,000 more spindles in the course of erection," pays in wages a mere fraction of what is paid in the United States. But Japan will soon become a competitor in our cotton trade in this country and, when the Panama Canal is opened, can easily reach our eastern markets. At that Paris meeting it was said that in Bohemia yarn prices were so low that yarns were exported to Germany, the Netherlands, and even to the United Kingdom, and Germany reported that in cotton manufacturing its position was "prejudiced by surplus yarns from Austria being offered at prices below cost." It was said that production in Austria was curtailed one-third and would evidently be further curtailed, unless a market could be found for the goods. In England there has been an increase of 12,000,000 spindles since 1906, and new looms are being put down at a rapid rate, and exports of yarn are increasing on a rapid scale. Foreign manufacturers are already preparing to flood our market when this bill becomes a law. They have taken large orders already in this country for goods to be delivered under the new rates. The Senate committee has improved the cotton schedule to a small extent as compared with its condition when it left the House, but it is now altogether inadequate to protect the workmen in that industry. Samuel Ross, president of the Mill Spinners' Union and a member of the emergency committee of the United Textile Workers of America, in speaking for the workingmen said:

The proposed duties are too low to prevent large importations of competitive products. The large textile unions have declared in their conventions that wages must not be reduced. Any attempt to lower the wages will meet with our most strenuous opposition. It is not lower wages that we fear, but periods of no wages from a cessation of output. From conversations with the workingmen I know that they trusted the Democratic Party not to make such reductions as would tend further to increase the hardships of the workingman. But this would be the result, as shown by the fact that preparations are now being made by foreign manufacturers, at no little expense, to manufacture products for export to this country, which products are similar to those now being made by us. The jubilant spirit with which the cotton schedule has been received in England by the president of the English Manufacturers' Association down to the smallest manufacturer is very apparent from trade and business conditions in England. Jobbers and users of yarns from 50's upward are using the argument that it will be impossible for our manufacturers to quote prices within several cents a pound of that for which the foreign manufacturer can sell. I have in mind a case in New Bedford where a mill bought 80's yarns from England in preference to making it themselves, although possessed with the facilities for so doing, but a general reduction of wages of 10 per cent took place, and they then began making the yarns themselves. That was some years ago and only shows the effect of even a small reduction in wages. The wages paid in proportion to the wholesale value of finished product at New Bedford are as high in some cases as 70 per cent, but this bill imposes duties ranging from 5 to 30 per cent. The condition would apply in a greater or lesser degree to the larger textile centers of the country.

That is what a workingman says about the effect of this bill.

STRIKING AT THE PRODUCERS OF FINE GOODS.

Fine and fancy cotton goods are not a necessity of the great majority of the American people. A fair rate on them, therefore, could be justified on the ground that they are luxuries. But this bill is drawn up so as to allow the importation of such goods. The conversion cost alone of the finer yarns in the United States and England proves conclusively that 30 per cent is the minimum rate of duty necessary to equalize that cost. As the yarn becomes finer the difference in cost becomes greater. The Tariff Board reported that "the comparatively small difference in output per weaver does not offset the higher wages paid in this country" on the finer goods. Since the Tariff Board made its report there has been a 10 per cent increase in wages in Massachusetts and a 3½ per cent decrease in the hours of employment, both of which tend to increase the labor cost, and there has been nothing of the kind in competing countries. Fine cotton goods are made of yarns chiefly between 60's and 99's, and yet these 40 numbers are given only 20 per cent and 22½ per cent ad valorem even in the Senate bill, and a little more on the gray cloth. The labor cost of yarns in number 100's is one-half more than in 60's, and that has been recognized in all tariff bills since 1883. The difference in cost here and in England is greater as the yarn becomes finer. But no recognition was made of that fact in the House bill and a wholly inadequate recognition is made in the Senate committee amendment. The production of fine-yarn goods in this country is comparatively new and the industry is now struggling to establish itself, but this bill gives it a staggering blow. Cotton yarn is the raw material for spool thread, but a higher duty is imposed on the yarn than on the thread by the House bill, and no satisfactory remedy has been made by the Senate committee.

Handkerchiefs, hemmed, of linen, are reduced 15 per cent, but the cloth out of which they are made is reduced only 5 per cent. Handkerchiefs of cotton are given a protection of only 5 per cent over the cost of the raw material—only one-half what is given in the case of linen handkerchiefs.

There are large mills exclusively devoted to the manufacture of cotton goods in 42 States, employing 500,000 persons and consuming over 4,500,000 bales of cotton annually. There is nothing sectional about the cotton industry of this country and there should not be anything of that kind in this bill. The products from the mills of the South are of a heavier and coarser grade than those of the eastern mills, but the production of finer goods is progressing in the South and if not killed by this bill will grow rapidly.

SOUTHERN MANUFACTURERS THE LEAST HURT.

The manufacturers of heavy-weight cotton and coarse cotton yarn are not seriously threatened by the rates of this bill. They have a large advantage geographically, where the mills and the cotton fields are contiguous, and wages are much lower in the mills of the South than in the North. The manufacturers of fine fancy shirtings, fancy cotton dress goods in woven and printed styles, are obliged to pay more for their yarns and more for finishing their goods than foreigners, and under the proposed reduction in rates the goods from England, Scotland, Belgium, France, and Germany will enter into sharp competition with the products of the New England mills, and the growing trade of those southern plants that are now endeavoring to produce fine yarn goods. American cotton goods manufacturers are season after season producing goods of higher intrinsic worth. But they now meet with sharp foreign competition which will be vastly increased under this proposed law. American-made cotton goods have found a market in some foreign

There is hardly any other line of industry in which the working margin is so close as in that of cotton manufacturing. Styles change rapidly, so that any fine goods, if not promptly disposed of, will remain a loss. In all branches of the textile industry in the United States arbitrary labor regulations regulate hours of labor and pay, and otherwise greatly increase the cost of production. No other country is under such restrictions. We are all glad that workingmen are thus protected, but nothing will so interfere with the success of such regulations as this reduction in tariff rates.

STRIKING AT AMERICAN WATCHES AND CLOCKS.

The reduction in the duty on watches and clocks to an extent of nearly 20 per cent and the eradication of all the specific rates is another one of the monstrous blunders committed by this bill. In the manufacture of both watches and clocks American genius took the lead. European countries engaged in this industry have assiduously and deliberately copied and imitated every improvement adopted by American producers, so that this country now has no advantage in that respect, while it has not labor as efficient and well trained in this industry as is the case abroad, and wages are three and four times greater in this country than in Europe. For over a century the American clock was the pride of the American traveler, who found its face a familiar friend in nearly every country of the globe. But American clock machinery has been copied by foreigners sent here in disguise as laborers, and even the names adopted by American manufacturers have been used, and trade-marks also, so that with the cheaper labor abroad, working long hours, any reduction of duty means just so much lower wages to Americans, or else driving them out of employment altogether. American clock manufacturers do not sell abroad cheaper than at home; there is no trust; no water in their capitalization, and no manipulation of any kind. Several firms engaged in this business have either failed or given it up for lack of sufficient profit. Only one new concern has attempted to go into the manufacture of clocks, while two have failed. Prices have been reduced to a very great extent, while the factories have paid and are paying more and more each year for material and help. By sending experts to this country to pose as ordinary laborers, and obtaining employment in the factories here, foreign manufacturers were enabled in this way to copy American machinery, the shape of the clocks, their names, and then to export them to Australia and elsewhere where American clocks were extensively sold, and by selling the inferior articles, under the same name, ruin American trade. They have carried on that work in Canada, as well as in other countries, where they use the same name and even put on the dial of a clock the name of the American city where it was alleged to have been manufactured, although in this case it was produced in Germany.

The so-called Tariff Reform Club, of New York, a free-trade organization, in the campaign of last year, circulated a paper asserting that a certain clock made in New Haven was sold in this country for 68 cents, and if exported for 55 cents. The New Haven Clock Co., when this was brought to their attention, promptly invited the chairman of this free-trade club to examine its books and be convinced of the falsity of the statement made by the club. This was done, and the club acknowledged its misstatement and admitted that "these clock companies did not discriminate against the American producer."

TRUTH FROM A PRODUCER—GERMAN COMPETITION.

Walter Camp, the president of the New Haven Clock Co., says:

The life of an eight-day striking mantle clock is at least 10 years, and such a clock can be bought anywhere in this country to-day at retail for $2 or less, making it represent an annual outlay of 20 cents. We have reduced the cost of clocks to the consumer 50 per cent in the last 25 years. We have practically reached the limit of human ingenuity in the matter of machine work on clocks. The foreigners have gradually imitated our machinery until they are as well equipped as we are, and are paying their labor only about one-third or one-half as much. The increase of these foreign clocks from 1908 to 1912 was 70 per cent. Somewhere between two and three million of them came into the United States last year. The skilled workers' budget in Europe shows that a man and his wife and three children, all of them working, earn approximately $365 a year. Our people earn two and one-half times as much as that. We are already informed that there are large shipments of clocks awaiting the proposed reduction of duty; and, of course, we realize that any of the patterns that are brought in here below a margin of profit must be abandoned, and we do not see why the Germans will not then increase their prices. The saving, in any event, to the consumer, when he is only paying 20 cents a year for his clock, is, of course, infinitesimal.

One of the reasons put forward for reducing the duty is that American clocks are exported. A little over twice as many clocks and parts of clocks in value are exported as are imported, but American exports go to countries where the American producer is protected by preferential rates of duty, as, for instance, in Brazil, where a 20 per cent reduction is made on American clocks; but even then the export business is gradually dwindling in its proportion, and the clocks that are exported are such as have not been copied in patterns by the Germans and others. German clocks are sold in this country at less than they can be purchased for in Germany. The American consul at Mannheim, Germany, reporting on this industry in Baden, says:

The earnings of many of those employed in factory labor in their homes exceed those of like employees in factories, but these earnings are often the result of labor extended far into the night. In the Black Forest clock industry a working day of from 14 to 16 hours is common; also in many other industries. In the city of Pforzheim, which is the center of an enormous jewelry manufacture, the average wages for adult females is said to be 38 cents, and in the surrounding villages 31 cents, while the average daily wage of female chain makers is 46 cents, and in other branches of jewelry manufacture is 45 cents.

Foreign importations under the present duty have steadily increased, showing no ground for any lowering of the duty. The horological schools established by the governments in the clock-making districts of foreign countries save the manufacturers the cost of expert and experimental work, all of which the American manufacturer is obliged to bear himself. There is nothing in the way of a trust in the clock business, and no reason for any lowering of duties to invite greater foreign competition.

INDEFENSIBLE REDUCTION ON WATCHES.

There is less ground for reducing the duty on watches than on clocks, and there is no sound reason for any reduction in either case. The imports of watches and parts for the fiscal year 1912 were, in value, $2,313,677, while the exports were only $1,880,667, and these exports largely went to countries giving preferential rates and where there are advantages in time of delivery, etc. Ad valorem duties, which are imposed in the pending bill, are impracticable when applied to watch movements.

The value of a watch movement is in its timekeeping qualities, which can not be determined by an external examination however critical, even by expert watchmakers, and can only be ascertained by elaborate tests for the purpose of determining whether or not it is properly jeweled, and the number and kind of its adjustment, which tests would require a great deal of time and special equipment. Ad valorem rates leave the Government at the mercy of foreign manufacturers, as their valuation will have to be accepted. The test of watches for temperature and position adjustment and for determining the qualities of materials and finish requires special equipment and skilled experts schooled in that line of work, to say nothing of the time and patience required. Many of the largest importers of watch movements in this country have their own factories in Switzerland and the movements are billed to themselves here at cost or under cost. Five of the largest factories in this country said that they exported no goods, except possibly a little to Canada. Most American manufacturers of watches import at least from 50 per cent to 65 per cent of the materials that go into a watch movement, on a part of which they pay duties, which fact alone gives the foreign manufacturer of watches a great advantage. The "home industry" in the watchmaking trade is still prevalent in Europe, and especially in Switzerland. The Swiss manufacturer has an advantage in many instances in the use of water power at a low cost. The American factories have to maintain repair departments, as all movements are guaranteed against defects, and a hospital must be maintained for putting into shape all movements which fail to keep accurate time. The foreign manufacturer is not bothered in that way, as he makes no such guaranty. In Switzerland, which country exports some years nearly $30,000,000 worth of watches and parts, or 10 times as many as are exported from the United States, watchmaking schools are established by various municipalities, with the result that the Swiss watchmaker is a trained expert having a general knowledge of every phase and process in the production of a watch. For that reason watchmakers in Switzerland have a greater efficiency and a wider knowledge of their trade, as a rule, than those in the United States. The Swiss manufacturer has at his command any amount of trained, skilled workmen, but the American manufacturer must train his own workmen.

DUTY EVADED—HOUSE WORK IN SWITZERLAND.

Many foreign watches are imported under what are called "knock-down" systems for the purpose of evading the duty on complete watch movements.

Watches and watch movements do not properly belong to Schedule C. The metal used in the construction of a watch movement makes up an infinitesimal part of the cost of production. The labor cost averages from about 81 to 87 per cent of the total cost, and the jewels used in the construction of a movement amount in many cases to about 50 per cent of the cost of the raw material in a watch movement. Metals, therefore, do not compose the chief values of a watch movement, but only a very small part of the value. Such a movement is a most delicate and intricate piece of mechanism. The most skilled and able workmen are required in the production of this most wonderful time-keeping instrument, and it should not be classified with iron and steel products, but properly belongs in Schedule N. Watch cases are largely composed of gold and silver, and articles of gold and silver are classified in Schedule N.

A consular report states that a peculiar feature of the industrial system of Switzerland is what is known as the "house industry," or the production of various articles of manufacture in the homes of the workmen. The importance of this particular branch of industry is due to the fact that it involves the relation of cheap hand labor to mechanical production. It practically eliminates the labor question and enables the importers to compete successfully in markets where organized labor dominates the situation and where standards of labor are maintained. The percentage of cost of labor thus employed in the various branches of industry in Switzerland is as follows: Textiles, 39 per cent; watches and jewelry, 24 per cent; clothing, 10 per cent; straw braids, 56 per cent; and wood carving, 52 per cent. Of the total engaged in industrial pursuits in Switzerland, 24 per cent belong to the house industry. At home in that country over 13,000 are engaged in the production of watches.

The general trend of prices in the American watch industry has been downward for many years, while the quality of the movement has each year been improved and the cost of production has been much greater. Straight specific duties on all classes of watch movements are desirable, and the change to ad valorem duties is most unwise. While the difference in the cost of material and labor is startling, yet when the difference in conditions, and in hours of work, plant investment, working capital required, and general expense of manufacture is considered, together with the fact that prices have gone down, any reduction in the duty is indefensible. The condition of the industry in this country demonstrates that fact.

THE APPEAL OF THE GLASSWORKERS NOT ENTERTAINED.

The appeal of the workingmen in the glass industry against a reduction of duty which would admit a large proportion of foreign wares of this kind is very touching, though it will be ineffective. There are in this country about 11,000 skilled glass-bottle blowers, whose average wage per day is about $4.60, and there are dependent upon this industry 35,000 unskilled workmen and their families. The necessity for maintaining the present tariff is as great now as at any former time, and already there are many workmen out of employment because of threatened tariff changes. One of the appeals of the workingmen reads:

> The reduced tariff means reduced wages to our members and other sacrifices such as we experienced under the Wilson tariff law; we therefore beseech you not to make any reduction on the present tariff rates on imported glassware, as these rates do not now afford sufficient protection to American workmen, notwithstanding the extraordinarily keen competition, and if the tariff rates are reduced it will bring on us a deplorable state of affairs.

Mr. T. W. Rowe, in behalf of the American Flint Glass Workers' Union, told of his experience in Europe, where he made a tour of investigation last year. He said:

> The conditions under which the people are employed around the glass works in continental Europe are so horrible that they defy exaggeration. Wages of continental European glassworkers are about one-fourth those paid to American glassworkers, and in addition to that there is female labor and child labor. I saw married women carrying their babies to the factory, the manufacturer having provided a nursery so that when the baby became hungry the mother could leave her work and go and nurse the baby. I visited a large factory at Val St. Lambert, and I saw young girls wheeling cinders and coal and carrying boxes that I am sure would tax the strength of ordinary men. When the tariff was reduced in 1894 goods were shipped into this country by the boatload and laid down in competition with American labor cheaper than our labor cost. A large number of our plants were thrown into idleness. We accepted a 20 per cent reduction in wages. When the tariff was restored the American manufacturers restored that 20 per cent reduction. We have greatly increased production and have removed the limit and increased the output in certain lines with a view of enabling the American manufacturer to meet the foreign competitor. I am glad to say that it has done some good, but it has not entirely remedied the evil. Every time the tariff has been touched and there has been a reduction on glassware it has meant a reduction in wages and injury to the workingmen.

WINDOW-GLASS WORKERS THREATENED.

Belgium exports 95 per cent of its product of window glass, which is dumped into this market whenever there is a surplus that can not be disposed of elsewhere. The business in Europe is in the hands of a syndicate, or trust, as we call it in this country. The failures in the window-glass business in this country have been larger than in any other industry.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. In reference to glassware, which the Senator has been discussing, has he investigated the matter as to whether or not under the last low-tariff law that industry was greatly harmed in this country and whether there was any very great reduction in the price of that commodity to the consumers of the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember very well the discussion of the tariff bill of 1909, when we were honored here by the presence of a Senator who was a glass manufacturer. He showed to the Senate glassware that was made in different parts of this country, gave the price the manufacturers received for it and what the ultimate consumer paid, and the difference in the figures was so great that I doubt whether there was a Senator on the floor who listened to the remarks who was not amazed to learn that there was so great a difference between the price received by the manufacturer and the price paid by the ultimate consumer. As suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, in the retail price there was no difference, and I say now that the retail price to the consumer, if this bill goes into effect, will be no less than it is to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I recall the very interesting exhibit that the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. Scott, made on that occasion. It is my recollection that the discussion developed the fact that the consumers of glassware in the country got no benefit from the reduction of the tariff. I will ask the Senator, who has given very great attention to this matter, whether he is of the opinion, if the reductions which are contemplated in the pending bill upon that product become a law, that the consumer is likely to be any better off so far as purchasing those articles is concerned than he is to-day under the existing law?

Mr. SMOOT. My opinion is that he will be no better off.

Mr. President, in 1909 when this schedule was being considered, I took as an example a 12 by 15 pane of glass. I purchased one here at a store in Washington. I had one purchased at a retail store in New York. That pane of glass laid down in this country duty paid cost 2¼ cents. I paid in the store here in Washington 15 cents for it and in New York it cost 25 cents. Is there any likelihood that by taking off half a cent a pound it is going to reduce the retail cost of a pane of glass or glassware of any kind to the ultimate consumer, judging from the great difference that always has existed between the price the manufacturers receive and the consumer pays?

In only two years in the last seven, according to the national association, have any profits been made. One-half of the glass is made by hand, and this large employment of labor at prices three or four times as great as in Belgium, accounts for the lack of profit in the business, which is subject to the dumping process from Europe. The freight rates from Antwerp to New York are 19.3 cents per hundredweight, and from Pittsburgh to New York 18 cents. From Antwerp to New Orleans the cost is 14 cents, and from Pittsburgh 43 cents. From Antwerp to San Francisco the transportation cost is 35 cents, while from Pittsburgh and points east of the Mississippi River to the Pacific the cost is 90 cents per hundredweight. The opening of the Panama Canal will help the European manufacturers. The English manufacturers have announced the intention of establishing factories in Canada, and what effect that will have remains to be seen. Prices have advanced in Belgium in prospect of the increased demand here. A firm of importers have made statements before Congress in regard to this matter, stating that the Imperial Window Glass Co., formed in this country some years ago, cost the people of America $6,000,000. That is an illustration of the length to which importers go in trying to break down our industries in order to increase their business of importing from abroad.

The Imperial Window Glass Co. was not in business long, and its total sales amounted to only $7,104,447, and the net profits were $569,408—not a very large profit; but a half a million is a very different thing from $6,000,000. The window-glass manufacturers ask: "Why should any of our representatives favor a measure that will ruin an industry and reduce the wages of 15,000 workmen? We believe many glass workers will be without employment and many valuable plants will be idle and will never again become active should this proposed scale of duties become operative. All sections will feel the depressing effect of closing our shops entirely, or trying to operate for an uncertain period under what we consider unfavorable conditions." The decreased rates under this bill run from 36.3 to 55⅝ per cent. Eighty per cent of the production is included in brackets, on which the reduction runs as high in some cases as 54.2 per cent. American workingmen can not live as the Belgian workmen have to live or exist. Eighty dollars is paid in this country for labor in the production of window glass where $30 is paid in Belgium. The plants in this country are the most modern in the world and are practically all of recent construction, while in Europe some very ancient plants exist, but the profits here are often very small owing to competition. Reducing rates is simply helping foreign producers at the expense of those engaged in the same industry in this country.

The cut-glass industry, on which rates are also reduced, is suffering now from the provision inserted in the Panama Canal act that allows free entry to everything required to equip a ship.

HELPING A FOREIGN TRUST CONTROL THE PLATE-GLASS MARKET.

In the production of plate glass, Belgium is the keenest competitor with America in this market. Labor in Belgium in this industry averages 65 cents a day, as compared with $2.30 in the United States. It costs twice as much to complete a factory here, raw materials are more, and there is no trust, but keen competition, while the European manufacturers are combined in a syndicate, regulating production and prices, and all selling through one agency, thus doing away with any competition at home and making it easy for them to sell at low prices in this country. Plate glass was first made in this country under the tariff of 1875. Before that time the cost was $1.75 to $2.25 a square foot. The price has gradually gone down, so that it was $1.21 in 1880, 99 cents in 1890, 90 cents in 1900, 46 cents in 1905, 43 cents in 1908, and 39 cents under the present tariff. That reduction was accomplished in a tariff that imposed 22½ cents per square foot on a size that it is now proposed to reduce to 12 cents. Owing to the great difference in wages it costs 28½ cents a square foot for a factory here in complete operation to produce such glass, while in Belgium, with a curtailed production, the cost is only 11 cents, and they are capable of increasing their production 46 per cent. The difference in cost is 17½ cents a square foot. Germany has a flat rate equivalent to 12.42 cents a square foot, which keeps out the Belgian product. The existing law here, on sizes not exceeding 720 square inches, does not make up the difference in cost of production here as compared with Belgium. There is a small excess on sizes over 720 square inches, but American manufacturers lose on the first two brackets and do not make enough on the last to be remunerated, while the foreigners, because of their trust agreement, make very large profits. The reduced rates proposed would place the foreign trust in control of our market. The consumer is paying only one-third or one-fourth as much for plate glass now as he did 35 years ago, when he was dependent upon foreign production. The increase in imports this year, 42 per cent for the dull months of January and February over the same months last year, shows what may be expected. The Pacific coast and Rocky Mountain trade will be lost to American producers, because the foreigner now has an advantage of 5 to 5½ cents a square foot in freight. The freight from Belgium to any Pacific coast city is 2 cents a square foot. From Pittsburgh it is 7½ cents in carload lots and 10 cents on a less quantity, and railroads have filed notice to increase that rate to 18 cents on less than a carload lot.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire if the Senator has made any calculation as to the freight from Europe to interior points in the United States—as from Antwerp to Pittsburgh, for instance.

Mr. SMOOT. The freight rate from Antwerp to New York is 19.3 cents per hundred, and from Pittsburgh to New York 18 cents. From Antwerp to New Orleans the cost is 14 cents, and from Pittsburgh it is 43 cents.

Mr. BRISTOW. I remember that. I was listening to the Senator. Now, what is the rate from Antwerp to Pittsburgh?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the exact figures, but I doubt whether it is very much more from Antwerp to Pittsburgh than from New York to Pittsburgh. I do know, Mr. President, that the freight rate from England through to Salt Lake City on crockery ware is less than the freight rate from Ohio to Salt Lake City.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is what I have been advised. Does not the Senator think that more important legislation, so far as the consumer is concerned, would be the control of freight rates rather than to undertake to control that by a duty?

Mr. SMOOT. I am simply calling attention to these freight rates and stating the advantages that the foreign manufacturer has over the American manufacturer to show under existing conditions disadvantages the American manufacturer is laboring under.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I take the liberty of stating to the Senator from Kansas that I have a table showing these rates, and I intend to use it presently in connection with an amendment I have proposed to the tariff bill, which provides that railroad or transportation companies shall not charge more for carrying products or commodities from the seaboard inland when produced in the United States than they charge for like products when imported into the United States. I intended to press that amendment with all the vigor I possess, because I regard it as one of the most unfair practices that can be instanced in all our transportation system. Now that the domestic producers are in many instances denied adequate protection, to make them pay from one-third to one-half more than their foreign rivals must pay for transportation over our own railroads is to me utterly indefensible.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not answer the specific question as to any one rate, but I have a table of that kind which I will produce when I present my amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that as at present advised I am in full sympathy with his contention on that point, and I rose to ask the Senator if that matter is not in the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is, but unfortunately the Interstate Commerce Commission has decided that rates from foreign countries into the interior points of the United States may be judged by the same rule that governs through rates in our own country, and the commission has affirmed the validity of the discriminations that I have suggested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Am I safe in assuming that the Senator from Iowa does not agree with that position?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not. I do not believe there should be any such thing as a through rate from a foreign country into the United States. When a product reaches the port of New York and must be transferred from a ship to a car, and at the same time a domestic producer in New York loads a car that is carried in the same train that takes the foreign product, I think it is a gross wrong to charge the domestic producer more than is charged his foreign competitor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with that position.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it will need a legislative declaration in order to change the practice which has been affirmed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Utah will yield for just another question, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if the same rate from the port of entry to the interior points was charged the domestic shipper from that port that the foreign shipper pays, would it not be possible now probably to ship from Pittsburgh to New York and then under the foreign rate from New York back past Pittsburgh into the interior at a less rate than the rate now from Pittsburgh or interior points?

Mr. CUMMINS. There may be some rates so adjusted as to bring about the possibility suggested by the Senator from Kansas. For instance, I have been told that rice from China or Japan can be shipped into the United States to Galveston and then to some point in the interior more cheaply than it can be shipped from Galveston to the point of destination.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I, too, have a list of freight rates that I used here, I think, two years ago in the tariff discussion, showing the rates from all foreign shipping points to almost all the large cities and distributing points in the United States. I quite agree with the Senator from Iowa in what he says in relation to the rates from foreign countries to interior points in the United States.

The freight rate from Belgium to New Orleans is only one-third as much as from Pittsburgh to the same city. Of course if it is designed to give the foreign trust, with its low-priced labor, control of our markets, the passage of this bill with reduced rates will bring about that result.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will pardon another interruption, in speaking of the freight rate from Belgium to New Orleans, of course that is a water rate, while from Pittsburgh to New Orleans it is probably a rail rate. That shows a very great advantage to the European country, but the illustration of the Senator from Iowa shows that where both rates are rail rates practically the same advantage is given to the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that fact, Mr. President.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah before he leaves this subject whether he has made any study of the trade conditions in Belgium with regard to the glass business; that is, the operations of the syndicate in control of business there, and the advantages which are given them with regard to charging reduced prices for the ware.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator was not in the Chamber when I referred to it, but the glass industry in Belgium is under one control, one management, one sale agency. Prices are made by that agency and no other price can be given, whether it be for home consumption or whether it be for export. I know in some cases, especially of iron and steel in Germany, production is controlled by cartels and agreements, and one year there was assessed against all the manufacturers $3.51 a ton for the goods that had been exported from that country, and that $3.51 a ton was divided among all the manufacturers whether they exported a pound of it or not. This industry is under just such control, and not only this industry but nearly all the chemicals manufactured in Germany are in the same condition.

EFFECT ON POTTERY.

In the production of pottery greater capital is required in proportion to the annual output than in other industries, and more labor is necessary in proportion to the capital. About 90 per cent of the cost is labor, and 66⅔ per cent goes out in pay envelopes. The wages in this industry in the United States are the highest paid and there has been no strike in 20 years. Competition here, as a result of the establishing of this industry, has reduced prices two-thirds to the consumers, and prices are lower now than ever before. American manufacturers supply less than two-fifths of the consumption. Chairman UNDERWOOD, in his speech on this subject, said: "When we see a large amount of importation as compared with the American consumption, I believe we can all concede it is competitive." When three-fifths of the consumption is of imported goods that certainly ought to be satisfactory competition without any reduction of rates to bring about larger importations. There is no trust in this business, and the average profits have been less than 6 per cent. Included in the import figures of the Government are many goods of a special character made of pottery ware, but not used by or sold to the crockery trade, which should be excluded from any comparison. The import figures are the value of the foreign product where made, and there has been a great deal of undervaluation in imports of crockery, chinaware, etc. The imports in 1884 were $4,945,813 of foreign value, and in 1912, $10,062,203. The imports from England since 1885 have decreased 20 per cent, while those from Germany have increased 410 per cent; from Austria 266 per cent; and from Japan 1,523 per cent. The selling value of the imports in 1890 was about $14,000,000, and in 1912, $28,000,000. With such a large increase in importations it is extraordinary that anyone should propose a reduction in rates, which necessarily means so much work taken away from Americans employed in this country. Twenty-six factories in Trenton, N. J., engaged in this industry have gone out of business in the last 34 years.

Of the chinaware consumed in this country there is 400 per cent more of it imported than produced here, and yet this bill reduces the rate on such ware.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to say, if any such number of factories have gone out of service in the last 34 years they have gone out of service under the beneficent reign of Republican protection, and it is the Republican Party that has blighted the industry and driven it out.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say if it had not been for that protection there would not have been any factories in New Jersey to fail, as the Senator suggests. I wish to say that if the industries in New Jersey have failed in the past, under the protection system as suggested, God help them in the future under this bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. God knows they will be quite as safe as they have been under the Republican régime.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what the people of New Jersey will think within three or four years.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is useless to bandy words over that question, but the flat of the people of New Jersey has been the condemnation of your system of protection. I can bring to this body a list of men who have been workers in the mills and shops of Trenton who will testify that they got infinitely better wages in the pottery shops under a lower tariff than under the present tariff.

Mr. SMOOT. Such a statement is so extraordinary that I doubt whether it is worthy of discussion.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator refers to the fact that in 34 years 26 factories have gone out of business, and I submit that it was under the Republican system of protection.

Mr. SMOOT. I think most of the 26 factories failed when the Democrats were in power before, in the years 1893 to 1897.

The percentage of labor cost is usually large in the manufacture of pottery wares, but differs according to the kind of ware made and whether decorated or not. About 55 per cent of the cost of white ware is paid in actual wages, while the remainder goes for materials, salaries, and other expenses, a considerable proportion of which goes to labor in producing materials. In decorated ware the largest factory in this country last year paid 62.04 per cent of the cost in wages, while 25.72 per cent went for materials in the production of which labor was paid a large percentage, and labor cost also figures in the remainder of the expenditures. In terra-cotta and other fire-clay products not so much is expended for labor, as more machinery is used, but the census returns group pottery, terra cotta, and fire-clay products together, and yet the returns show that 60 per cent of the cost of the product is paid out in wages. British reports show that from 40 per cent to 45 per cent of the finished value, according to the kind of ware made, is paid out for labor.

AMERICAN WAGES 110 PER CENT HIGHER THAN ENGLISH.

The American piecework prices average 110 per cent higher than the English, while the American wages earned are on an average over 126 per cent higher than in England, and the wages in England are higher than in other countries. The average earnings per hour for all classes of labor in the potteries of the several countries are as follows: United States, $0.2483; England, $0.11; Germany, $0.0913; Austria, $0.086; France, $0.0825; Belgium, $0.0693; Holland, $0.065; Japan, $0.025.

The New Jersey reports for 1912 give the average weekly earnings per capita of all wage earners as $13.88, while the English Government trade reports for the week ending January 25, 1913, give the average earnings there as $4.73. The ratio of males and females employed is, in New Jersey, 100 males to 20 females; in England, 100 males to 80 females; and in Germany, 100 males to 300 females.

In the United States a woman doing the same class of work as the man receives the same rate of pay, but in England and other European countries she receives approximately one-half as much. Much of the work done in this country by men is done by women in Europe, who receive correspondingly low pay. A plate maker is paid in New Jersey $27.30 and in England for the same work, $6.90; a jigger man gets $29.01 in this country, as compared with $8.42 in England, and so on with other workingmen. These figures are taken from the report made by the president of the English Pottery Manufacturers' Association at the time of the labor dispute, his purpose being to show that the potters were earning good wages, fully up to those in other lines of industry. Another English manufacturer said that the average of all of his working people was $4.88 per head per week. Labor in this country gets all and more than the entire duty assessed under the present law. In 1852 the rate imposed was 24 per cent, and in domestic competition an assortment of white tableware sold for $35.30. In 1864, in war times, with 40 per cent duty, the price was $210.75. In 1875 the price was $129.61. In 1900, with 55 per cent duty, the price had declined to $41.67, and this year, with the same duty, the price is $35.72.

EFFECT OF THE LAST DEMOCRATIC TARIFF LAW.

The reduced rates of the last Democratic tariff bill were disastrous to the pottery industry, closing a number of factories, which were never able to reopen. It resulted in a reduction of over 60 per cent in the earnings of the operatives on account of not having sufficient work to keep them employed, while there was an actual reduction of 12½ per cent in the rate of wages. In 1892 the domestic product was in value $8,800,000, and the imports were nearly the same in foreign value. In 1894, under the Wilson law, the domestic product had declined in value to $4,200,000, while the imports had declined to $6,879,437. The people did not have the money to pay for pottery, and as a result not only the domestic production, but the imports decreased vastly, but in 1896 the imports had increased to $10,695,861, while the domestic production was little more than in 1894, but in 1899, when we had a protective tariff, the domestic product had increased to $9,434,109, while the imports had declined to $7,603,959.

English earthenware has been displaced largely by the increased imports of cheap German and Japanese chinaware. These goods are used for the same purposes and take the place of earthenware. The imports from Japan were less than $200,000 worth in 1895, but had increased in 1908 to $1,452,156. That is the direction from which our workingmen have to fear increased competition from any lowering of the rate. The railroads owned by the German Government give special rates to goods for export, in some cases being about half the rate covering the same distance for home consumption.

The Democratic handbook estimates an increase in importations of over $1,600,000 foreign value. That is an underestimate, but even that much means a displacement of at least $3,200,000 to the American product. That would mean increased cost in whatever remainder was produced, because a factory working full time is working to the best advantage, whereas working slack time always leads to increased proportionate cost.

The Democratic mayor of Trenton, N. J., says that the cost of producing earthenware in the United States is 75 per cent greater than in England, while the average wages are 110 per cent higher. He says that from 60 to 66⅔ per cent of the cost of pottery ware goes into pay envelopes and that any reduction in the tariff must fall heaviest on the wage earner. That is the unbiased opinion of a leading Democrat given at a time when a political campaign was not being conducted, but when he was fearful of a destructive blow being directed against a leading industry of his home town by the party in power.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And notwithstanding the fact of the anticipated calamities which the Senator from Utah has just narrated, the Democrats, with a full knowledge of them, carried the city of Trenton a number of times.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be; and if the Democrats were the only ones to suffer I should say, let them take the consequences.

The New York importers arguing in behalf of foreign earthen and china ware state that the imports have decreased, which is not the case; and they further add that there must be "considerable relief from a reduction in the duty or importations will fall off." What a great misfortune it would be if importations should decline according to the view of these importers. They add: "There is cutthroat competition among the domestic potters which is the principal cause of their troubles." Under those circumstances, why should duties be reduced to add to this cutthroat competition, as the importers call it? There are about four times as much chinaware imported as is made here. The ground for any reduction in the duty is far from clear.

In the production of earthenware and chinaware labor is the chief cost. There is no such thing as superiority of American labor in the production of these goods, because it is a matter of life training in foreign countries, the Governments of which pay particular attention to the encouragement of the industry by maintaining Government shops and factories, where experiments and various methods are made and tried at the expense of the Government. England, France, Germany, Denmark, and Japan supply means for that purpose. But there is nothing of the kind here. American employers have to comply with employers' liability laws, State income tax, Federal excise laws, and laws requiring contribution to American standards, and so forth.

A STILL GREATER IMPORTATION OF GLOVES.

This country has long been paying large sums to Europe for gloves. There is no reason why gloves should not be manufactured here just as well as in Europe. The glove industry has gradually been increasing in this country as a result of protective duties, though they never have been sufficient to interfere with imports in some lines of that industry. From 1904 until 1909 there was an increase of $6,000,000 in the annual value of gloves and mittens of leather produced in this country. There are about 13,000 persons engaged in the industry, and it is making satisfactory progress if not interfered with by tariff-for-revenue legislation. There were nearly $8,000,000 worth of gloves imported last year, but it is proposed under this bill to reduce the duties to such an extent as to admit a large additional importation, and even to put some kinds of gloves on the free list. No leather gloves of domestic manufacture are exported, although competition is fierce, and wages in this country prevent their manufacture here to a large extent in competition with the low-paid European workers. Only one-twentieth of the fine leather gloves now used in this country are made here, the remainder being imported, and even that one-twentieth part can no longer be produced here under this proposed law without a great change in present conditions.

ALUMINUM AND ALUMINUM LEAF.

The people of Knoxville, Tenn., as shown by their Board of Commerce, Commercial Club, Manufacturers and Producers' Association, and Traffic Bureau, all in joint session, are greatly opposed to the disturbance of the duty on aluminum. This bill reduces the rates over one-half. The South has the only deposits of bauxite, while it has vast coal deposits and water power. The manufacture of this product in the last 20 years has grown from practically nothing to $40,000,000 per annum in value, while the price has declined from $4 a pound to 18 cents. It is more expensive to produce in this country than in Europe. The foreign bauxite ores are richer, while the coal and water power are in close proximty to the bauxite.

LINOLEUM, COLLARS AND CUFFS, AND HANDKERCHIEFS.

The change in the duties on linoleum from specific rates that equaled 47 per cent in 1910 to 30 per cent ad valorem seems to have been based on misleading figures furnished the House committee in its handbook and used in its report. Table oilcloths and all kinds of artificial leather were included in these statistics. It was said that $356,761 worth of linoleums and other such fabrics for the floor were exported, but practically none were exported. It was this apparent misstatement as to exports which probably led to the cut in the duty, as our Democratic friends seem to regard export trade as something in the nature of a crime to be punished. But the exports in this case were of tablecloths and things of that kind, and not floor fabrics. The production was also wrongly stated. There is no consistency in rates in this bill. The duties on finished products in many cases with free raw materials range from 25 to 35 per cent, while oilcloth and linoleum, of which the raw materials are dutiable at 20 to 25 per cent, are also made dutiable at from 20 to 35 per cent.

The existing duty on collars and cuffs is 45 cents a dozen and 15 per cent ad valorem. It is proposed under this bill to make them dutiable at 30 per cent, and when made of cotton, 25 per cent. There is no combination or trust in this business and the competition is keen. Canada and Germany impose a duty of 37½ per cent, and the duty is still greater in some other countries. The American producer should have at least as much protection, instead of discrimination against him, as is proposed in this bill. The Japanese are coming into the market as producers of these articles, and we all know what that means when the wages paid in that country are taken into consideration. Female labor is largely employed in this industry and it can not compete with Japanese and European labor under the rates now proposed.

I have pointed out but few of the objections to the bill. Indefensible as they are, I assure the Senators there are others and of just as serious a nature.

I might add that the first industries of this country to suffer from the passage of this bill will not be the great trusts and powerful corporations, but the thousands of manufacturers of small capital—the independent concerns making such goods as require the highest type of workmen and workmanship. It is this class that I am interested in seeing protected and for them I shall try to see that certain rates in this bill are amended.

For the last two years, particularly since the last election, the leading Democrats find in the past of their country since the Civil War only the record of a nation provincialized, hampered, and hobbled by legislation which has stunted its growth and kept it in industrial swaddling clothes. I have listened to and read such statements with amazement, for the marvelous, unheard of, and unknown industrial development of our country is not only known by every American, but by the people of every civilized country of the world. Notwithstanding this, pictures portrayed in speech and press of our country being dominated by selfish interests with a result of a universal robbery of the American people, though unjustifiable, have had the effect of creating distrust and unrest among a certain class of the American people. Whether for good or bad will be yet demonstrated.

I have been so proud of my country's development, her history, her people, that I never get tired of singing her praises, nor never cease thanking my God that I was born an American. It is natural that I should be jealous of her every interest. I am interested in maintaining her present standard of living and preventing, if possible, her working people from coming in direct competition with the unfortunate working people of less favored countries. I have visited the leading industrial countries of the world. I have seen there the value placed upon human labor. I have seen the poverty, the squalor, and suffering to which the laborer is subjected. I have seen the effect of such upon the men, women, and children of those countries, and I have made a vow that no act of mine shall ever place an American workman in the position of having to compete with such conditions. There is only one way to prevent it, and that is by a protective tariff, and therefore I have been, and am still, a protectionist without qualification.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if there is no Senator who desires to continue the discussion—and I assume by no one attempting to take the floor that that is true——

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] had intended to speak this afternoon, and, unless he thinks it is too late, I think he will probably now proceed. I will ask the Senator from Idaho if he cares to proceed this afternoon?

Mr. BORAH. I should prefer not to proceed unless there is no other way in which the Senate can occupy its time. I can speak if it is desired, but I prefer not to do so now.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as there is no Senator over here who desires to speak, unless there is some Senator on the other side who wishes to take the floor, I think we had just as well proceed with the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, objection has been raised by certain Senators on this side that the bill ought not to be read for amendments until the statistics, which are being prepared, which I understand will soon be ready, are on the desks of Senators.

Mr. SIMMONS. They will be ready to-morrow morning, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. But if there is any Senator who is ready to speak—and I understand the Senator from Idaho could go on this afternoon—I do not think we ought to lose the next two hours.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Idaho—if the Senator from New Hampshire will pardon me—is ready to go on.

Mr. BORAH. I am perfectly willing to go ahead if it is the desire of the Senator in charge of the bill that I shall do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no object in the world, except that I am very anxious to push this matter as rapidly as possible without inconveniencing Senators, and I know the Senator from New Hampshire is in entire sympathy with me in that view.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in much greater sympathy with the Senator than the Senator was with us during the consideration of the last tariff bill, which was debated here three months; so that we do not feel in a temper, or I do not, to be urged very much in this matter, no matter from what source the urging comes. We are going to conduct this debate, so far as this side is concerned, as rapidly as possible. There will be a Senator ready to speak to-morrow. If the Senator from Idaho does not speak to-day, there will be two Senators ready to-morrow, and another Senator will be ready to speak the next day. As I have said, I think we ought not to be urged very much in the matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire does not understand me as desiring unduly to urge anyone at this time to speak who is not prepared to do so; but I understood the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to get up and announce that he would go on this afternoon.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Idaho, however, stated that he would prefer not to go on until to-morrow, and I recall that in all previous debates such a statement has been sufficient for us to yield and to allow the Senator to proceed at a time when it best suited his convenience.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is only a little after 4 o'clock now, and this is the cool part of the afternoon. Of course, however, if the Senator from Idaho does not desire to go on, I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I hope it will be left entirely with the Senator from Idaho to do whatever he prefers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is right.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, perhaps the discussion of that portion of the bill which I propose to take up might very well have been left to a later hour, until such time as the provision with reference to the income tax was more directly before the Senate. But in view of the desire of those who have the bill in charge to occupy the time, I can perhaps say as well this afternoon, upon one phase of the subject at least, what I desire to say as at any other time. I am in sympathy with the desire to complete this bill, or rather, I should say, to vote upon the bill, as I understand it is already completed. I am willing, therefore, to proceed at this time, although I had expected not to speak until later in the week.

Mr. President, we have now succeeded in adopting an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which removes all embarrassment with reference to enacting a proper income-tax law. Heretofore whatever legislation has been had, has been had with the knowledge upon the part of those advocating it that the constitutionality of such a law was or would be involved. Certainly that has been true for the last few years; but we are now in a position where we may consider the question of an income tax and what it should be with a view of making it a permanent part of our national tax system. I recognize in the beginning that it is no easy task to frame a satisfactory income-tax measure.

When Mr. Gladstone was taunted and criticized with maintaining an income tax in times of peace, his reply was, "If the country is content to be governed at a cost of from sixty to sixty-two million pounds, or even sixty-four million pounds, a year, there is no reason why it should not be governed without the aid of an income tax, provided Parliament so will it to be; but if it be the pleasure of the country to be governed at a cost of from seventy to seventy-five million pounds a year, it must be governed by the aid of a considerable income tax. That," said the premier, "in my judgment, is the whole case."

Congress is often criticized for its extravagance and must share the responsibility for our increased expenditures. But no one knows better than Congressmen, from correspondence and from numerous requests to support different measures, that the country itself is not averse to heavy expenditures. Everyone is in favor of curtailing appropriations except as to those matters in which he is interested, and as to those matters he looks upon even increased appropriations as parsimonious. Congress will never deal successfully with the question of expenditures nor adopt any plan of permanent worth and value as to economy until the country itself is aroused and joins in an intelligent effort to bring about that result.

Those who look upon an income tax as a war tax—as a tax to be reserved for great national emergencies—will regret to see the United States coming to its use in time of peace. Those who believe that the income tax should constitute a permanent part of our national tax necessary in order to equalize the burdens of government will regret that even with its adoption so much must still be collected by taxes from other sources. In other words, if the reduction of unnecessary expenditures was to accompany the adoption of this tax, if all taxes were to be reduced and yet a proper portion of that which yet remained to be collected could be collected from those more able to respond, it would be a matter of congratulation. But if this tax is to be levied and those now bearing the great weight of taxation are to find no relief, if their burden is to remain the same while more money is simply gathered for waste and extravagance, it will be a national misfortune.

In 1891-92 our appropriations for that Congress reached the sum of a billion dollars. That fact gave rise to considerable discussion for a while and became a subject of criticism by the opposition party—one of the distinct issues of the political campaign following. We have now reached the point where we appropriate more than a billion dollars for a single session. At the close of this last session it was found that the appropriations and obligations upon the Treasury amounted to the stupendous sum of $1,175,604,134. Thus, regardless of which political party we find in power, regardless of party pledges, regardless of the pressure with which these things rest upon those least able to bear up under them, our expenditures increase, not in steady and uniform harmony with the law of natural increase, but through irregular leaps and bounds characteristic of recklessness and waste, of unconcern for the individual welfare and indifference to the public interest. And it would seem that the saturnalia has just begun, only the fringe of the revelry have we thus far witnessed. We are beginning to feel already that we should build embassies and increase salaries, that we should impound, coordinate, and unify the waters of our streams and rivers, that we are to construct a vast system of public highways, that we are to replenish and reforest our hills and mountains, that we are to provide for old-age pensions, and thus for things legitimate and things unnecessary, for things real and things fantastical, we are to have an increased demand for revenue.

Mr. President, this spirit of extravagance is not confined to the National Government nor to our own country. It is nation-wide and world-wide. In 1870, if my memory serves me correctly as to the date, Mr. Gladstone budgeted for £70,000,000; and in doing so he felt called upon to inveigh against the great extravagance of his country, and the effect of extravagance both upon the Government and upon the people. His great budget speech upon that occasion is noted for his remarkable presentation of the effect of extravagance upon a people aside from the mere question of the pecuniary loss involved. To-day England budgets for £195,000,000, and with each returning year it becomes a serious question, and a question of some nicety for the chancellor of the exchequer to ascertain from what part of the goose he can pluck a few more feathers with the least possible noise. It has become in that great country a study, a science, as to how to apply the taxes in order to get from the English people sufficient revenue to meet the ever-increasing expenditures of the nation.

It will be said, of course, that England has grown in population and in wealth, and that the increase of expenditures must be expected to keep pace to some extent with the other increases. But her increase of expenditures has far outrun her increase of population or wealth, proportionately speaking. In 1870 the tax of the English people was £2 8s. 3d. per head. To-day with her increased population it is double that, or £4 6s. 3d. per head.

In our own country, if we look about, we find the same condition as to public expenditures in both city and State affairs. In 1907 the expenditures of the State government of New York were $58,000,000. Five years thereafter they had increased to the sum of $84,000,000. In 1907 the appropriations for the city of New York were $273,000,000. Five years thereafter they had increased to $355,000,000. I do not choose New York because it is an exception or for invidious comparison, but because the data from that State seem more recent and accurate. Totaling the county, State, and National expenditures of this country, they increase by two and a half times about every 12 or 15 years.

I make these statements with reference to expenditures in order that I may apply a little later the question of how we are to meet these expenditures, and from what source we are to receive the means by which to take care of them.

It has always been counted a singular triumph of statesmanship to find a new source of revenue—to tap some reservoir into which industry and frugality had stored their gleanings. Pitt and Peel and Gladstone, Turgot and Necker, Hamilton, Gallatin, and Chase, with varying degrees of success, won renown in this field of statecraft. But he will be an exceptional leader and financier indeed, rare among all the benefactors of men, who while opening up new sources of revenue finds a way to close down others, who while distributing more equitably the burdens of taxation finds a way to provide against the ever-increasing and stupendous weight of the burden as a whole. I pause long enough to say that so far there is no change in sight. We are treading the old paths, finding new sources of revenue, and taxing the old sources up to the limit. There will be no relief for those who ought to have relief under the present plan unless there are changes elsewhere. While we will have an income tax, the people of this country will experience no lifting of the present weight. We will simply have found a new source of revenue to feed our insatiable, unconscionable, and scandalous desire to spend money.

For instance, we find that under the revenue law in force in 1912 we collected from customs $311,000,000. I am taking these figures from the report which accompanied this bill to the House. We collected from internal revenue $293,000,000, making, in all, the sum of $604,000,000. Of course we had at that time no income tax. Under this bill, according to the report which accompanied the bill to the House, it is estimated that the customs receipts will be $267,000,000 and the internal-revenue receipts $322,000,000, or a total of $589,000,000. That is some $15,000,000 less than the amount collected in 1912. Adding to that the estimate of the income tax of $70,000,000, we have $659,000,000 to be collected from these sources; or, in other words, an excess of $55,000,000 over the sums collected in 1912. So our expenditures climb more rapidly than all schemes for securing new revenue. I do not believe that we are ever to have economy in government again unless the people themselves become thoroughly aroused upon the subject. This, in my opinion, is the first argument for an income tax. Extravagance is an American disease, permeating and enervating the whole body politic. Will an income tax educate us to consider of our waste, not educate us into parsimoniousness, but to slow down our indiscriminate and shameless waste?

We must expect a certain increase of expenditures. The obligations and duties of government are becoming more complex and multifarious, and I presume they will be more and more so; but the waste and extravagance which accompany legitimate expenditures have reached the point where it is conservative to call it a scandal. Take, for instance, the improvement of our rivers and harbors—a most necessary and legitimate outlay—yet the waste, the utter waste, which accompanies this legitimate expenditure is astounding. In many of our departments here in Washington they use the money saved by the industry and frugality and often drawn through personal sacrifice from the citizen as if they had a shop in one corner of the department where it was manufactured. I am not talking now about theft and graft such as when discovered may be the subject of criminal prosecution. I am speaking of that utter disregard of the value of money, of what it costs in labor and management to secure it, of that duplication and loose and regardless expenditure which in its effect is far worse and far more injurious to the people than mere petty pilfering by which we are sometimes justly stirred. Now, so long as this waste and extravagance go on, so long as these enormous expenditures continue, whether we have a protective tariff or a tariff for revenue or whether we have a spotted and incongruous mixture of both, we are going to have an income tax. It is inevitable and it is necessary.

It would not be so bad if all this spending were but a pecuniary loss. But waste and extravagance in public expenditure as in private expenditure, the collecting of more money from the people than is necessary for a just and economical government, means enfeeblement; it means moral disintegration; it means in the end dissatisfaction with the government. It means social unrest, disorder, pauperism, crime, anarchy, and revolution. That is what it has meant in every free government where it has obtained, and, proud and self-sufficient as we are, we are not yet exempt from the laws of economy or of morals, the violation of which laws have brought about the disintegration of other governments. Let us hope, therefore, that when the taxgatherer's hand is uncovered, when we see it as it reaches out for these enormous sums, that we will be aroused to ask, What are you going to do with all this money? Let us hope that when they call for a part of our income we will beget a system of strict accounting and strict accountability and that both the people and the representatives, the representatives so because the people demand it, will be vigilant to know what becomes of the money which is taken openly from our savings. I have always believed that the income tax would be an educator for public economy.

But if it does not prove so, Mr. President, then more and more must this great burden be put upon the large incomes of the country. Especially must it be laid with an ever-increasing weight upon the more idle incomes, the inactive, the settled and fixed incomes. It is not possible to continue to raise this whole amount, constantly increasing, through taxes upon consumption, and if it were possible it is entirely unjust to do so. I have no doubt that were this Government economically administered you could raise all the taxes necessary and never vary the rule of fair protection to those industries which for the prosperity of the country ought to be protected. But it is wholly impracticable under our system to collect all that we want under which those of limited means pay far more than their proportion. Our luxuries of government must be taken care of according to the ability to pay and not according to our necessities.

There is one class of expenditures which ought to be very interesting in these days, in view of the discussion which is constantly going on in regard to the era of universal peace, which seems to be so near at hand in the minds of many people. For the last 15 or 20 years there has been, upon the part of influential and benevolent people, advocacy of universal peace; and I doubt not that great and marked progress has been made. But the period in which we have been advocating with great zeal and earnestness the doctrine of universal peace is the period characterized above all others in the history of the world by the increase of expenditures for armament. They have grown in proportion to the earnestness and zeal of the advocates of universal peace.

In 1911 the expenditure for this purpose upon the part of Germany was $318,000,000; upon the part of France $270,000,000; upon the part of Great Britain $341,000,000; upon the part of the United States $282,000,000. Last year, 1912, our expenditures for wars, past and anticipated, amounted to $383,000,000. The sum total of expenditures for armament during the year 1911 upon the part of all the civilized nations of the earth was $2,263,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the amount that was spent by the United States include the pension appropriation?

Mr. BORAH. The last figures do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The pension appropriation is included?

Mr. BORAH. That is what I had reference to when I said "wars, past and anticipated." The last figures did include that.

So, notwithstanding the fact that we anticipate the somewhat hasty fulfillment of the dream of universal peace, it would seem that there is to be no relief so far as expenditures are concerned. While we are to be relieved, it is to be hoped, of the horrors of war, we are not to escape the misery superinduced by the deadening drain which comes from heavy expenditures.

A short time ago the German Emperor held his silver jubilee. During that occurrence people very generally throughout the world accorded him unusual credit for the efforts which he had put forth in behalf of this great movement. If the public press quotes the Emperor correctly, he stated that he hoped his reign would be characterized in history by the efforts which had been put forth in behalf of this cause. Yet while the German Emperor was celebrating his silver jubilee, and the world was paying proper regard to him for what he had done, the Imperial Parliament of Germany increased the expenditure for armament this year over the previous year $250,000,000. The significant feature of it is, so far as this discussion is concerned, that the increase of $250,000,000 was not secured by raising the percentage of taxation upon the great incomes of Germany, by raising the rate a little higher at the top among those who could well pay for this luxury without feeling any discomfort or inconvenience. Instead, it was raised by lowering the exemption from $2,500 to $1,250, thereby placing the increased burden of $250,000,000 almost entirely upon the moderately well-to-do people of Germany whose incomes range between $1,250 and $2,500 a year.

I have spoken, Mr. President, of the income tax as a teacher of economy. I understand perfectly that it will be said, and that it is said, that unless it applies to all it will not have this effect. As I am going to urge a higher instead of a lower exemption, I understand also the charge of inconsistency which will be brought against me. But it is all answered, to my mind, by the fact that the majority of the people are paying more than their proportion of the taxes; that they fully understand this and feel the burden; that they are altogether anxious to assist in curtailing expenditures; and that our spirit of extravagance in government is supported in a very large degree by those who are extravagant in private life—those who never notice the tax upon consumption and can only be aroused by curtailment of the incomes with which they satisfy their own extravagance. I have watched very closely for several years when a proposal was made for increased expenditures in some line of appropriations, and I have never yet observed any marked criticism of any extent from the source which has so much to do with molding public opinion in this country. On the other hand, my observation leads me to believe that the men of small means in this country are thoroughly interested in the question, and are willing at all times to assist in curtailing expenditures.

In discussing the income tax, the question is, How are we going to equalize these burdens, which constantly increase, as between consumption and property?

Or, rather, the question is, Are we willing to equalize these burdens between taxes on that which we want and that which we have?

The beginning of an income tax is the question of exemption. I am quite aware of the general, almost universal, feeling that the exemption in this bill as it came from the House was too high. We can not discuss the question of exemption without bringing to its consideration, however, the question of who pays the other taxes—the indirect taxes of the country. In other words, if all revenues were raised by direct taxation, everyone would be in favor of a very low exemption in an income tax.

Speaking for myself, if we raised even the greater portion of our revenue by direct taxation, I should be in favor of an exemption of from eight hundred to a thousand dollars, if not lower, because everyone should pay taxes. It makes better citizens, and it is a duty which every citizen owes to his Government, to share in the burden of maintaining and supporting the Government.

In our country everyone does pay taxes. My contention is that the man of limited means pays now more than his proportion of indirect taxes. As soon as this bill came into the House there was a general criticism throughout the country that the exemption was class legislation. As I am opposed to the lowering of the exemption as it stood in the House, I desire for a few moments to direct attention to that subject and to that feature of the bill.

A distinguished leader in finance, making a speech in the city of New York a few days after the bill came into the House, said:

> I regard as the most dangerous at the present time the disposition of legislative bodies to pass laws which are calculated to produce classes. I think, for instance, the proposition to assess the incomes of men who have incomes of more than $4,000 and exempting the incomes of those who receive less than $4,000 per annum is one of the worst things that has ever happened in this country, because it immediately arrays 97 per cent of the people against 3 per cent of the people.

The distinguished financier seemed to omit entirely from his consideration the fact that seven-eighths of the revenues of the country, as they will be raised by this bill, will be raised by a tax levied upon consumption. I think I have the figures here.

According to the estimates which accompanied the bill to the House, we are to realize from customs $267,000,000, and from internal revenue $322,000,000, or a total of $589,000,000. That, according to the statement of the report, is the tax which is levied upon consumption—the tax which you must pay when you consume that which you want and which you must have. The income tax, under the exemption of $4,000, as against this $589,000,000, amounts in the estimate to $70,000,000. So we are placing upon consumption, through collecting indirect taxes, a burden of $589,000,000 and upon the wealth and incomes of the country, the great property holdings of the country, the sum of $70,000,000.

Mr. President, it seems to me that in view of the fact that the wealth of the country, according to the exemption as it came into the House, was to pay but one-eighth of the taxes of the country, there was no real necessity for yielding to the demand to decrease the amount of the exemption. Some time ago there was an estate probated in one of the cities of the United States, and it probated for $87,000,000. Another estate was probated, and it probated for the amount of $100,000,000. The day laborer working for these estates which probated such sums realized during the year an income of perhaps from $800 to $1,000, and out of that income of a thousand dollars it is perfectly safe to say that he paid not 2 per cent, not 4 per cent, not 6 per cent, but 10 or 20 per cent in the way of taxes. In my judgment there is not a laborer working in the mines of the great financier who complains of this as class legislation that does not pay out of his income yearly as taxes twice the proportion that would be charged against the financier's income by the bill, even if he had an income of $100,000 a year and took the highest rate.

In the report which accompanied the bill to the House, no doubt drawn by the brilliant leader of the majority in that body, I find this statement:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, the Government derived $311,000,000 from tariff taxation and $293,000,000 from internal revenue proper. These taxes rest solely on consumption. The amount each citizen contributes is governed not by his ability to pay tax, but by his consumption of the articles taxed. It requires as many yards of cloth to clothe and as many ounces of food to sustain the day laborer as the largest holder of invested wealth, yet each pays into the Federal Treasury a like amount of taxes upon the food he eats, while the former at present pays a larger rate of tax upon his cheap suit of woolen clothing than the latter upon his costly suit. The result is that the poorer classes bear the chief burden of our customhouse taxation.

The tax upon incomes is levied according to ability to pay, and it would be difficult to devise a tax fairer or cheaper of collection.

I am not going to stop to discuss the proposition, which always comes up in the discussion of a tariff for protection and a tariff for revenue, as to what proportion of the tax levied the consumers of the country pay. But this much we know: That upon consumption there is levied $589,000,000 and upon the property of the country, the wealth of the country, there is levied $70,000,000. Under those circumstances, is it necessary to reduce the amount of exemption from $4,000 to $3,000? Or is it not, according to the rule of equity and equalization of burdens, perfectly fair and perfectly proper to lay this other tax, $70,000,000, upon those who can pay it out of their incomes and suffer no inconvenience or lessening of comfort? Would not the man with less income pay fully as much tax proportionately as the man with an income in excess of $4,000?

Therefore, if I had my way about it, I should place this exemption back at $4,000, and then make the exceptions which were made with reference to the dependent wife and children. When you have done that, you have given to a man in this country no more than it is necessary for him to have in order to feed and clothe and educate his children or his family. When you have done that you have gone not a step beyond a fair distribution according to ability between the man below the exemption and the man who is so fortunate as to be above it. When you take a few hundred dollars from a man who has an income of ten or twenty or thirty thousand dollars, you diminish not at all his comforts; but in so far as you draw from a man's income that is not in excess of four or five thousand dollars, you reduce the possibility of his doing that which he ought to do for the comfort and the education of his family.

I take the liberty of quoting from some who have given much study to this question and whose statements bear out, it seems to me, my line of thought. Prof. Seligman says:

Under existing conditions in the United States, the burdens of taxation, taking them all in all, are becoming more unequally distributed and the wealthier classes are bearing a gradually smaller share of the public burden. Something is needed to restore the equilibrium; and this something can scarcely take any form but that of an income tax.

Mr. Gladstone in discussing the question of exemption, as usual in discussing a subject, covered the whole subject matter. While fixing the exemption lower than I contend it should be fixed here he calls particular attention to the fact that the indirect taxes which bear most heavily upon the poor were being eliminated. Then speaking particularly of the small income he says:

One circumstance which makes the tax particularly galling to this class of taxpayers, perhaps, is that the charge is more accurately and fully levied in their case than in the case of many wealthier persons assessed in respect of trades and professions. As a general rule, the concerns of those who possess only these small incomes are more transparent, so to speak, than the private affairs of their richer fellow countrymen. Every neighbor can see through them. They may be said to live in glass houses. Deception, if they were disposed to deceive, would be for them almost wholly impossible. They pay the tax fully and rigidly; and they see or they surmise that many persons above them in the world are not and can not be always brought to account with equal strictness. * * * In principle there is no injustice in requiring any man to pay income tax who is able to pay it.

William P. Fessenden in 1864 said:

The adoption of a scale increasing the rates of taxation as they rise in amount, though unequal in one sense, can not be considered oppressive or unjust inasmuch as the ability to pay increases in much more than arithmetical proportion as the amount of income exceeds the limit of reasonable necessity.

John Sherman in 1882 declared:

The public mind is not yet prepared to apply the code of a genuine revenue reform, but years of further experience will convince the whole body of our people that a system of national taxes which rests the whole burden of taxation on consumption and not one cent on property or incomes is intrinsically unjust. While the expenses of the National Government are largely caused by the protection of property, it is but right to require property to contribute to their payment. It will not do to say that each person consumes in proportion to his means. This is not true. Everyone can see that the consumption of the rich does not bear the same relation to the consumption of the poor that the income of the one does to the wages of the other. * * * As wealth accumulates this injustice in the fundamental basis of our system will be felt and forced upon the attention of Congress.

But, furthermore, Mr. President, we levied a tax two or three years ago known as the corporation tax, and that tax is often considered as a tax upon wealth, a tax upon the property of the country. The fact is that the larger portion of that tax upon corporate income is paid by the consumers of the country precisely as the other tax upon consumption. When you levied a tax upon the income of corporations in 1898, upon refining companies, tobacco companies, and oil companies, it was ascertained, after the tax had been on there two and a half years, that we had collected from the incomes of these corporations $211,000,000, and it was said that those great corporations had responded in a patriotic way to the call of the Government at a time when it was at war and had paid out of their treasuries $211,000,000 for the purpose of assisting the Government. Yet when an investigation followed it was afterwards ascertained upon what seems to be entirely accurate information that those corporations paid no part of the $211,000,000, but that by the raising of the price of the articles and the decrease of the size of the packages they had transferred the entire $211,000,000 to the consumers in this country, and they paid the tax in advanced prices instead of its being paid out of the earnings of the corporations.

In my judgment that will prove to be true with reference to the present corporation tax so far as that tax is levied upon the incomes of those corporations which are operating in a field where competition has been destroyed. The vast corporations who control in a monopolistic way certain industries and have the power to fix prices will transfer this tax to the consumer by the raising of the prices, precisely as they did in 1898, while the corporations operating in the field of competition where they can not fix prices and control the price of the articles will pay the tax. Those corporations are composed of people, however, of small means in this country, who are already paying more than their proportion of the taxes of the country. But the monopolistic power represented by the corporations operating in a field where competition has been destroyed, those whom we ought to reach, whom it is our duty to reach, will transfer this tax in its entirety to those who are already bowed under the weight of taxation.

An income tax, Mr. President, is only justifiable, in my judgment, in time of peace for the purpose of equalizing the burdens of taxation, and if it does not serve the purpose of equalizing the burden there is no reason for its imposition. The only way that you can equalize between consumption and property is to keep the exemption up so that the exemption will measure that income which has already been taxed by reason of tax which the owner pays out for indirect taxes and then by graduation.

This bill, in my judgment, ought to retain the exemption which was placed there by the House with the additions which have been placed here for those who are dependent upon the income payer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very much interested in the Senator's discussion of this part of the tariff bill. I had an impression that we might well reduce the exemption which is carried in the House bill, and yet my mind is open on that subject. The Senator quotes approvingly Mr. Gladstone's declaration in reference to an income tax. Yet the exemption in Great Britain is only £160 a year, $800. So Mr. Gladstone or the British Parliament did not seem to think it desirable to put a high exemption in their legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, Great Britain raises far more tax by direct taxation than we do, and it is supposed to raise less by indirect taxation. The proportionate amount I have not with me, although I have seen the statement of late made by Mr. Lloyd George in his last budget speech. If my memory serves me correctly, the amounts raised by customs revenue and other internal taxation and by direct taxation were about equal; that is to say, the amount raised by customs was about equal to that raised by direct taxation, and the amount raised by internal revenue the same as that raised by indirect taxation.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, if the Senator will permit me further, while Great Britain has very little exemption, so far as the income tax is concerned, Great Britain taxes the poor people of her country to an extent that we do not, by imposing a duty on tea, on spices, and on various other substances that every poor person in the Kingdom must consume.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask the Senator from Idaho if it be not true that by far the larger part of the revenue raised by England through import duties is raised by taxes upon commodities the consumption of which may very well be diminished? It is true that England does levy import duties upon things that she does not produce, but I think the overwhelming proportion of the revenue of England that is raised by import duties is upon such things as spirits, tobacco, and other articles of that character. There is comparatively little of her revenue, as I remember it, raised by a tax on the consumption of things that people really need to use.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not remember just the amount at all of the two, but that is my recollection of the division in England.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a fact that England has a tax upon tea and coffee and spices, which I apprehend are necessary, and the poor men in this country—I do not know how it may be abroad—insist that tobacco is just as much a necessary as bread, and England taxes tobacco.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, during the last year there were 425,000 adult people died in England. Out of those 425,000 there were 355,000 who died without any property worth mentioning. They were practically paupers at the grave. Two hundred and ninety-two persons out of the 425,000 owned 492,000,000 worth of property.

Mr. President, that condition of affairs may exist for some time in Great Britain, but that condition of affairs could not exist for any considerable length of time in this country and this form of government be maintained. The minority with its wealth and the majority with its political power would ultimately clash. Four hundred and twenty-five thousand people died and 355,000 of them were paupers, and 292 people owned most of the property which stood for all. Now, we can not equalize fortunes by taxation, but we can equalize burdens in accordance with ability to meet them, and in that way lift the weight to some extent from the poor in the struggle of life. And when I see our great wealth bearing only seventy million of this tremendous tax, I can but believe that a mistake was made in lowering the exemption. I would rather raise the percentage above, and I would feel that I was acting fairly between fellow countrymen in doing so.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I was interested in the suggestion of the Senator that he thought the exemption should not have been decreased as it was by the Senate committee. I want to inquire if he does not think that the amount collected could have been increased better by increasing the percentage as the income advanced. I think that where the income is more than $100,000 the per cent of tax ought to be very much greater than the bill proposes. It seems to me the defect is more in the smallness of the levy on excessive incomes than in the amount of the levy on smaller incomes.

Mr. BORAH. I think there might be an increase in percentage on the higher incomes, but I am opposed to taxing an income which has once been heavily taxed out of all proportion. When a person has an income in this country of $3,000 a year he has paid all the tax in proportion to the amount of property which he owns, in my judgment, which he should pay to the National Government until those who are above him have responded corresponding to the proportion of property which they own. If a man has an income in this country of $3,000 a year, it is perfectly safe to say that he has paid much more proportionately out of his income to the National Government than a man who has an income of $100,000 upon which he has paid only 4 per cent.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will yield, I agree absolutely to that statement; but it seems to me that there are thousands and hundreds of thousands who have an income of a thousand dollars a year who pay just as much tax under the present system as the man with an income of $3,000 a year. The consumption tax levied on the man with a thousand dollars income is practically the same as the consumption tax levied on the man with an income of $3,000. It seems to me that instead of putting the exemption higher we should increase the per cent more rapidly. I think a 10 per cent tax on $100,000 is a far less excessive tax according to ability to pay than one-half of 1 per cent on an income of $3,000. It seems to me the great weakness is in the small amount that is levied as the income becomes far beyond the necessities of the individual.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is another feature of that proposition which is presented. The small property holder with a small income has all his property in sight. He practically lives in a glass house, so far as the tax collector is concerned. He pays the entire per cent upon all the property that he has, seventy-five or eighty times out of a hundred, while the man with a vast income and a great estate will not pay upon anything like all the property he has. For instance, a short time ago there were some seven estates probated in this country and they amounted in probating them to $215,000,000. They had paid taxes upon $3,000,000 before the death of the parties. I have a statement here from a report made by the tax commission in a State of the East. A part of that report reads as follows:

> First. That the assessed value of all personal property is (in New York State) approximately $800,000,000.
> Second. That the value of all personal property owned by citizens of this State is not less than $25,000,000,000.
> Third. That the richer a person grows the less he pays in relation to his property or income.
> Fourth. Experience has shown that under the present system personal property practically escapes taxation for either local or State purposes.

That report is in harmony with what we know to be the general practice, that the larger the estate the less fully do they give in their property to the tax collector and the more difficult it is to discover it, because it consists of that kind of property which can not be ascertained or located by the assessor as can the property which is ordinarily owned by the man of small means.

When you take into consideration, Mr. President, the greater proportion which the man of limited means pays naturally, because it does not make any difference how poor he is he must eat and he must clothe himself; when you take into consideration the ease with which this tax is transferred by raising prices and raising rent; when you take into consideration how difficult it is to locate the entire extent of the large estate; when you take into consideration that upon consumption there is levied $589,000,000 and upon all the wealth together only $70,000,000, it does seem to me that we can afford to start our exemption to our income system in this country at not less than $4,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not want, in submitting a question to the Senator, to indicate any dissent from what he is saying. I quite agree with him as to the justice of an income tax, but the Senator has said several times that we were imposing a tax of $589,000,000 per annum upon consumption and $70,000,000 upon property or wealth, and in answer to a question put by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] the Senator from Idaho contrasted unfavorably to this country the taxes which were being paid in England, showing that the proportion of tax imposed upon wealth or property, as compared with the tax upon consumption, was greater in England than in this country.

I ask the Senator whether or not he has considered in that connection the dual form of government which we have in this country and which does not exist in England? It is true that the Federal Government imposes a tax which the Senator has indicated, $589,000,000 upon consumption, and proposes to impose this $70,000,000, if that is what it will amount to, upon wealth. But while the Federal Government is doing that, and while this disproportion between the two kinds of tax so far as the Federal Government is concerned is very striking and very great, we must remember that the States are also imposing taxes, and in the various States is it not true that what the Senator is saying is practically the reverse—that the States impose very little upon consumption, but their taxes are imposed in the main upon property or upon wealth? Taking the two governments together, does not the proportion more nearly reach that which is assessed by the single government in England?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no doubt our dual form of government has something to do with the question of what will be a proper distribution of taxes as between consumption and property when the National Government comes to levy a tax, but the Senator must take into consideration that the tax which is levied by the State is a tax which is very easily transferred to the consumer upon the part of the property holders in many instances, the same as in the National Government.

When you take into consideration, in the second place, that we have nevertheless a National Government to support, and that if the property of the country belongs to a very limited few, as the speaker said here whom I was quoting from awhile ago, about 3 per cent of those over $4,000, then if we adopt the rule laid down by Adam Smith, which all profess to follow and none obey—that is, to tax according to the ability to pay—they should respond to the National Government the same as the State government. You can not get away from the proposition, in my judgment, that you have to come to the time when you are to levy the extravagant and the great expenditures more and more upon the property of this country. These vast fortunes have got to take care of a large portion of this expenditure, and there is no reason under any fair rule of taxation why they should not do so. Consumption is bearing more than its share and more than it will long consent to bear. And this is not class legislation; it is seeking to equalize in accordance with the ability to respond.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Idaho that the condition to which he calls attention in England is deplorable. I think that one of the serious menaces to this country to-day consists in the vast accumulation of money in the hands of a few people, and I think it is a condition that ought to be remedied; but while I agree with most of what the Senator from Idaho has said, I am not quite prepared to agree with his contention that the exemption ought to be increased rather than lowered. The thought in my mind, to which I hope the Senator will address himself, is that by imposing an income tax upon large incomes exclusively we shall be taxing a limited number of people, a very small percentage of the people, and a vast majority of the people, so far as that tax is concerned, will be escaping taxation.

The Senator has adverted to the extravagance of our expenditures, and in that he is quite correct, but if the Senator's view is carried out and the income tax is imposed upon only a few of the people of the country, will not that have a tendency to increase extravagance, because a vast majority of the people escaping that tax would have no personal interest, so far as that tax was concerned, in keeping down expenditures? In other words, to the extent of that tax the funds would be supplied by very few of the people, and their expenditure in a popular Government like ours would be directed by the vast number of the people who would not contribute to the tax. It seems to me—and I submit that for the consideration of the Senator from Idaho—that the suggestion which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has made is probably the better way to deal with it—not to permit incomes above, say, a thousand dollars or twelve hundred dollars or fifteen hundred dollars to escape all taxation, but to put a relatively small tax upon incomes of that size, and then to graduate it, making it 2 per cent, 3 per cent, 4 per cent, or whatever amount may be thought necessary. In that way you would enlist the interest of all or of a very large number of the people in the expenditures of your revenues instead of, as under the system which the Senator from Idaho proposes, a very few.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if we were to levy all our taxes by direct taxation the argument of the Senator from Utah would be very conclusive to my mind, but we are not doing that, and we are never going to do it. There will never be a time in this country when we shall not have a vast tax upon consumption. So long as we have it, taking into consideration the means by which all taxes naturally seek the low man, I do not think that we are justified in lowering the exemption. I have already referred to the first suggestion of the Senator as to feeding extravagance by the exempting the many and do not feel that I should travel over that ground again. I recognize the strength of that argument, but believe that it is fully met in a previous part of the remarks.

Under no system yet devised can you sufficiently control the incidence of the tax to protect the low man. Do the very best we can, we can not impose upon property the tax which we seek to impose. By transfer, by shifting, by withholding, the tax finally reaches with unproportionate weight the man who has no one else to whom it can be transferred.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, that is all true, but the difficulty is that with an indirect tax, a tax upon consumption, the various individuals who pay it pay it, so to speak, without realization, whereas the direct tax comes immediately out of the pocket, as, for instance, a tax upon the homestead or upon the tangible property or upon the income. Then every individual knows, and knows immediately, that he is paying the tax. The result is that there is not the same objection to expenditures from individuals who are paying a tax in an intangible way, in an indirect way, who do not realize it, that there would be if the tax were paid in the direct way.

Mr. BORAH. It has been said by some writer upon taxation that so long as you can conceal the hand of the taxgatherer you can tax people to impoverishment, if not to starvation; and, in my judgment, that is one of the arguments in favor of an income tax; but we will never have the influence of the vast wealth of this country in favor of economy in the great appropriations of the country if we continue to collect seven-eighths of the taxes of the country from those who are practically without income. Let the wealth of this country start a campaign against extravagance and I fear not that men of small means will be sufficiently spurred on by the tax which they already pay.

If you go to a man and say to him, "I want $5,000 out of your income for this year," he will want to know what you are going to do with it, and it immediately arouses interest upon his part; but if you quietly charge the amount up with his meals or his clothing, and so forth, you may continue to tax without practically any resistance upon the part of the taxpayer at all. I believe that is one of the great arguments in favor of an income tax.

Now, while it would seem that the laborer or the man of small means needs this spur of an uncovered tax in order to interest him in economy, yet he feels and knows the pressure of the indirect tax much more keenly than the man of means. The man of means does not stop to figure the slight raises on goods which he buys, but the man who must sit down and figure how it is possible to cover each month's expenses with his income realizes very quickly the slightesst raise and immediately makes inquiry. And while too often he is helpless, let him understand that the powerful influence of wealth wants his company in a crusade against extravagance and it will not be necessary to put on an income tax to get him in action.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In all of his thorough study of this question has the Senator from Idaho been able to devise any practical method by which it is possible to prevent the shifting of a very large portion of the tax that we call an income tax?

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President; of course not. I have not been able to do that; but the most difficult tax to transfer is the income and inheritance tax. But I would not connive at its transfer, as, in my opinion, the Congress of the United States has been doing for the last five or six years. The Senator from South Dakota will remember, a few years ago, when we had before the Senate the proposition of passing the income-tax law, that there was immediately brought into the Senate here the corporation tax, and the Senator is perfectly aware of the fact that some of the largest corporations in the country immediately petitioned us to pass a corporation tax instead of an income tax. Why was that? It was for the simple reason that they could transfer the corporation tax, while the most difficult tax to transfer is the tax upon incomes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I remember that discussion very well. I voted for the corporation tax largely, as the Senator from Idaho will remember, because of the grave doubt about the general income tax standing the test of the courts, although I was in favor of the general income tax and am now heartily in favor of the general income tax; but does not the Senator from Idaho think that in the provision here, among the possible defects in it, is the failure to distinguish between the class of incomes that can not be shifted and the class which may be shifted? For instance, a man earning a large salary in a profession through his effort and his ability may not have any property at all, but will he not be required to pay a tax based upon his income under the same rate that is paid by the idler, the drone, who is doing absolutely nothing to serve society, but who has inherited a large fortune and is spending his time in riotous living? In the Senator's judgment ought there not to be some distinction between incomes along that line? I know the Senator has studied this question profoundly—I do not claim to have done so—but does he not concur in saying that that is a weakness in the provisions of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that brings up another subject entirely; that is, the subject of differentiation with reference to incomes. Mr. Gladstone declared for 50 years that it never could be carried into effect, and Mr. Pitt also declared that it was impossible to differentiate as to income. One reason why Mr. Gladstone was opposed to an income tax as a permanent part of the taxing system was because it would be impossible to differentiate or discriminate between the man who went out daily and earned by actual physical labor $5,000 a year and the man who had had left him a sum which brought him $5,000 a year and for which he did nothing at all. He said that, by reason of that fact, he was not in favor of an income tax as a permanent proposition; that it was only an emergency tax. But notwithstanding Mr. Gladstone's views, in my judgment Mr. Asquith and Mr. George have demonstrated that differentiation is possible, and they have carried it to a marked degree of success in England. However, Mr. President, that must necessarily come, in my judgment, after a good deal of experience and a good deal of study.

While I am thoroughly in favor of the proposition, I should not expect to see it in the first income-tax law that passed the Congress, because it requires a vast amount of study, adaptation of the law to the conditions which you find in the country, and a classification of incomes which I have no idea in the world the committee was prepared to make. It did not have the classifications; it did not have the means, the statistics, or the data which they have been gathering for years in England by which to make the differentiation, although, as I have said, I am thoroughly in favor of the proposition. I think that a man who goes out and earns $5,000 a year by actual effort, by devoting himself daily to his work, should not be taxed the same as a man who has an income of the same amount for which he does not turn a hand. It is flying in the face of justice and common sense to impose such a tax, but we must approach that after some years of experience. I could not find any fair justification for criticizing the committee for omitting that from this bill, although it must come in time; nevertheless this question which I am arguing indirectly reaches in that direction. I hope, however, later in the debate to say something on the subject of differentiation, not with the hope of putting it in this bill, but as a notice that it must be inserted in any income law that is to represent the matured effort of legislation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, is not that a kind of income that can not be shifted so that the consumer somewhere will have to pay it? An income that is the result of personal effort, skill, and ability, and in which there is no property involved, can not be shifted.

Mr. BORAH. The time will undoubtedly come in this country, if we maintain an income tax, when we will have to differentiate as to incomes. If we are going to maintain an income tax, we have not only got to have a progressive rate of taxation, but we have got to differentiate as to incomes. As I said a moment ago, however, that will have to be after considerable experience and after the gathering of a great deal more data than we now have. It took England something like 60 years to secure the experience and the data by which she could adopt it. It need not take us that long, but I did not hardly expect it at this time. In fact, I am exceedingly glad to mark progress. If I could see this exemption adjusted as I feel it ought to be, I would feel more encouraged to take up the subject of differentiation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. In view of the contention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], namely, that it would tend to secure an economical government to tax under an income-tax law the great proportion of the people, it would be interesting to know, if the Senator from Idaho has the information, what proportion of the people of the United States now enjoy an income of $3,000 or more.

Mr. BORAH. I have not accurate information on that point. The gentleman from whom I quoted, in making his speech in New York, stated that the proposed income tax would be paid by but 3 per cent of the people of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply wanted to emphasize that idea.

Mr. BORAH. And my answer to that suggestion of the gentleman from New York is that if 3 per cent of the people of the United States own property above $4,000 they should pay the taxes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with the Senator from Idaho, and rose only to call out the fact in order to draw the conclusion that, even if we were to tax incomes of $3,000, we would tax but a very small proportion of the people and, therefore, the good which the Senator from Utah thought would come from a general distribution of the tax would not be attained. If we were to attempt to bring under the income tax so large a proportion of the people as to give them all concern respecting its expenditure, we would have to reduce the limit to about $500.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The suggestion, Mr. President, which I made about the matter was purely tentative. I have not entirely made up my own mind about it; I am thinking about it; and I have been trying to make up my mind; but if it be correct that under this bill 3 per cent of the people would pay the income tax, I take it that reference was to the House bill, where the exemption was $4,000. I imagine there is a very much larger number who are earning between three and four thousand dollars than who are earning over $4,000 per annum, so that very likely the reduction of the exemption to $3,000 would raise the percentage of the taxpayers considerably. However, the suggestion which I had in my mind was not a limit of $3,000, but to put it still lower. England fixes the limit at $800 and France, I think, at still less; but, however that may be, suppose we were to fix the exemption at a thousand dollars a year, so that a man having an income of $2,000 would pay a tax upon a thousand dollars. At 1 per cent that would be only $10 per annum; yet the payment of that $10 would give that individual a much more lively interest in the expenditure of the entire amount collected, made up of his and similar contributions, than if he were not paying anything at all.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, the Senator does not seem——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment further, I imagine if the limitation were put at $1,500, instead of having 3 per cent of the people, you would probably have 10 or 12 or 15 per cent. I have no idea just how large the percentage would be, but a considerable proportion of the adult people of the country would be paying the taxes, and it would be a class of people who ordinarily take greater interest in governmental affairs than those who receive less salaries.

All that I have said upon the subject, I repeat, is merely tentative, by way of suggestion, and by way of a desire to hear what the Senator from Idaho has to say upon the matter.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator will further consider the matter. It is well worthy of his industry and great ability.

Mr. President, I think I have served the convenience of the Senate by occupying its time while it had nothing else to do, and I will therefore yield the floor. Before doing so I want, in conclusion, to say I am quite aware that in advocating a higher exemption I lay myself open to serious criticism, especially by those who do not, it seems to me, give proper weight to the fact that those of limited means pay very much more than their proportion of indirect taxes. The fact is that the incidence of taxation under our system or under any system which has yet been devised is one of the real tragedies in the struggle of life.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of leveling fortunes by taxation. I am not yet ready to accept the doctrine now earnestly advocated in England, that all indirect taxes should be abolished and that all incomes above a certain amount should be considered social property. I go no further than to desire to ingraft as nearly as possible upon our system of taxation the golden rule for collecting revenue that in these days of great expenditures and tremendous burdens the obligations of government should be met according to the ability to meet them. I want the luxury of high living on the part of the Government to be met in their due proportion by those who make the least sacrifice in doing so.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 23, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 22, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, source of all our longings, hopes, and aspirations, draw us by Thy holy influence to Thee that we may learn at Thy feet wisdom, truth, justice, mercy, love, righteousness, the crowning virtues of the soul life which fit it for the sublime duties of the now, and will be its passport into the realms where the choicest spirits dwell, when it shall have passed over the great divide. Help us to strive diligently for those eternals until we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Amen.

APPROVAL OF THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 18, 1913, was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as read will stand approved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I heard the reading of the Journal by the Clerk, I understood the Journal to state that Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee moved to lay the "motion" on the table.

The SPEAKER. If the Journal recites that the gentleman from Tennessee moved to lay the "motion" on the table that is wrong. It ought to be that he moved to lay the "resolution" on the table. Without objection, the word "motion" as read in the Journal will be changed to the word "resolution."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I also understood the Clerk in reading the Journal to state that Mr. McCOY called up a certain bill. Of course, the gentleman from New Jersey did not have the power to call up a bill. What Mr. McCOY did was to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a certain bill. He could not call up a bill. All he could do was to make the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think the gentleman from Illinois is correct. Without objection, the Journal will be corrected in both these respects.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that, but inasmuch as the matter has been called to the attention of the House, I desire to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Objection to what?

The SPEAKER. Objection to correcting the Journal in the manner indicated by the Chair. Without objection, these corrections in the Journal will be made. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Journal has not yet been approved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the approval of the Journal as corrected?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the Journal be approved.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 113, nays 0.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 212, nays 0, answered "present" 8, not voting 209, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—DAVID CROWTHER.

Mr. HAY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of David Crowther, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MANAHAN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three weeks, on account of important business.

FEDERAL BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 6383, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6383) to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Would it be in order to report the proposed amendment to the bill at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, reading the amendment into it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6383) to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell the site and buildings thereon now occupied by the United States as a post office and courthouse, and for other purposes, in the city of Newark, in the State of New Jersey, after proper advertisement, and at such time and upon such terms as he may deem to be for the best interest of the United States, but for not less than the price of $1,800,000, and to enter into a contract for such sale on behalf of the United States with a responsible bidder, which contract shall provide for the use by the Government of the said site and buildings thereon free of rent until the completion and occupation by the Government of a building upon the site hereinafter mentioned, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to execute and deliver to the purchaser upon such completion and occupation a quit-claim deed of the property herein authorized and directed to be sold.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, after entering into such contract of sale, but not before, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site for a suitable building and approaches for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices in the said city of Newark, the cost of said new site not to exceed the sum of $800,000, and to erect on the said new site a new building, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use of the United States post office and other governmental offices, and to use and expend the money realized from the sale of said present site and buildings for the purchase of such new site and the balance thereof for the erection thereon of such new building, complete, including, fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, and also for the payment for such consulting and other architectural, engineering, and technical services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order in writing, to serve either within or without the District of Columbia, exclusively to assist the Supervising Architect in the preparation of the designs, drawings, specifications, and estimates for said new building and for the equipment thereof, customarily paid for from the construction appropriation for public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, and also for special supervision, not including superintendence, of the construction of said building. The fee for such consulting and other architectural, engineering, and technical services shall not exceed 5 per cent of the cost of said building, and the proceeds of the sale of the said present site and buildings thereon are hereby appropriated for the purpose herein set forth.

"That the consulting and other architectural, engineering, and technical services hereinbefore authorized and directed to be employed and paid for from the proceeds of the sale of the present Federal building and the site thereof shall be employed without regard to civil-service laws, rules, or regulations, any statute to the contrary notwithstanding; and such services shall be in addition to and independent of the authorizations for personal services for the Office of the Supervising Architect otherwise made.

"That the total expenditure herein authorized and directed to be made shall not exceed the amount of the net proceeds of the sale of the present site and buildings hereinbefore provided for.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may disregard the provision requiring 40 feet open space for fire protection."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has 20.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, did the Clerk read the amendment?

The SPEAKER. It was read into the bill. It has to be.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, may we have the amendment that was read into the bill reported by itself?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 24, by adding at the end of line 24 the following: "And the proceeds of the sale of the said present site and buildings thereon are hereby appropriated for the purpose herein set forth."

Mr. MANN. It should be "purposes"—in the plural.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it "for the purposes" or "for the purpose"?

The SPEAKER. It is "purpose."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It should be "purposes."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the word "purpose" will be changed to "purposes."

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the bill in question is simply a bill to meet the opinion of the legal officials of the Treasury Department.

In the last omnibus public building bill there was a provision for the sale of the present Government property in the city of Newark, N. J. It was stipulated in that bill that this property should be sold for not less than $1,800,000. The committee undertook to provide that a portion of the proceeds of the sale, not to exceed $800,000, should be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase of a new site in the city of Newark for a public building. We undertook to provide that the remainder of the proceeds should be used by the Secretary in the construction of a new Government building for the city of Newark sufficient to meet the demands of the Government service in its various activities at that place.

The law officers of the Treasury Department, in construing this paragraph, held that while the language was sufficient to authorize the Secretary to sell the property, and that while the language was sufficient to authorize him to use not to exceed $800,000 in the purchase of a new site, yet the language was not sufficient to authorize him to use the remainder of the proceeds in the construction of a new building.

This bill was introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCCOY] to meet this opinion of the law officers of the Treasury. It does not take one dollar from the Treasury of the United States.

There are two purposes to be subserved by this present bill. One is to meet the view of the legal officers of the Treasury and to give the Secretary the power or the authority to have this new building constructed. The other is to permit the Secretary to employ outside architects to expedite the construction of the building, and thereby secure a better price for the Government property than could be secured if the construction of the building should be delayed for five or six years, as it would be under the ordinary operations of the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

That is about all that there is in the bill. As I stated, not one dollar is taken from the Treasury, and only the proceeds arising from the sale are to be used in the payment of outside architects, in the purchase of a new site, and in the construction of a new building.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] reserves 15 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if one were to offer his own house for sale on the terms that the purchaser should pay cash for it, but should not obtain possession of it until the late owner had built a new house for himself and occupied it, with no provision as to length of time he would have to build the new house, it would be a case identical, I think, with the proposition now before the House.

Here is a proposition to sell the Government's site—the present site and building—the purchaser to pay cash, but not to obtain possession of the property until the Government has purchased a new site and built a new building and taken possession of it for use.

No one knows how long that would take. No purchaser would dare to buy and pay the proper price for it, not knowing how long he would be deprived either of the use of the property or the use of his money. It may be that the Government will deliver the site to the purchaser in 5 years. It may be that it will deliver the site to the purchaser in 10 years, and God knows, if they keep a Democratic Congress, it may be 20 years. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. They do not take so much risk on that. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. That queer provision does not appear in this bill for the first time. It appeared in the last public buildings bill, which, by the way, never became a law, and never passed the House. Never did the House agree to the conference report on the public buildings bill which this assumes to amend. The Journal of the House shows that that bill never became a law. Still we propose to amend it in a very queer feature of it.

In addition to that, the last Congress, in a burst of righteousness, repealed the so-called Tarsney Act, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury in special cases to employ outside special architects at the usual architects' fees. We thought that would not do, and we repealed it. The first time anybody comes along and wants a special architect, the committee reports a bill authorizing the employment of a special architect at the usual architect's fee. We do one thing to-day and, without knowing, we reverse it to-morrow.

Mr. Speaker, this bill might have passed the House on last Friday had it not been for the objection of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]—one of the distinguished gentlemen from Tennessee, the State of the distinguished Attorney General of the United States. First one distinguished gentleman from Tennessee objected to proceeding with another matter. Then another distinguished gentleman from Tennessee—still the home of the distinguished Attorney General of the United States—made a point of no quorum when the Committee of the Whole was considering this bill on Friday last.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I just stepped in. I want to make a point of order that the gentleman must confine his remarks to the bill pending before the House.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had been in the Chamber, where he belongs, he would know I was confining my remarks to the bill before the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I just came in, but I do not understand what "the gentleman from Tennessee" has to do with the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has not exceeded the rules so far.

Mr. MANN. I have not yet, but I may. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I was discussing the attitude of the House on Friday last on this bill, and if the gentleman from Tennessee had been where he belonged—in the Chamber—he would have known what I was discussing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MANN. And I will say this for the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], for whom I have very high regard: I do not blame him for raising a point of order now, or for making a point of no quorum the other day, or for moving to lay another resolution on the table. If I represented the home of the Attorney General, I would not want the public to have let in the light of day on what he has done.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the bill which is now before the House, and is therefore out of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, we are getting very technical about it. I have been talking about this bill. Has it come to the point that a man in discussing a bill can make no incidental reference to anything? Was I violating the rules when I referred to the gentleman from Tennessee, and paid him a compliment? Is that what he objects to? He might have better reasons for that than for the other. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, as has been well stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], this bill should have been passed last Friday, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] insisted upon a quorum when it was proposed to take up the discussion of a resolution that had been reported by the Judiciary Committee. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] received unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD; he inserted a speech about the Diggs-Caminetti cases, and then voted to gag this side of the House, so that we could not speak on that question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the subject before the House.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KAHN. The bill that is pending——

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman said I put something into the RECORD——

Mr. KAHN. Oh, your side did not want to hear the truth about those cases; then you put things in the RECORD that you do not want to let us reply to.

Mr. HARDY. I just want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. KAHN. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The gentleman has stated that I put something in the RECORD.

Mr. KAHN. I did not refer to the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY, but I did refer to the gentleman from Texas, Mr. STEPHENS.

Mr. HARDY. I did not know to whom the gentleman referred, but the gentleman looked at me——

Mr. KAHN. Oh, I looked at you when you interjected a remark.

Mr. HARDY. And replied to me.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I have no objection to the gentleman making any comments he desires about myself. I have acted strictly within my rights.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. STEPHENS, was being referred to, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY, concluded erroneously that he was being referred to. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] will proceed.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I did not refer to the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY. Now, this bill has been unanimously reported by the committee, I understand, and it ought to be enacted into law. I imagine that the gentlemen who are interested in the measure want the bill discussed freely. That is what the House is for—free discussion of all public matters; and when the time shall come that we can not discuss matters freely upon this floor, our vaunted liberty will have become a thing of the past.

Now, gentlemen on the other side seem to be afraid to have matters discussed freely. They do not want to let in the light of day upon the act of the Attorney General of the United States in connection with——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair sustains the point or order let me call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that in the report on this case is an opinion of the Attorney General of the United States. Do I understand that we can not refer to an opinion of the Attorney General?

The SPEAKER. Why, of course you can refer to an opinion of the Attorney General, or anybody else, if it refers to this case.

Mr. MANN. But that is all the gentleman from California did. He referred to the opinion of the Attorney General. Thereupon the gentleman made the point of order, and the Speaker sustained it, although the report on this bill contains an opinion of the Attorney General, and a rotten opinion at that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California will proceed in order. He knows what the point of order is.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General has done many peculiar things that the country wants to know about. This decision referred to in this report is one of those peculiar things. Another is when he tried to allow political pull to influence him in the setting of certain white-slave cases for trial.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from California is not in order. With all due deference to the gentleman, he insists upon proceeding out of order, in spite of the rulings of the Chair to the effect that he has no right to discuss anything except the measure before the House. I ask that he be required to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California will proceed in order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I have not been out of order at all. I am surprised——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the attitude of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. He himself on Tuesday last undertook to criticize the former United States attorney for the northern district of California, and said that he was——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from California is not in order.

Mr. KAHN. Said that he was actuated by ambitious political motives——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California will proceed in order, if he proceeds at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to what the rule is in a case of this kind, if the point of order is made and sustained.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then the gentleman from California must take his seat, and he can not proceed unless the House permits him to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has stated the rule correctly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from California be permitted to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will suspend a moment, the Chair will state what the rule is. When any gentleman rises to a point of order that another gentleman is not proceeding in order and the Chair sustains the point of order, then it is the duty of the gentleman who is out of order to take his seat and to keep his seat until some one moves that he be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have made that motion.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from California had not resumed his seat when the motion was made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California has resumed his seat now.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Georgia is not in his seat.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, I did not make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois was not in his seat.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] have one hour in which to debate this Caminetti-Diggs affair, and that the next time this House meets I have an hour in which to reply to them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the gentleman from California proceed in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I can state that I know personally that the Attorney General——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky can not discuss the Attorney General in the California cases any more than can the gentleman from California. Both gentlemen are out of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] be permitted to proceed in order.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the public buildings of this country, of course, receive a great deal of attention from Congress. We hear much criticism of the "pork barrel" in the way public buildings are distributed by Congress. Honest criticism can do no harm. The country would like to hear the truth in some white-slave cases that have been pending. I now desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I hope at some time to let in a little light upon that controversy in the way of honest criticism.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has 7 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Florida has 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Florida to consume some of his time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have stated, when this measure was before the House last week, that in my judgment it deserves the vote of every Member of Congress. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an opportunity during the past four years to hear many statements, written and verbal, presented by Members of this House and also by the various heads of the departments in Washington, I undertake to say that the present building in Newark is the most congested Government building in the United States. I make this statement not only upon the information brought to the attention of the committee by the local Federal officials occupying the building in Newark but as a result of a personal visit made to that city with seven or eight other members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The Newark building is a duplicate of the Government building first constructed at Wilmington, Del., when the population of Newark was 221,000. Since that time the population has more than doubled. The number of employees in the postal service has increased from 180 to 440. There are 2,000 manufacturing plants in the city of Newark, representing 242 different lines of manufacture. There sit on the Democratic side of this House three Members who represent in part the city of Newark—Messrs. McCOY, TOWNSEND, and KINKEAD—who can verify what I state in connection with the absolute necessity for immediate action on this bill.

The minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], calls attention to the fact that perhaps this building will not be occupied for 5 or 6 or 10 years.

The very object of the pending bill is to make the question of the change in the public building in that city at practically a definite time, and with that end in view this bill, introduced by Mr. McCOY, was presented to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, carefully examined by him and approved, and he has stated if this relief is granted it will enable him to have plans prepared, a building advertised for and completed within a fixed time. There were excellent reasons which prompted both the majority and minority of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in making this proposition separate and distinct from any other carried in the last public buildings bill, among them the congested, overcrowded condition of the present building.

I have said, and I repeat it, that it will be cruel, harsh, and inhuman for Congress to compel the Government officials to occupy the present building. If this bill is not passed, then the Newark proposition must take the same course of every other new building, namely, it must wait its turn to be reached upon the list, and the Supervising Architect's office is now from five and one-half to six years behind with its work. It was the purpose and the intention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to make this a special case and to expedite it as much as possible. But, unfortunately, in the phraseology of that item, under a ruling of the Attorney General, we did not carry the language of the original act far enough so as to comply with a technical construction of the law. The cost of the preparation of the plans, specifications, and supervision of the new building will not exceed the average cost of the buildings turned out and constructed under the direct supervision of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Now, the people of Newark are a unit in favor of this proposition—the business men, the professional men, the Democrats, and the Republicans. It has received the approval of every member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Sixty-second Congress, and the bill now under consideration has received the approval of every member of that committee in this Congress who were present when it was considered. I hope there will be no opposition and that there will be no consideration of any other outside affair in this House that will delay or prevent the favorable consideration of this bill and its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY].

LATE REPRESENTATIVE MARLIN E. OLMSTED.

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the career and death of the late Marlin E. Olmsted, late a Member of Congress from the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the life and character of the late Representative Marlin E. Olmsted, a Member of Congress from Pennsylvania. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Speaker, Hon. Marlin E. Olmsted, former Congressman from the Harrisburg district in Pennsylvania, where I reside, died in a New York hospital early Saturday morning, July 19.

In response to a desire to pay tribute to his ability and prominence I have asked leave to place this memorial in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this date. Through these same columns he had spoken for 16 years. After the test of statesmanship had been applied by his colleagues in this House and upon the completion of his seventh term, he was hailed as the next Speaker of the Sixty-second Congress. His party, however, being in the minority, he was not elected, but the recognition of his peculiar fitness for the position was attested on all sides by his fellow Members.

I have publicly protested and opposed his political beliefs, and in doing so was in a position to know the temper of the steel of his wonderful ability. In this tribute I have no desire to compromise my principles. As fearlessly and sincerely as I supported them I proclaim the virtues of this national figure, the able Congressman, the noted lawyer, the kind father and husband.

A home newspaper, the Carlisle Herald, in an editorial, has ably summed up his greatness in these words:

A NATIONAL LOSS.

In the death of Marlin Edgar Olmsted, of Harrisburg, the Nation loses one of its most brilliant and useful men. Here in the congressional district which he represented faithfully and ably for so many years his loss will be felt keenly. Residents of every political faith mourn his death; his place can never be refilled in the hearts of his thousands of friends.

Marlin Edgar Olmsted was a self-made man in every sense of the word; every honor that was bestowed upon him was deserved. He climbed high, but never forgot those whom he left behind as he ascended the ladder of life to a high position among the great men of the Nation.

As a public servant he was faithful to his constituents. Through his efforts the eighteenth congressional district obtained beautiful public buildings; the rights of the people were continually guarded; and if the voters had been given their option Marlin Olmsted, who was held so high in the esteem of the people, might have had a life tenure of office as their Representative if he had desired it. But he resigned after eight successive terms. Few men have had such a record.

Mr. Olmsted was considered a leader in the Halls of Congress. He was the sponsor for numerous acts of legislation of national import, and as a lawyer he was recognized as among the ablest in America.

His loss is by no means confined to a few miles of territory; it is national. But it will be felt most at home. Sympathy is being extended to his family from every section of Cumberland County.

The Harrisburg Patriot, a fair and courageous opponent in his lifetime, has this to say of him when dead:

THE DEATH OF MR. OLMSTED.

The announcement of the death of Hon. Marlin E. Olmsted, a resident of Harrisburg since his early manhood and for 16 years the Representative in Congress of the Dauphin-Lebanon-Cumberland district, came upon the people of this city on Saturday morning almost with startling suddenness. Only a few days ago he walked the streets of the city apparently in his usual good health, and it is hardly a week since the public heard that he had undergone an operation in New York, and then it was not known nor supposed, except by his closest friends, that his condition was at all serious.

Those who most earnestly dissented from Mr. Olmsted's political tenets were free to acknowledge his intellectual ability. In Congress he was one of the strong men of his party. During the eight years that Joseph G. Cannon occupied the Speaker's chair, Mr. Olmsted had a larger influence in the national House of Representatives than any other man in the Pennsylvania delegation, not even excepting the veteran, John Dalzell.

As a neighbor and a factor in the social life of Harrisburg, Mr. Olmsted was genial and obliging; a tactful and hospitable host, who never allowed political difference to affect his personal relations.

And the editor of the Harrisburg Telegraph, a life-long friend, has testified to his worth in these well-chosen words:

AN HONOR TO HIS STATE.

The late Marlin E. Olmsted's worth as a man and statesman is emphasized outside of his home city by the strong testimonials of those associated with him at Washington and by the unusual tributes of the metropolitan press. His friends, of course, always appreciated the qualities of his mind and heart, but many of them did not realize the large place which he had made for himself through great ability and conscientious and earnest devotion to the public interests. No man in public life ever gave more unstintedly of all that was best within him to the public service.

His record of achievement in Congress and in the professional life which he adorned is one of unusual brilliancy. Mr. Olmsted was not a showy man in the sense of spectacular endeavor, but he was a persistent, earnest, and indefatigable worker, with a keen and analytical mind, which brushed aside all the surplusage of any question under consideration.

For the reason that his manifold interests demanded so much of his time and thought, he was sometimes misunderstood as an austere and cold man. Nothing could have been further from the truth.

Once having placed his hands to the plow, he never turned back. He was thoroughness personified; no detail escaped him, and on his day he has left the impress of a well-ordered and successful life.

His friendships were as enduring as the mountains of his native State, and those who were privileged to touch more intimately the springs of his nature know how true and constant was his affection. This was shown in many quiet ways. Enshrined in the memory of his companions are countless little things indicating his loyalty to those whom he called friends.

High and low, rich and poor, all will cherish the memory of a true son of Pennsylvania, who honored himself in honoring his State.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 6.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the report (S. Rept. 80) of the Finance Committee of the Senate accompanying the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 10,000 for the use of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2727. An act to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada.

SENATE BILL AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2727. An act to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada; to the Committee on the Public Lands; and

S. Con. Res. 6. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of 30,000 copies of the report of the Finance Committee of the Senate accompanying the tariff bill, H. R. 3321; to the Committee on Printing.

FEDERAL BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] has 10 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has 6.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill has had a distinguished career in the House of Representatives. So far as I can ascertain, there is not any opposition to its passage; but it has been before the House so many times that I have lost count of the number, and each time in some way or another it has been caught in the machinery of parliamentary procedure and been squeezed out of the wrong end of the machine. I am rather reluctant to tell my story about the bill again, inasmuch as I have told it so many times. The situation reminds me of the little verse of Oliver Wendell Holmes in his poem on the katydid. The verse goes—I think that I can quote it:

I love to hear thine earnest voice,
Wherever thou art hid;
Thou testy little dogmatist,
Thou pretty katydid!
Thou 'mindest me of gentlefolks—
Old gentlefolks are they—
Thou say'st an undisputed thing
In such a solemn way.

So on three solemn occasions, and without dispute, I have undertaken to explain why I think that this bill should pass, and I will restate the principal reason. Without amending that section of the public-buildings bill which applies to Newark, passed in the third session of the Sixty-second Congress, the bill might better never have been passed, as we should know where we are to-day so as to take a fresh start. But the situation is, as the chairman of the committee has explained, that the Public Buildings Committee of the Sixty-second Congress intended to allow the sale of this building and the investment of the proceeds in the purchase of a new site and in the erection of a new building. I believe myself that the language of the bill was sufficient for that purpose, but the Attorney General thought differently, and of course the Secretary of the Treasury is controlled in his expenditures of money by the opinion of the Attorney General. So I believe that this bill now, especially with the amendment which was so kindly suggested to me by the leader of the other side of the House, is certainly sufficient, if it becomes a law, to make it clear that we can go ahead with this project. Of course there is an unusual feature in the bill, although there were provisions, I believe, in the public-buildings bill in the Sixty-second Congress similar to that which permit, notwithstanding the repeal of the Tarsney Act, the employment of the services of a special architect. As I have explained two or three times when the bill was up previously, we are to pay for those special services out of the proceeds of the sale of this building, so that we do not get in the way of any other project upon which the architect's services are paid for out of appropriations; in fact, we really push some of the projects forward. Unless we can proceed under this bill as it is proposed, or under the previous bill as it is now proposed to amend it, I believe that we can not proceed at all, because of the situation which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has pointed out, namely, that we have got to propose to a purchaser that he pay down his good money and not get possession of the property until we finish a new building.

But a contract can be worked out that will carry that along successfully, as I am told by the Supervising Architect—in fact, was told this morning—provided that we can begin immediately upon the project and push it through to a speedy conclusion in two years or two and one-half years, which the Supervising Architect said would be about the limit of time required. And the reason for that is this, as I stated the other day: That under the peculiar and special wording of this bill we shall have to pay for everything out of the proceeds of the sale of the present building. As we can not pay any rent for the present building after we have sold it we have got to remain in possession of it until the new building is erected, and consequently the would-be purchaser, knowing that he has got to make his payments from time to time as we proceed with the erection of the new building, will be obliged to estimate a reduction from the price which he otherwise would be able and willing to pay for the building in order to compensate him for the time during which he would be out of the money which he had to pay.

I believe that the bill is meritorious. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has said, the committee was unanimous in the Sixty-second Congress. It is unanimous now, and I hope that no opposition will be placed in the way of the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY] has expired. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago, referring to the decision of the Attorney General in the report, I stated that it was "a rotten opinion." I want now to take that back. I do not wish to do injustice to any official of the Government. I think the opinion of the Attorney General, quoted in the report, is the only opinion which he could render in accordance with the law.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the sale of the present post-office and courthouse building at Newark and for the construction of a new building to accommodate the post office and other Government offices. The post office, growing very rapidly with its work, probably needs a new building. Then there is an additional reason why the bill should pass, from one point of view, and that is it proposes to sell the present courthouse. Of what use is a courthouse over at Newark at present under this administration? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

One of the principal purposes for the building of a courthouse at present is the trial of lawsuits, the prosecution of cases. I am informed that up to the time of the incoming of the present administration the principal number of cases tried over there were violations of the revenue laws and of customs laws and of the white-slave law. You propose to revise the law as to customs and to add something to the revenue laws, and by Executive order practically to abolish the white-slave law. Of what use, I ask, is the courthouse, as long as political influence can obtain the abandonment or the nonprosecution of a white-slave case? Of what use is the courthouse?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The gentleman is not proceeding in order. He is not discussing the case here, but he is discussing the nonprosecution of another case.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the gentleman from Illinois has not gotten over the limit.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is looking through crooked glasses and colored glasses, both. He can not see straight, and he does not hear correctly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is so excited over a particular case that he imagines that "every road leads to Rome," and that all talk leads to the particular case he is engaged in defending without proper warrant.

Here is a proposition to sell a Government courthouse. Why? Because there is no longer any need of it. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Why is there no longer any need of it? Because the Attorney General of the United States has given to the world notice that he does not propose to prosecute white-slave cases where political influence is used with him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that the gentleman must take his seat.

Mr. MANN. I will sit down now, but I shall be up again many times. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] moves that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] be permitted to proceed in order. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I do not know that an appeal would lie. But I contend that I am proceeding in order. I contend that the point has not come in the House of Representatives where, in discussing the sale of a post office, we can not discuss the work of the Post Office Department, or where, in discussing the sale of a Federal courthouse, we can not refer to the work in the Department of Justice. The Speaker has just ruled that in discussing the sale of a courthouse we can not refer to the work of the Department of Justice. I do not think that is a correct ruling, and I am sure the distinguished Speaker, on reflection, will not consider it a correct ruling.

We have a right in discussing these questions to discuss all incidental questions. I know that some of you gentlemen on that side think you can prevent the discussion of matters by putting the gag on us, but you will find that that will not work. It may take a little while for it to soak into your hides, but no legislative body on earth has ever succeeded in putting the gag on discussion, because when that is done the legislative body ceases to exist. You may prevent for a time the discussion of questions in the House by not sitting, but you can not prevent us from talking in the House to you and to the country. We will have our say, and you will learn that it is a very expensive proposition to try to prevent it. It will only center the attention of the country upon the desire on your part to prevent the light of day from being let into nefarious transactions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] has five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] consumed all his time?

The SPEAKER. He has.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I simply desire to say that I want the House to understand that I am presenting this bill, not discussing any other bill or anything connected with any other bill.

The Government can not be injured by the passage of this bill, because it is stipulated that the property shall not be sold for less than $1,800,000.

I want to be perfectly frank with the House and to say that the consensus of opinion among people who know is that if we could sell this property to-morrow and deliver immediate possession we could probably get $2,000,000 for it. I believe that is considered a fair price for this property. But when it is understood that the purchaser of the property must pay his money and be without the use of the property for at least two years, a price somewhat less than that will probably be obtained. It is hoped that by the employment of these special architects the purchaser may be let into possession within about two years.

Mr. McCOY. The Government will pay no rent in the meantime.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Government pays no rent in the meantime, but occupies this property until the new building has been completed and is ready for occupancy. Five per cent on $2,000,000 in two years amounts to $200,000. I do not know what this property would rent for, but it would certainly amount to a considerable sum.

Mr. McCOY. And the taxes will be added, too.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. When it passes into private ownership the taxes will be added, and the purchaser has got to take all that into consideration.

So it was thought by your committee, and it was thought by the best business men in the city of Newark, that under the circumstances $1,800,000 would be a fair price for this property.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Is it understood that this contract is to contain a specific provision giving possession of this property on a certain date?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No particular date; no.

Mr. McCOY. The contract is not drawn yet.

Mr. COOPER. But is not the purchaser to have some provision in the contract as to the date when he can obtain possession?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly. When the contract is drawn it will undoubtedly be stipulated that within a certain time the purchaser is to have possession. There is no question about that.

Mr. COOPER. Will the contract contain a provision for liquidated damages in case the Government does not give possession at that time?

Mr. McCOY. We can not tell about that. We do not know what the contract will contain.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know. I do not think so. There will be a contract with the purchaser, and I understand that plenty of men in Newark are perfectly able and willing to purchase the property under the conditions contained in this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman said he thought they could finish it in two years?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. Two years and a half.

Mr. COOPER. I have not seen a copy of the bill. Suppose the contract contains a provision that on January 1, 1916, the purchaser shall have possession of the property, and suppose it runs on for six months afterwards, as is not improbable in the construction of a public building, is there any provision for liquidated damages?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not in the law.

Mr. COOPER. But will there be in the contract? Would the purchaser buy the property without such a provision?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think the Secretary of the Treasury can be relied upon to control that feature of it, in his judgment.

Mr. MANN. Does not the bill expressly provide that the Government shall have the occupation of this building free of rent until the completion and readiness for occupancy of a building upon a site to be hereafter purchased?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of the Treasury can not change that, can he?

Mr. McCOY. No.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think not.

Mr. MANN. He can not tell when the new building will be ready for occupancy?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Why should we worry about the purchaser?

Mr. MANN. We should worry about the purchaser because that provision will be an element in fixing the price.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Very well. The property can not be sold for less than $1,800,000. That is stipulated in the law.

Mr. MANN. But it might bring more.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the purchaser is willing to pay $1,800,000, which we consider a fair value under all the circumstances, I do not think we ought to be too solicitous as to liquidated damages and as to when the purchaser may get possession. That is a matter for him to take into consideration when he pays his money and takes the risk.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired. All time has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question being taken, and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does that carry the amendments with it?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

ANONYMOUS BILLS.

The SPEAKER. There are a number of bills which have been put into the basket upon which the gentlemen introducing them have neglected to put their names. The Clerk will read the titles of those bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill granting an increase of pension to Hannah A. Brigham;
A bill granting a pension to Mary J. Brophy;
A bill for the relief of J. Will Morton and the estate of Clarissa H. Morton, deceased;
A bill granting a pension to Elizabeth Elliott;
A bill granting a pension to Augusta A. Bentgen;
A bill granting an increase of pension to Frederick C. Hammetter;
A bill granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Morgan; and
A bill granting an increase of pension to Henrietta Lee Coulling.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL FRIDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 205 (H. Rept. 36).

Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be, and is hereby, authorized to continue during the Sixty-third Congress the investigations begun during the Sixty-second Congress under the provisions of House resolution 425, adopted March 5, 1912; House resolution 470, adopted April 11, 1912; and House resolution 587, adopted July 16, 1912, for the purposes and under the conditions therein stated; and that the expenses thereof, not exceeding the unexpended balance of the whole amount authorized by said House resolution 470, be paid out of the contingent fund in the manner provided by said House resolution 470 of the Sixty-second Congress and House resolution 82, adopted May 8, 1913.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution authorizes the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to make further investigation and draw the money out of the contingent fund to the extent of the unexpended balance. A resolution was offered some time ago which provided that the members of the committee of the Sixty-second Congress who are Members of the Sixty-third Congress be permitted to sit, and that they be permitted to draw warrants as if the committee were all present. It did not provide for any expenditure after the new committee had been named. This is to provide for the new committee to have the same power that that committee had after the 4th of March and before the naming of the committee.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. COX. What is the unexpended balance remaining?

Mr. LLOYD. I can not give the exact figures. There has not been very much expended. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the amount expended has been about $13,000. The amount authorized was $25,000.

Mr. COX. So that there is about $12,000 remaining unexpended?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; more than that. We simply want to wind up our investigation. We are preparing the report now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understood from some source that the only purpose of this was to permit the committee to pay the expert it has had for doing this tabulating work or making a report.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, we are preparing a report now and have it nearly completed.

Mr. LLOYD. It also includes a stenographer that the committee has employed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. They are the same employees that we had prior to the 4th of March, except the attorney, who was dismissed as soon as the public hearings were discontinued.

Mr. MANN. How much would that amount to?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We pay our expert $20 per day, and the stenographer $100 per month, and the young man who is working with Dr. Huebner receives $5 per day. He was his helper while a professor in the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. Why is it necessary to employ a special stenographer for a committee when the House has four committee stenographers who have very little to do at this session of Congress? Why could not one of the committee stenographers do this work?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not know that there was any that was not engaged. I will say this: That when we had our public hearings we did employ stenographers who were furnished to us by the official force of the House, and the entire cost of the public hearings was less than $300.

Mr. MANN. This stenographer now, as I understand, is employed in the main working in connection with the expert?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; she is used by Dr. Huebner in his work. She must be there regularly every day. She is entirely familiar with the work.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division, and pending that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five Members are present, not a quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House do now adjourn. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 51, answered "present" 6, not voting 238, as follows:

By Mr. CURRY: Petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen of Peoria, Ill., favoring legislation compelling the equipment of locomotives used on the road with electric headlights and safety appliances for boilers; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen of Peoria, Ill., favoring the passage of the bill (S. 4) to better the living conditions, etc., of seamen; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the California State Branch of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks, Sacramento, Cal., protesting against any change in the Reilly eight-hour law; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Petition of the Banana Buyers' Protective Association of New York City, protesting against a tariff on bananas; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen of Peoria, Ill., favoring improvement in the living conditions of our seamen; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen of Peoria, Ill., favoring the equipment of all locomotives used in road service with electric headlights; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen of Peoria, Ill., favoring restriction of immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the National Life Insurance Co., Chicago, Ill., protesting against including mutual life insurance companies in the income-tax bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Peoria, Ill., favoring the passage of legislation extending the authority of the Locomotive Boiler Inspection Division of the Interstate Commerce Commission to cover all parts of locomotives and tenders; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HELGESEN: Petitions of sundry business men of the State of North Dakota, favoring an amendment to the interstate-commerce law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LONERGAN: Petition of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks, protesting against any attempt to repeal or nullify the civil service; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MAPES: Petition of sundry post-office clerks, favoring provision for service promotions for clerks and engineers of the Post Office Department; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. MOON: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of Alfred J. Thomas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PROUTY: Petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Iowa, favoring certain changes in the interstate-commerce law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: Petitions of the H. Raphael Co., of Los Angeles, and the Chamber of Commerce of Watsonville, Cal., favoring 1-cent letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of the California State Branch, No. 30, United National Association of Post Office Clerks, Sacramento, Cal., protesting against the repeal or change in the Reilly eight-hour law; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 23, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6383) to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITION AND MEMORIAL.

Mr. OLIVER presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Homestead, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, for furnishing an elastic currency, and for a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented a memorial of sundry manufacturers of the United States, remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed cotton schedule in the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2812) waiving the age limit for the appointment as assistant paymaster in the United States Navy in the case of Chief Yeoman Meyer Cox, United States Navy; and

A bill (S. 2813) waiving the age limit for the appointment as assistant paymaster in the United States Navy in the case of John Edward Bibb, now in the accounting department of the Navy at Philadelphia; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD (for Mr. CULBERSON):
A bill (S. 2814) granting permission to Ella S. Gilliland and Clara E. Gilliland, joined by her husband, W. H. Gilliland, to institute suit against the United States of America in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas for the partition and adjustment of the rights and titles claimed by them in certain lands situated in said eastern district of Texas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PERKINS:
A bill (S. 2815) to provide for the completion of certain homestead entries for lands within the abandoned Mount Whitney Military Reservation; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BRISTOW:
A bill (S. 2816) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Abilene, Kans., two cannon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JACKSON:
A bill (S. 2817) granting a pension to Laura K. Simpson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRYAN:
A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

AMENDMENTS TO THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ADDRESS ON WORLD'S PEACE (S. DOC. NO. 139).

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document an address on the world's peace under American leadership, by Rev. T. M. C. Birmingham, of Beatrice, Nebr.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

NOTES ON TARIFF REVISION, 1913 (S. DOC. NO. 136).

Mr. SMOOT. On July 7 I requested that Notes on Tariff Revision, 1913, prepared by Thomas J. Doherty, Esq., be printed as a public document. This publication embraced comments on the meaning and effect of the changes in the phraseology of the proposed tariff law, H. R. 3321, as passed by the House of Representatives.

I have had Mr. Doherty bring those comments down, so as to include the amendments that have been made to the bill by the Finance Committee of the Senate, and I ask that it be printed as a public document. In other words, it is simply a second edition, with comments on the amendments made by the Senate Finance Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

SPEECH OF HON. HOKE SMITH (S. DOC. NO. 137).

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a speech delivered July 18, 1913, by Hon. HOKE SMITH before the Legislature of Georgia, reviewing legislation before the Senate during the past two years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. What is it, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it.

The SECRETARY. A speech delivered July 18, 1913, before the Legislature of Georgia, reviewing legislation before the Senate during the past two years, by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 6383. An act to amend section 19 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, has the morning business been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] if there is any Senator on the other side who desires to speak this morning on the tariff bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I think no Senator on this side is prepared to go on to-day. A Senator will speak to-morrow, possibly two Senators. I can see no reason now why the reading of the bill for amendments should not be proceeded with.

Mr. SMOOT. For committee amendments?

Mr. GALLINGER. For committee amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3321.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if it was his understanding—I think it was not definitely stated—that in the consideration of the bill the committee amendments should be first considered?

Mr. SIMMONS. That was my understanding, as it is the usual practice in connection with the consideration of tariff measures.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think no such understanding was had. Inquiry has been made of me, and that is the reason why I asked the Senator from North Carolina the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be read first for the consideration of the committee amendments.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me before he makes that request, I am not sure that I remember the practice correctly, but I think it has been found better to take all the amendments as we go along over the items; that is, not to consider merely the committee amendments first, because, if we go through this long bill and consider the committee amendments first and not those offered by individual Senators and then have to go back and throw the others in at any place, I think it would lead to delay.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to that course, if the Senator prefers it.

Mr. LODGE. I merely suggest it. I think it would save time to dispose of amendments as far as possible as we go along.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one word. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to this fact: I understand the committee has but few amendments to propose, and if that is the case it seems to me the best way would be to proceed to read the bill for action on the committee amendments, and in doing that all Senators would be prepared to offer their amendments—that is, to start with Schedule A, at the beginning, and as soon as the committee amendments have been considered, whether they are accepted or rejected, to take up amendments other Senators may desire to offer. I think that would be the best course.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator to suggest that we take up the bill for action on the committee amendments as to a schedule and when we have finished with that schedule then any other amendments that may be offered to it shall be considered before we proceed to the next schedule.

Mr. SMOOT. I know quite a number of Senators are not here to-day, and if we follow the course suggested we would pass over the chemical schedule and they would not be advised of it. Therefore, my suggestion is to take up the bill and read the bill and get all the committee amendments out of the way, beginning with Schedule A.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me there are a good many amendments to the whole bill. I do not know, but there must be a couple of hundred.

Mr. BRISTOW. Five hundred.

Mr. LODGE. How many committee amendments are there to the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Nearly 400.

Mr. SIMMONS. Between 400 and 500.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator referred to that as a few amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I, of course, meant in comparison with the other amendments already offered and which will be hereafter offered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that by unanimous consent we have agreed to dispense with the formal reading of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. That has been dispensed with.

Mr. GALLINGER. Twice.

Mr. SIMMONS. That has been done by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. Now, I ask that it be read for amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill is to be read now for amendment, I understand.

Mr. LODGE. The only question is whether we will deal with all amendments to each item as it is read or only with committee amendments. My suggestion was that if we dealt with all amendments I thought we would make better progress.

Mr. SIMMONS. The better practice, it seems to me, would be to read the bill first for action on the committee amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that that course be pursued.

Mr. LODGE. I do not care to press the point at all. I am perfectly content with any arrangement the Senator makes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill be read and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached, but no other amendments.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not want to press my own view especially, but it seems to me that the plan suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts would be very much more convenient. This is a very bulky bill and contains a very large number of items. As I remember, four years ago when we went through the last tariff bill we passed the paragraphs and the committee consented to a reconsideration of anything that was desired. The paragraphs as we went through the bill were tentatively adopted. It appears to me that by that course we would save time and I think avoid confusion. If it was a small bill and there were only three or four amendments or half a dozen, the case would be different, but where there are four or five hundred amendments to go through with the bill, and then go back and go over it again, it seems to me, would be almost interminable.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, regarding what the Senator from Kansas has said, I understand that the bill is open to amendment until its final passage. Am I right about that? I ask the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg the Senator's pardon, I did not hear him.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that no matter how we proceed through the bill, whether we take the committee amendments first or take all those offered, the bill is practically open to amendment until the final closure of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Undoubtedly. There is no purpose to foreclose any amendments. I have asked unanimous consent for that course because I thought it was probably the better practice. It is the practice that we have uniformly pursued with reference to the appropriation bills where there are a great many amendments, I think; and I am under the impression that that was the practice with reference to the Payne-Aldrich bill.

Mr. WARREN. I see no objection to it if the bill is open to amendment and no closure made until we finally finish the measure.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the Chair as having put the request for unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not yet been put.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand the Senator from North Carolina has asked for a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. And that is the matter now pending? Am I right?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I do not intend to object to the request proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, for I should like to see the committee amendments disposed of before we enter upon the general amendments, but suppose the committee has offered an amendment to a paragraph that I, for instance, desire to also amend, would the action of the Senate upon the committee's amendment preclude further action upon the amendment offered by myself, for instance, to the same paragraph?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the request of the Senator from North Carolina is for unanimous consent to consider at the present time the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance, with the distinct understanding that upon the bill as in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate all amendments may hereafter be proposed regardless of what the technical rules of the Senate may be with reference thereto. Is that correct?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. With that understanding——

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, an amendment by the committee will not preclude the Senator from offering another amendment to that paragraph unless it is the identical amendment that had been proposed by the committee and acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the inquiry of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to be substantially this: That, an amendment being proposed by the Committee on Finance, if the Senator from Iowa desires to move to amend in a different way, his proposition being an amendment to an amendment, whether the consideration by the Senate of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance would foreclose the Senator from Iowa from presenting his amendment to the amendment. The Chair does not want to be misunderstood, but the Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] will not preclude the Senator from Iowa from thereafter proposing to amend an amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say distinctly that I do not mean to preclude or desire to foreclose the offering of any amendment that would be in order by virtue of the fact that we act upon the committee amendments in the first instance.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, I have only just got the floor myself, and rose to a parliamentary inquiry, which is this: If there is an amendment proposed by the Finance Committee in the nature of a substitute for what the House has passed, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, adopt the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Finance by striking out and inserting, then the paragraph having been perfected as in Committee of the Whole in that respect, Is it still open to further amendment? I do not know that there is anything in the suggestion, but there lies vaguely in my mind the recollection that in some cases in the past where the Senate has adopted an amendment to strike out and insert, it has been held that it could not be further amended as in Committee of the Whole, but that an amendment to further modify could only be offered when the bill had been reported to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. It could not, of course, Mr. President, be amended under parliamentary law after that action had been taken, but we have frequently agreed in bills like this, notwithstanding the rule, that they should be open to amendment if any Senator subsequently chose to offer an amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is the very point that I desire to have clearly understood. I wanted to understand it clearly myself, and I suppose it is of equal interest to other Senators. If the unanimous consent requested by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] means that after an amendment proposed by the Finance Committee has been adopted as in Committee of the Whole, then any Senator may rise and offer an individual amendment utterly inconsistent with the substitute adopted by the Finance Committee, I have no objection to such a unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I did not hear the observation of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] a few moments ago. My attention was distracted while the Senator from Massachusetts was making his statement.

Mr. LODGE. What I said, Mr. President, was that if, for instance, as in line 6 of this bill, we should strike out "two" and insert "one and a half," that, having stricken from the bill "two" and inserted "one and a half," under parliamentary law that is not open to further amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Except in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Except in the Senate. I mean not as in Committee of the Whole. If, however, we choose to make a unanimous-consent agreement, as we frequently have done, that that should be still open to amendment if any Senator should choose to call it up and return to it, we can do so. We have often made that kind of a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. But that does not touch the Senator's point, as I understand it.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is precisely the point and, therefore, I asked the understanding of the Chair with regard to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement. It does, as I understand, include and provide for the very thing now suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I think I misunderstood the Senator from Iowa, as possibly the Chair also did. I understood the Senator to ask as to the amendment which I have used for an illustration. It being an amendment of the committee, it was open to any Senator to move to amend such an amendment of the committee. Of course, he could do that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is perfectly plain in parliamentary law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair ruled.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I asked was, Suppose the amendment of the committee is adopted, as in Committee of the Whole, and there being another amendment offered to the amendment.

whether we were then precluded from again offering an amendment to that amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Under parliamentary practice we undoubtedly would be. We can, however, make an agreement to go back, if we choose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Chair has stated that the proposed unanimous-consent agreement does include the privilege of going back and offering an amendment for adoption precisely as though it were offered at the time the amendment was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not wish this matter to get into any complication, and if it is likely to lead to that, I should prefer that we merely take up the bill and proceed with it, without any agreement, under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. If that is the case, then any amendment is in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the practice which obtained in the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich bill was an excellent one. It expedited the proceedings here quite as rapidly as a proper understanding of what was being done warranted. That practice was that whenever we reached a paragraph to which there was no objection; that is to say, to which there was no amendment to be made, it was adopted with the right to go back to it in the event that any Senator should thereafter desire to offer an amendment to it. When a committee amendment was reached, if it was one that presented a proposition that was sharply antagonized and also strongly supported, which was likely to lead to debate, and the Senate was not at that time prepared to proceed on that, the matter was passed over with the right to go back to it. In that way we got probably three-fourths of the bill out of the way, leaving only the controverted parts of it. I believe that that represented the parliamentary experience on that subject up to that time, and I see no reason why we should not pursue that course now.

Mr. LODGE. That was the proposition I made, and I think it is a sound one. In that case we do not need to have a unanimous-consent agreement that committee amendments shall first be considered.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The only feature of it that would involve consent would be the right to go back to a paragraph after it had been adopted.

Mr. LODGE. That is all.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no sort of objection to agreeing that amendments may at all times be in order after action on committee amendments, but I would not desire to be a party to a unanimous-consent agreement which, in its effect, would make in order an amendment which otherwise would be contrary to the rules of the Senate. Furthermore, I think possibly we might have considerable controversy as to what we had agreed to, and, in that view, I withdraw my request and ask that we proceed under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I was under the impression that general debate on the tariff bill would be concluded before we took up the bill for the consideration of amendments. I was also under the impression that the general debate would last throughout this week. I had expected to join in it myself, and I should like to ask now whether the general debate is concluded?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I inquired before the Senator came into the Chamber whether there was any Senator who desired to address himself to the bill, and I was advised that there was no Senator who was ready to go on to-day. In that condition, I proposed to take up the bill and proceed with its consideration. Whenever a Senator is ready to address himself to the general phases of the bill, of course we will temporarily lay it aside for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. It need not be laid aside at all. A Senator can address himself to the bill at any time.

Mr. SIMMONS. It need not be laid aside, but the consideration of amendments can be suspended.

Mr. THORNTON. Then I should like to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee whether he expects any amendment to be voted on to-day?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I can have attention for a moment, I simply desire to say to the Senator from Louisiana——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to make an inquiry as to whether the Senator from North Carolina has not moved to take up the bill for consideration and have it read for amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That motion has been adopted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I made the motion, and it was put by the Chair, as I understood, and adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be, however.

Mr. SMOOT. There was an agreement practically reached regarding it. I have no objection to taking up the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The vote on taking up the bill was put and adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to address myself to the Senator from Louisiana and to say that at any point in the consideration of the bill, whether it is upon an amendment or otherwise, any Senator will have the opportunity to address himself to the Senate at such time and length as may be convenient to him, so that there will be no difficulty in the Senator making a speech at any time during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. THORNTON. I am much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire for the information. I also made inquiry whether any amendment would be likely to be voted on to-day, because I have not yet even begun the preparation of my address, which I want to deliver by the end of this week or by Monday next, if possible. That is why I asked if any amendment would be likely to be voted on. If so, I will have to be here, and that would cut me out of any time to prepare myself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for order. We can not hear at all on this side of the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has even reached such a condition of disorder in the Senate that the reporters say they can not hear.

TELEGRAPH FRANKING PRIVILEGE—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask the recognition of the Chair and the indulgence of the Senate for a time in order that I may amplify or explain a statement made by myself in reply to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] in debate upon the floor of the Senate upon the 18th of this month.

First, I wish the Senator from Kansas to understand that I do not cherish toward him the slightest resentment for the statement he made upon the floor of the Senate, because what I had read to the Senate tended to anger him; it tended to cause him to suffer chagrin and immensely vexed him. I can not reasonably hold him to account for what he said in a moment of anger, because in my younger days, if I were called to account for what I had said and done in a moment of anger or vexation I doubt if I would have ever reached the Senate. But the statement the Senator made is to my mind one that I may not with justice to the Senate, with justice to the State I in part represent, and with justice to myself pass over in silence.

I respect the views of other men who, when unfounded insinuations are made against them, do not see fit to reply. That is probably a wise plan, but it occurs to me that a charge made upon the floor of the Senate of the United States, even though made in anger and in heat—I have no doubt much regretted by the Senator at this time—may not be passed over in silence. Certainly the great State of Arizona which I have the honor in part to represent will not sustain a Senator, will not sustain any public official, who uses any privilege or who uses any right granted to him by the laws of his country to line his pockets.

The State of Arizona preeminently among other States is a State which demands the very highest type of faithfulness and civic virtue from her officials. Whether I shall live up to that high standard completely will never be disclosed until the final chapter is written and I shall have left these seats forever.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas said, among other things, that I had conducted through the telegraph personal, political correspondence that ought to have been sent by mail. To that charge, with the lights before me, so far as I understand the rules and understand the precedents, I enter a most emphatic denial. That I have ever improperly used the mails, that I have ever improperly used the telegraph or aught else to conduct any private business, I most vehemently deny. I deny especially that at any time I have ever willfully done so.

Some days after I took my seat in this Chamber, over a year ago, the then Sergeant at Arms, now gone "to where beyond these voices there is peace," delivered to me a card, sometimes called a telegraph frank. He said, "You are entitled to use this." I regret that I must quote a man who is not now in existence, who has passed away; but I believe that the Senator sitting by my side, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], in regard to the Sloan case, told me that that case was public business, and that I had a right to send telegrams in respect thereto.

I took this so-called frank, and believed that I was the judge as to what was public business. If a Senator may not be trusted to judge as to what is public business and what is private business, he would be unfit to deal with matters which affect the destinies of 96,000,000 people. Every Senator must himself be the judge of what is public business. So I assert here that I have never willfully misused the franking privilege; and to prove my point and show to the Senate and the Nation the kind or class of business concerning which I have sent out telegrams, I ask unanimous consent that some of the telegrams may be read at the desk. I ask, first, that some copies of the telegrams sent out by me, as I have heretofore said, to 50 or 55 newspapers in my State be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the paper? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 3, 1913.

I am anxious to see advisory election held in Arizona at earliest practicable date in order that the people may have an opportunity to express their choice for Federal judge. The constitutional amendment allowing the people directly to choose their Senators will soon be ratified by the required number of States and surely the people have the same right to make an expression as to their choice for Federal judge, especially in view of the fact that the Federal judge holds his position, for all practical purposes, for life. Will you kindly, through the medium of your valuable paper, urge that proper petitions be prepared, signed, and filed calling for an advisory election to the end that the two Senators from Arizona may present to the President of the United States the name of the gentleman who will be the people's choice? Kindly publish this telegram and any cooperation and assistance you can give in bringing about the advisory election in order that the people may have an opportunity to vote in this matter will earnestly be appreciated by me. I wish advisory election might be held to ascertain the people's choice on all Federal appointments in Arizona.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator.

[Telegram.]

I am anxious to see an advisory election held in Arizona at the earliest practicable date in order that the people may have an opportunity to express their choice for Federal judge. The constitutional amendment allowing the people directly to choose their Senators will soon be ratified by the required number of States, and surely the people have the same right to make an expression as to their choice for Federal judge, especially in view of the fact that the Federal judge holds his position, for all practical purposes, for life. Inasmuch as a vast majority of the harsh, unreasonable, and unjust decisions against organized labor have been rendered by the Federal courts, and particularly in view of the fact that the power of the issuance of injunctions and other extraordinary writs has been greatly abused by some Federal judges, will you kindly urge that proper petitions be prepared, signed, and filed, calling for the advisory election of Federal judges in Arizona, to the end that the two Senators from Arizona may present to the President of the United States the name of the gentleman who will be the people's choice? Any cooperation or assistance you can give in bringing about the advisory election in order that the people may have an opportunity to vote in this matter will earnestly be appreciated by me. I wish an advisory election might be held to ascertain the people's choice on all Federal appointments in Arizona. I have requested the press of Arizona to assist in securing the advisory election.

HENRY F. ASHURST.

[Copy of telegram to editor of Arizona Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1913.

Mr. CHARLES H. AKERS,
The Gazette, Phoenix, Ariz.:

Your telegram received. Of course I do not know whether the appointment of a Federal judge will be withheld by the President until we can have the advisory election, for I do not pretend to speak for him, but I have already vehemently urged Secretary of State Bryan and Attorney General McReynolds to request the President to make no appointment of Federal judge until the people's choice has been ascertained by the advisory vote, and I will continue to urge that the appointment of a Federal judge for Arizona be withheld till the people have had an opportunity to express their choice.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it certainly should be obvious to all persons who indulge in the luxury of thinking, that if I were going to violate the franking privilege of the Senate I would not send a telegram to 45 or 50 newspapers and urge them to print it. When men do something improper they do not seek the full glare of publicity and urge the newspapers to publish their improper acts.

I say, therefore, as to telegrams of that kind I sent a large number. If they cost $100,000, and by virtue of such telegrams we could secure a law or a movement in the United States which would bring about a law or constitutional amendment whereby the President of the United States would appoint as Federal judges the men whom the people wished, $100,000 would be a meager expenditure and a small cost, indeed.

The above telegrams are samples only of a great number of telegrams of the same tenor, purport, and effect sent out by me. I do not wish the Senate to understand or believe that these are the only telegrams I have sent relating to the question of Federal judge. There are many more, but I shall not encumber the RECORD by inserting them all. I shall, however, ask unanimous consent that there may be read at the desk the following telegraphic dispatch from a leading daily newspaper published in the city of Tucson, Ariz., and my reply thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

TUCSON, ARIZ., April 5, 1913.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Citizen acknowledges receipt of your telegram favoring advisory vote for Federal judge and other Federal offices and congratulates you on your stand for people's rule. Story is being widely circulated here, however, that you are not sincere in your position and have already recommended and are still supporting appointment which will be made without waiting verdict of people. The Citizen is condemning these stories as injustice to you and advising public to wait until report is confirmed by an appointment before reaching any conclusion. A telegram from you that President Wilson will give people opportunity to circulate petitions in accordance with your suggestion and await outcome of advisory election before making appointment, will be complete answer to charge that you are not sincere in advocacy of same popular procedure for election of Federal judge by which you were elected Senator. People of Arizona would also like to know whether you have withdrawn all recommendations for Federal office. Will wait their verdict and recommend in accordance therewith; in other words, what is the use of an election if you have all appointments framed up as reported? Most respectfully,

TUCSON CITIZEN.

[Telegram.]

APRIL 7, 1913.

TUCSON CITIZEN,
Tucson, Ariz.:

Further answering your telegram of 5th instant and referring to portion in which you say that popular satisfaction would follow a telegram from me that President Wilson will await outcome of advisory election for Federal judge, I can not pretend to speak for the President, but should the President make any appointment I will deem it my duty to ask the Senate to withhold confirmation until after the people shall have expressed their choice at the advisory election, even though the President's appointment should be in accord with my previous recommendation.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I now ask that there may be read at the desk copy of a telegram transmitted by me to the Attorney General of the United States, in which I requested him to suggest to the President that no nomination for Federal judge in Arizona be made until the advisory election should have been held, or it should have been ascertained that it was not to be held, and my reply thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

APRIL 7, 1913.

Hon. J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General:

I have received dispatches from Arizona indicating that beyond doubt advisory election will be held for the purpose of ascertaining people's choice for Federal judge. Will you please see to it that no nomination is sent to Senate until people's verdict in Arizona may be recorded?

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I now ask the further indulgence of the Senate that I may include in the RECORD, and that there may be read at the desk, two more telegrams on this subject in their sequential order. These will be all the telegrams I shall ask to include in the RECORD on the subject of the Federal judge. I will then pass to other subjects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 5, 1913.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Have filed petitions with 888 names from Maricopa County in re Federal judge advisory election. Other petitions from this and other counties to hear from. Election will no doubt be held very soon. Please advise Secretary of State and Attorney General of these facts.

FRED. A. LARSON,
Secretary of Committee.

[Telegram.]

APRIL 6, 1913.

Mr. FRED. A. LARSON,
Secretary of Committee, Primary Nominations, Phoenix, Ariz.:

Your telegram received, and I note with pleasure that advisory election for Federal judge is going to be held. Before receiving your telegram I had already requested Attorney General and Secretary of State to urge the President to withhold sending any nomination for Arizona Federal judge to the Senate until people's verdict in Arizona could be obtained by advisory vote.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, no man can afford to be uncandid—I was going to say in the Senate of the United States, but I shall not qualify the statement, for no man can afford to be uncandid anywhere; the highest kind of candor should prevail in the Senate of the United States. I say now that the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, or any other person, may go to my office at any time of the day or night and take all of my correspondence and all of my telegrams and print them in the RECORD, and I shall not be ashamed of the contents of any of them. I assert here that every letter, every telegram, ever sent by me at public expense had solely in view the good of this country and was public business.

I shall not say that I feel humiliated because some unfriendly critics have misconstrued my acts. I do not feel humiliated, for I have done no wrong, and any charge that I have willfully done wrong is wholly and foully false.

The hardest words in the English language for me to pronounce are the words "I am wrong"; but when the time comes for me, as it sometimes does, to pronounce those words, I manfully do it. I did it in the conference of the Democrats. I urged a particular amendment upon a bill, as you remember, sir, and voted that way. The next day I learned I was in error, and so stated.

If I were convinced that these telegrams were private business, I should be the first to confess the error.

A Senator friend suggested that I ought not to offer to repay the amount of any telegrams that the honorable committee might find to be private business; but I do not agree with that view, as it is not in accord with my philosophy of life, and here and now say to the honorable committee, "Scrutinize my telegrams. Resolve every doubt against me; and if you find, in your judgment, that they are private business, after you shall have measured every other Senator by the same rule, I will cheerfully and manfully pay the amount involved."

Indeed, the money has not been paid out as yet. The telegraph company has presented its bill for the months of January, February, March, April, May, and June, 1913.

A Senator has sent telegrams in a cipher code. These telegrams have been held to be public business by the committee. Who can ascertain what is public business and what is not when a Senator sends his telegrams in cipher? If a Senator may send a telegram in a cipher code, the committee is forced to construe the rule or contract on the subject to mean that every Senator is his own judge of what relates to public business. The committee must adopt that construction, or how could they conclude a telegram in cipher was or was not public business?

I use no cipher. I use no secret code. I will, if the committee wishes, or if one Senator wishes, include in the RECORD all telegrams sent by me since I took my seat in the Senate; and, as Horace Greeley once said, some of them will make "mighty interesting reading."

I may some day leave the public service. I hope, however, for a long, useful career in the Senate; but when I leave public office it will not be because I have willfully misused the franking privilege, or the telegraph privilege, or any other privilege. When I leave the public service it will be because a majority of my constituents take the view that some other man will be more nearly in accord with their views than I.

In the State of Arizona, where I have held office since I attained the age of 18, no sane, no sensible person in any party questions my integrity. They question my judgment, I fear, sometimes rightfully; they question my ability, sometimes properly, I have no doubt; but no sane man in the State questions my integrity. I have been through a fiery furnace of partisan proscription, seven times heated.

At the age of 18 I was appointed a deputy sheriff, and served with such capacity as I possessed. Immediately upon reaching maturity I was appointed to the office of justice of the peace, in a town where at that time to preserve the peace and order required no small degree of resolution, determination, and coolness. The same year I was nominated and elected to the office of representative in the Territorial legislature. I was reelected two years later, and was chosen speaker of the house. Later I was elected to the Territorial senate, or council, and twice elected district attorney of my county, and in my contest for a seat in the United States Senate I was opposed both in the primary and the election by extremely able, bold, and resourceful men.

So I repeat that I have for a long time, in Arizona, been in that fierce light that beats upon officials.

I have no complaint to make against the newspapers of the country, no matter what their construction of these telegrams should be; indeed, I believe that one of the most potent factors for good in this country is the newspapers. We are all glad to see ourselves praised in them, and are all displeased when we see criticisms. But the man in public life must expect criticism. So far as the papers are concerned, no man in public life feels more grateful to the papers than I do, because, as I said here once before, the only injustice they have ever done me was to overpraise me.

I now come to another line of telegrams. It may occur to you, Mr. President, and to some Senators, that I have been very active with the telegraph. That is true. I doubt whether a single Senator on the floor here, or any Senator that ever served here, has been more active with the telegraph during the same period of time than have I. I have nothing to conceal in that respect. It so happens that people, not only from Arizona but from all parts of the United States, from Alaska and from Europe, have written and telegraphed me on important matters, which I thought it my duty to look after.

I well remember when a citizen of Arizona was in Algiers and cabled me to procure for him some assistance from the then Secretary of State. I procured that assistance and induced the Secretary of State to cable him. Substantial service came to the people of this country, for by reason of such activity we were able to import a certain kind of fruit or date that will flourish in Arizona.

There were several telegrams sent and received by myself, possibly a score of long telegrams sent on my part, in an attempt to save a human life. Am I to be criticized as having improperly used the franking privilege because I sent telegrams in an effort to save a human life? Whatever the judgment of the Senate may be on this point I shall respect it; but I shall believe it is in error when it says, if it does, that I am not to telegraph at public expense when human life is at stake.

There was a man, a citizen of the United States, immured in a dungeon in the City of Mexico. This man was unlawfully imprisoned. All civilized Governments must recognize that the man never should have been imprisoned. He was the author, John Kenneth Turner. I received dispatches from Richard Harding Davis; I received dispatches from Fred D. Warren, and from other eminent men, imploring me to intercede with the then Secretary of State and induce the Secretary to take some action which might cause the modus vivendi, or provisional government, in Mexico not to execute that man. I did so. I caused the Secretary of State to telegraph to Ambassador Wilson. I presume $25 or $30 of the public funds were expended in attempting to save that man's life. I am very proud of the part I played in that matter. I should surely do so again under like circumstances. All energies of our Government should be exercised in protecting our citizens who are improperly used or maltreated while in foreign countries. If I had my way about it, every foreign power that maltreats an American citizen would pay the damages.

I ask, therefore, that I may have read at the desk copy of a telegram received by me from Mr. Warren, also copy of a telegram sent by me in response thereto, with respect to this man John Kenneth Turner, who was held in duraince vile in Mexico. I ask that they may be read at the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegrams.]

GIRARD, February 21, 1913.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Newspaper dispatches report John Kenneth Turner prisoner in the hands of Diaz; likely to be shot, charged with being a Maderist. I received letter from Turner January 28, in which he says: "I had a long interview with Madero. He greeted me with 'You are a very famous man,' gave me a sweeping letter to civil and military authorities ordering them to give me any information asked for. I assure you it will not buy him anything when I come to write my articles." This letter ought to clear Turner of any partisanship with Madero. I am sending it to you and urge that you use every effort in your power to prevent his assassination by Diaz, which would be a crime against civilization and an outrage upon justice.

FRED D. WARREN.

To this telegram I replied as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1913.

FRED D. WARREN, Girard, Kans.:

Your wire respecting Mr. Turner received. I shall take the matter in hand with State Department and leave nothing undone to prevent the execution of Mr. Turner.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1913.

FRED D. WARREN, Girard, Kans.:

I have sent message to Secretary of State Knox as follows: "I have just received long telegram from Fred D. Warren, of Girard, Kans., stating that he has advices which cause him to believe that John Kenneth Turner, a citizen of the United States, probably will be executed in the City of Mexico by the provisional government under Huerta upon the alleged charge of being a partisan of Madero. There exists an abundance of documentary evidence which will show conclusively that Mr. Turner is in no sense an offensive partisan of Madero. From information which I have received from this and other sources I am of the opinion that the execution of Mr. Turner would be a mere butchery, which our Government should prevent at all hazards if possible. I earnestly implore you to see to it that this citizen of the United States is accorded such protection as our Government is able to give. I pray that his life may be spared." I will call at the department later in regard to this.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 24, 1913.

FRED D. WARREN, Girard, Kans.:

Huntington Wilson, Acting Secretary of State, advises that he has sent urgent instructions to embassy at Mexico asking that nothing be done toward harming Mr. Turner until this Government can fully inform itself regarding Mr. Turner. I have private information to the effect that Mr. Turner was released on 21st.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Without reading it, I ask that I may include in the RECORD an article from the New York Times of February 25, 1913, which sets out the activity of Mr. Richard Harding Davis and myself in procuring the release of Mr. Turner. I ask it that I may show to the country and the Senate that this paper recognized my activity was of some service in saving that man's life. Moreover, it contains a telegram from Mr. Richard Harding Davis to the then Secretary of State. I ask that it be inserted without reading.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 25, 1913.]

TURNER REPORTED FREE—RICHARD HARDING DAVIS WRITES STRONG APPEAL FOR BROTHER AUTHOR.

WASHINGTON, February 24.

Information was received at the State Department to-day from Arnold Shanklin, the United States consul general in Mexico City, that he had been assured by officers of the Huerta administration that John Kenneth Turner, the American who wrote Barbarous Mexico, had been released from the custody of the Government authorities. Mr. Turner was arrested in the City of Mexico during the fighting that followed the overturn of the Madero Government, and there were fears for his safety on the part of his friends in this country.

Consul General Shanklin's telegram was in response to instructions from Secretary Knox to Ambassador Wilson, in which Mr. Knox said that Mr. Turner was an American citizen whose personal safety must be respected, and that unless he had committed an offense against the laws of Mexico any harm done to him would be regarded by the United States as an act calling for decisive action by this Government. It was pointed out by Mr. Knox that the presence of Mr. Turner in the citadel while an insurrectionary force was striving to overturn the legally constituted Government of the Republic, however indiscreet or offensive it might have been, was not an act that under the law of nations would justify the punishment of the American writer.

The action taken by Mr. Knox was at the instance mainly of Senator HENRY F. ASHURST, of Arizona. Senator ASHURST wrote to the Secretary of State last Saturday in Turner's behalf. To-day Mr. Knox received the following appeal from Richard Harding Davis, of New York:

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y., February 23, 1913.

To Hon. PHILANDER KNOX,
State Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Some years ago, to please a Mexican President, our Government placed in jail for one year the New York artist, Fornaro. His offense was that he told the truth about Mexico. This sacrifice to Diaz was an act of injustice not only to Fornaro but to every newspaper correspondent whose work takes him to Mexico City. At present in that city in jail is John Kenneth Turner, an American newspaper correspondent. His crime is that in a book called Barbarous Mexico he, like Fornaro, also wrote the truth about that unclean and uncivilized country. It is extremely likely that at any hour he may be murdered. A word from you spoken to-night might save him. In a week you will be out of office, but should you to-night not speak that word Turner may be dead.

Should he die newspaper men will not forget him or you. I am

Yours, etc.,

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS.

Consul General Shanklin said in his message telling of Mr. Turner's release that he had been assured by the Huerta Government that no harm had been intended to Mr. Turner.

While Mr. Shanklin said that he was informed that Mr. Turner had received his liberty, the State Department was not notified that the consul general was certain that the writer had actually been set free.

It is apparent that the officials are a little doubtful that the assurance given to Mr. Shanklin has been made good.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, Mr. President, I ask the Senate, Are these telegrams I have caused to be read private business?

Mr. OWEN. They are not.

Mr. ASHURST. They are not. Certainly not. If they are not private business they are public business. They can not be quasi public or quasi private. They are either private business or public business. I firmly believe them to be public business. These are not all the telegrams; there are hundreds, possibly. I repeat, if the honorable committee says that these telegrams and others of like import are private business I shall experience no humiliation in paying from my pocket the amount of the tolls, although, as I said on the floor of the Senate the other morning, I have no private business. I have no income whatever except my salary as a Senator. When I was elected to the Senate I had some few law cases pending before the courts in Arizona, the fees for which I had already been paid. After the close of the Sixty-second Congress I went home and even neglected the campaign that I might try those cases for which I had been paid before I became a Senator. I announced through the public press when elected to this body that I did not believe, so far as I was concerned, it would be proper for me to practice law while I was in the Senate; although I might have supplemented my salary as Senator with a large amount of money as fees in law cases, I did not choose to do so.

Moreover, Mr. President, when I reached the Senate I incurred some little raillery upon myself. I communicated with other Senators upon personal matters, and sent them my card in stamped envelopes, whereas such matters are transmitted without postage; but I used postage stamps in order to be clearly within the rule.

I desire further to say that I procured and paid for a very large number of stamped envelopes, and that upon all mail matters that seemed to be of a private nature I have used the stamped envelope instead of the franked envelope. I do not like to refer to such matters, for it appears indelicate, and in doing so I may seem to attribute to myself virtues above other Senators, but I must assert that no Senator here now or who ever served in this Chamber could have been or has been more scrupulously careful not to make an error than have I.

I pass to another subject. Arizona was a new State when I came here. It is far away from the National Capital. The advent of a new State always brings a Johnstown flood of public business upon the officials from such State. When I came here from a new State I was overwhelmed with letters and telegrams of a personal and private and public nature with respect to matters before all the departments. I was obliged to use, and I did use, the method of communicating by telegraph very freely upon all matters I believed to be public business.

When the messenger started to the National Capital with the electoral vote of the State of Arizona last February he had not been properly advised as to the date he should reach the Capitol, and about the last legal day prescribed for his arrival the press of the country took up the question of the messenger's nonarrival, explained that the last hour was about to expire and that the messenger in the event he willfully loitered would be guilty of a violation of the law, and the vote of that sovereign State would not be counted in the canvass of the electoral vote. Thereupon I caused a number of telegrams to be sent to all parts of the United States where I thought the messenger might be, and to my mind it was public business of the very highest order and privilege.

Mr. President, on a recent occasion I was obliged to use the telegraph because there was a postmaster in a town in Arizona who either willfully or carelessly caused my mail to be opened. I wired to the gentleman with whom I was communicating that until that postmaster was removed I would communicate no longer with him by the mail, and the Postmaster General has asked for that postmaster's resignation.

It is for the Senate and the country now to say whether I have misused any privilege. I fear that my friend from Kansas in making this charge that I had misused a privilege looked to the bulk of the telegrams, looked to their verbosity, looked possibly to their circumlocution in some cases, but did not look closely to the question as to whether they were public or private business. I think he drew his conclusion because of the enormous volume of the telegrams rather than because of their character. That my telegrams, and speeches also for that matter, are not models of conciseness I admit, but that these telegrams are private business I deny, and I shall commend to the Senator from Kansas the following couplet:

Of all the things by which mankind is curst
Our violent tempers are certainly the worst.

[Laughter.]

We have in the State of Arizona two irrigation projects—the great Roosevelt project, which cost $10,000,000, and the Yuma, or Laguna, project, which has cost $5,000,000. A volume of public business grew out of that, especially when the Secretary of the Interior called for a conference of delegates. Some telegrams were sent by me on that subject.

In addition to that, Mr. President, there are more office seekers in Arizona per capita than in any other State in the Union, and they have the right to apply for office. I have regarded all applications for public office as public business and not private business. If telegrams upon such subjects may not be sent as official business, then letters upon such subjects may not be sent as official business. I have treated all communications as to confirmations, nominations, and probable nominations as public business. Certainly such business is not private. Senators will bear in mind that the telegrams referred to are the accumulations of the months of January, February, March, April, May, and June, 1913. I have not examined the telegrams that are on file in the office of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and have not had time to go through the enormously voluminous files of my office to obtain copies of all thereof, and it is, of course, possible that one or two, or even three, purely private messages might have, through some accident or inadvertence, crept into the account, but with the scrupulous care I have used in such matters I shall be inclined to doubt it.

I felt it was my duty to make this statement. The Senate and the country have a right to know the facts and have a right to know what kind of business that was dispatched.

Believing profoundly that I have violated no propriety, no privilege, I shall go forward serenely in the performance of my public duty. In conclusion I may be pardoned if I say that when the time comes for me to retire from the Senate, as come it will some day, I believe my friends will be able to point to a long line of useful things done by me in behalf of the people of my State and in behalf of the people of this Nation. And they will be able, I confidently believe, proudly to point to the fact that I never willfully or deliberately violated a rule or a privilege, and have always striven to promote the physical and moral good of the American people and to defend the cause of virtue and good citizenship, and have resolutely contested for honesty in government and for equal opportunity before the law.

I thank the Senate for its attention.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, just one word. I shall not detain the Senate at all. I simply want to correct what I think might create a misunderstanding throughout the country with reference to the use of the word "frank." I think the word "frank" used in connection with sending telegrams may create the belief that Members are receiving and using complimentary franks as matters of personal favor from the telegraph company. I am quite sure that such is not the case; at any rate it is not the general rule. As I understand these little cards they represent nothing more nor less than evidences of a contract between the Government and the telegraph company that the messages sent by Members shall be paid for, if it is public business, by the Government at the Government rates, and it is a pure business transaction in behalf of the Government, for which the Government pays, and is not at all in the nature of a complimentary frank received by Members.

It would be unjust and unfair to Members, in view of the criticism which generally prevails against their accepting courtesies of that kind from public-service corporations, to have the impression go out that Members are receiving complimentary franks from the telegraph company. I simply desire to correct such a misapprehension.

Mr. JAMES. Not only is not the frank used by a Member of Congress but it is a violation of the Federal statute to use a frank.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It would be a violation of the statute as well.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senate agreed unanimously to take up, for the purpose of considering the Finance Committee amendments and possibly other amendments, what is known as the tariff bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I feel that I should state, in view of what the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has said, that, so far as I am concerned, I shall apply the same rule to any conduct of his that I would apply to every other Senator. I should not apply a different rule to him from what I would apply to any other Senator in passing upon any act of the Senator's. If the Senator from Arizona thinks that the telegrams which he has read into the RECORD are public business and should be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States, his conception of the public business is very different indeed from mine.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SIMMONS. However, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] for a moment.

Mr. OWEN. I merely want to put in the RECORD the statement that the public business of this country is so widely interpreted that Senators upon this floor constantly rise and have printed at public expense documents upon every kind of topic, from the control of insect life affecting vegetation up to the question of international peace. I think the criticism upon the Senator from Arizona has been harsh, and I think he has triumphantly vindicated himself in making his answer. I want that to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to correct one error that seems to be in the minds of Senators. This contract does not say "public business"; it says "official business." So the distinction between private and public business is not the one to be made; it is the distinction between official and unofficial business, whether the unofficial business be public or private. In other words, it is the business transacted by a Senator in pursuance of his duties as a Senator. I merely want that understanding to be in the minds of all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRISTOW. In regard to the understanding as to proceeding with the bill, I want to inquire if it is the intention of the chairman of the committee to follow the practice that was followed four years ago, to have it understood that the adoption of a paragraph is tentative, and that a Senator may return and offer an amendment to a paragraph and he will not object?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have understood that to be the practice.

Mr. BRISTOW. That was the practice; and I simply wanted a clear understanding of the matter.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 2, line 5, before the word "cents," to strike out "four" and to insert "seven," so as to read:

Gallic acid, 7 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 6, before the word "cents," to strike out "two" and insert "one and one-half," so as to read:

Oxalic acid, 1½ cents per pound.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will not agree to that amendment. I want to call the attention of the Senate merely in a few words to the reason why oxalic acid has been made in this country.

The first factory was erected in 1903. Until that time every pound of oxalic acid that was used in this country came from Germany and England, and the consumer in this country paid whatever price the foreign syndicate demanded. Mr. Emery, a gentleman living in Pennsylvania, thought, from the price that the syndicate were asking at that time, that oxalic acid could be made in this country, and started to build a factory. No change in the price of oxalic acid occurred until the first product from an American factory was placed upon the market. Immediately after it was placed upon the market the price was reduced, and reduced not once but reduced two or three times, until the factory was compelled to close. As soon as the factory closed the syndicate immediately again advanced the price. After the owners of the factory had learned that the price had been increased to the old original price which had been asked, they again started the mill and again manufactured oxalic acid. Immediately the foreign manufacturers again reduced the price, and thus forced the closing of the mill.

When we passed the tariff bill of 1909 we gave them a rate of duty of 2 cents, which has kept the mill in operation. I believe, Mr. President, that if this rate of 2 cents is reduced to even 1½ cents, with that one-half cent reduction and the reduction that will be made by the foreign syndicate, it will result in closing the only two mills that we have in the United States.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I should be glad to have the Senator from Utah inform me for what this acid is used?

Mr. SMOOT. It is used for dyeing purposes, as a mordant. Let us look at the importation of this article and at what is produced in this country. The importations for the year 1912 were 7,077,462 pounds. The equivalent ad valorem rate of the 2 cents was 40.28 per cent. The ad valorem rate as provided by the House is 30.21 per cent.

Mr. President, I feel that the product of that one industry in this country has demonstrated as much as any other article imported into the United States the necessity for just sufficient protection to keep it running as against the manufacturers in England and in Germany, who control this article by a syndicate; and I hope and trust that the figures I have quoted and the facts I have stated will induce the Senate of the United States not to accept the amendment, and save that industry to this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, the reasons why the committee changed the House rate, making a slight reduction, from 2 cents a pound to 1½ cents a pound, were these: By this bill leather has been placed upon the free list as well as manufactures of leather. Oxalic acid is used in tanning; it is also largely used in the textile industries and in laundries. The committee felt that the slight reduction from 2 cents a pound to 1½ cents a pound would be met by the industries established here, and that it was due to the industries which find their products placed upon the free list that wherever we could, we should make a reduction of duties upon the articles which they used. Those are the reasons which influenced the committee in recommending this slight reduction.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the statement which the Senator from Maine has made. What he says is absolutely true; but I want to call his attention to the fact that every time oxalic acid has been entirely furnished by foreigners the consumer has had to pay more for it. If this rate of 1½ cents per pound should be the means of closing the two factories in this country, the object of the Senator would be lost, and the consumer in this country will have to pay more for his oxalic acid as soon as those factories are closed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I can not believe, and the committee could not believe, that so slight a reduction as this will have the serious consequence upon this industry which the Senator from Utah predicts.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, the reduction is equivalent to 10 per cent and over ad valorem, which means a reduction of 25 per cent from the present rate. There is not an oxalic manufacturer in this country who has made 10 per cent per annum on his production.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire if this vote is on an amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the question is upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to change the rate of duty on oxalic acid from 2 cents to 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. ROBINSON. Did not the Senator from Utah offer an amendment to that amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He did not. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a pair upon this question and all other questions applying to to-day with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. MCCUMBER's name was called). I wish to announce that the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce for the day that my colleague, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], is absent on business, and that he has a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I inquire whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator has not voted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who has not voted. If the Senator from New York were present, I should vote "yea." As it is, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). When my name was called I voted. I did not at the time observe the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I take this occasion to say, however, that I do not have a general pair with the Senator from Michigan, but we have had a sort of gentlemen's agreement that whenever one of us was out of town, and sent the other word to that effect, the one remaining would not vote. I did not know that the Senator from Michigan was out of town or I would have recognized the pair. I now transfer the pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, I withdraw my vote, as I have a pair with him.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with that Senator, but I transfer it to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 26, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the amendment proposed in line 5 was adopted while I was engaged. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee why the committee made such an increase over the House rate. The House rate was 4 cents, and the committee has raised it to 7 cents. I should like to know why that was done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington, that gallic acid is made from tannic acid; and in view of the rate of duty which was fixed upon tannic acid and the loss in conversion, the committee thought the duty on gallic acid should be raised as it has been raised and reported here.

There are three acids that are related to each other. Gallic acid is made from tannic acid; and another acid in the same list, pyrogallic acid, is made from gallic acid. To cover the cost of conversion and the loss in conversion this increased duty was recommended by the committee.

Mr. JONES. Is that increase particularly for revenue or a compensatory rate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. For revenue, and also to equalize the conditions and equalize the cost of conversion.

Mr. JONES. What are the imports of that acid now? Can the Senator tell me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Twenty-eight thousand nine hundred and seventeen pounds, as given in the handbook.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator state what the consumption is?

Mr. SMOOT. The present equivalent ad valorem rate is 23.84 per cent; and the 7-cent rate that is provided for in this bill is 1 cent lower than the rate in the present law. It amounts to 22.58 per cent equivalent ad valorem.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 2, line 6, after the words "pyrogallic acid," to strike out "10" and insert "15."

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill why this large increase of 50 per cent is made?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Pyrogallic acid is made from gallic acid, and we have fixed a duty on gallic acid of 7 cents a pound. The loss in conversion is about 60 per cent, we are told, and to cover the loss in conversion and to equalize the rates we fixed this duty upon pyrogallic acid.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand, then, this is a sort of compensatory duty, is it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Not a compensatory duty; but when one product is made from another which bears a duty that fact has been taken into consideration by the committee, and the loss in conversion has also been taken into consideration, so as to make the duties relatively the same, if possible.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, with reference to the duty of 15 cents per pound on pyrogallic acid, that the equivalent ad valorem is 19 per cent. Under the present law it was not mentioned; it fell in the basket clause and carried a rate of duty of 25 per cent. The duty of 15 cents per pound provided in the present bill is a reduction of only 6 per cent.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Utah what is made of pyrogallic acid? Is that again reduced to some other acid?

Mr. SMOOT. It is used again in a number of items. It is used also in compounds of other chemicals.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator the names of the other acids and the rates of duty imposed upon them?

Mr. SMOOT. Some of them fall in the basket clause and carry a rate of only 15 per cent under the pending bill. I think that is one of the inconsistencies of the bill. When we reach those particular items I shall offer an amendment to cover the very point the Senator speaks of now.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of making any defense of this particular bill, but I am somewhat curious to know why it is necessary to have an increase of 50 per cent. I ask for a vote on this particular item.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not understand that the bill provides for an increase of the duty contained in the present law. It is a decrease.

Mr. LODGE. It is a decrease from the present law.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that; but it is an increase over the rate in the House bill.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; that is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That is true; and it is for the reason I stated—that we ought to make the increase to cover the loss in conversion.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce that on questions arising to-day I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. I make that announcement for the day and upon all questions arising during the day. On this question I vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. DU PONT's name was called) I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is ill and absent from the city. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will let that announcement also stand for the day.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I inquire if the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIVELY in the chair). He has not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. REED. I inquire if the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has.

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator is in the Chamber, so it is not necessary to look it up. I withhold my vote because of the absence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. ROBINSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that I am paired on this vote. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 16, as follows:
